Campus police trained in lethal force

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Upon completing a two year law enforcement compliance survey throughout the UW-System a year ago, member universities concluded that they needed to upgrade specially recruited and trained campus security officers to police officers. July 1, 1985, the UW-System implemented the new campus police program which will be employed on a trial basis for one year.

According to the director of Protective Services at UW-Stout, Garold Buckley, the upgrading was done through normal channels just as would be done in the system to upgrade any other position. The significant factor here is that the upgrading of security officers to police officers results in their having the authority to carry guns in order to do their duty.

Currently, there are six full-time campus police officers at Stout who are former policemen. Any plans on possible expansion of the program will depend on the results of the six-month review of the program planned for January 1, 1986.

There has been a diverse range of student responses to the upgrading of campus security officers to police officers. Buckley said he had completed an informal survey of Stout students several years ago that showed a clear majority of students already thought the officers carried guns. This explains the response of such students as sophomore John Davenport who simply said, "It doesn't bother me."

Others, such as junior Laurie Hable, said, "I think it's good for protective reasons. They'll (students) take it more seriously."

Yet, there are those such as senior Tom Skaife who find the change incomprehensible: "I think it's kind of crazy. I didn't know they had a need to carry guns. I think they have the city police if they need something like that."

Assistant chancellor of Administrative Services, Dr. Wesley Sommers, explained that the change was made only after many years of studying the problem and the safest ways of implementing the new program. Dr. Sommers said the law enforcement compliance survey showed, "What we needed was more than security officers."

The specific concern brought out by the survey according to Sommers was that "The officers needed protection and that they should always be armed when handling money and during night shifts."

Sommers and Buckley concurred on the fact that more than a year was spent outlining the changes to be made. "We put in all the safeguards we could think of," Sommers said.

Summer trip to New York state ends in tragedy for Stout student

Rich Langberg
News Editor

A summer trip to see a friend turned into tragedy when UW-Stout student Kristin O'Connell was killed by an unknown assailant while walking through the countryside in rural upstate New York. O'Connell, age 20, was a junior majoring in Hotel and Restaurant Management.

O'Connell went to the small town of Ovid, N.Y. to see James Vermeersch Jr., a man she had met during her spring break in Florida. They had been corresponding since that time, and she wanted to visit him before school started.

According to Barbara Baer, O'Connell's aunt and godmother, she was at a party at Vermeersch's mobile home and left to take a walk, possibly to cool off. She never returned. Her nude body was found by Army Reserve personnel participating in a hand-to-hand search through a cornfield. She had bled to death due to having her throat slashed. Her body hadn't been molested, and local police believe she died fighting off a sexual attack.

Major Richard Toniz of the New York State Highway Patrol isn't ruling out any possibilities. The road along which O'Connell was walking is a well-known rural shortcut and probably would have had quite a bit of traffic at that time. Toniz said he can't remember a similar crime in 30 years of working in the area.

O'Connell worked part-time at a stable in her hometown of Burnsville, Minn. because she loved horses and had one of her own. Baer said she was looking forward to returning to school this fall.

"She was the nicest person you'd ever want to meet," said Baer. "She was a neat individual, concerned about other people and always willing to help someone who needed it. We're going to miss her a lot."

When O'Connell was nine years old, her grandmother died. She wrote a poem expressing her feelings at the time. A portion of that poem can provide some insight into the friendly young women who met with such a tragic death.

"When someone's dying, they get all upset. Wouldn't you rather face the fact that you're dying and live what life you have left in joy instead of sorrow, frustration and pain?"

O'Connell was buried Wednesday, August 21, near her grandmother's grave in a small cemetery in LeSeur, Minn. On the death of her Uncle Mike, O'Connell wrote a poem entitled A Death.

...The loss is great
Almost too great to bear
And running constantly through the back of your mind
As the everpresent weight bearing down and almost crushing your heart...
Suddenly the weight that bore down your sorrowful heart quickly lifted
And from your eyes flow, the long-awaited tears.

Baer said O'Connell knew no fear, was open and friendly. The local authorities feel she was just in the wrong place at the wrong time. In the poem about her grandmother's death, O'Connell wrote verses that are now lending support to her family and friends.

"Death is a subject pushed aside, never talked about. It's a part of life. It happens to us sooner or later. No one knows when it's going to creep up and grab you except God. Some people die fast, others die young. Some old. It all depends on when God wants us with Him."

Deepening scandal in West Germany

Bonn, West Germany- In the latest development that has shook West Germany, a secretary in the office of President Richard Von Weizsaecker has been arrested on suspicion of being a spy.

The unidentified secretary was the fifth member of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government to be arrested. The scandal began August 8 with the arrest of counterespionage chief Hans Joachim Tiedge.

South African Reverend arrested

Cape Town, South Africa- One of apartheid's strongest foes was jailed Tuesday on the eve of a march he was to lead to Pollsmoor prison where Nelson Mandela is serving a life term. The arrest of Rev. Allan Boesak drew a protest and condemnation from the State Department in Washington.

Rev. Boesak is the President of the World Allaince of Reformed Churches which has 70 million members worldwide. He was arrested at a roadblock near the University of the Western Cape where he serves as chaplain.

$4.2 billion gun system scrapped

Washington- Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger admitted Tuesday that the Army's $4.2 billion "Sgt. York" anti-aircraft gun program wasn't worth the cost. He said he has decided to cancell the contract after the Pentagon had spent $1.8 billion on the system already.

Weinberger said the gun system displayed "limited range and reliability" during recent tests. Pentagon sources said the system didn't fire accurately and sometimes not at all.

Mercy killer denied release

Tallahassee,Fla- 76-year-old Rosewell Gilbert lost his last bid for freedom Monday when two members of Florida's cabinet rejected Gov. Bob Graham's reccommendation that he be released from from prison.

Calls and letters had poured into Graham's office asking that he release Gilbert, who was convicted of second-degree murder in the shooting death of his 73-year-old wife who suffered form Alzheimer's disease.

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

The leading economic power in the world, the United States, is seeing its once perceived insurmountable lead being rapidly eroded by a persistent Japan.

Many analysts have attributed this to a variety of tangible and intangible factors, yet few have noted the education variable as a cause for a nation's success or failure in an economic sense. But U.S. Secretary of Education Terrel Bell, as noted in the September 2, 1985 issue of U.S. News & World Report, discussed many of the differences between educational systems which he observed during a visit to Japan this past summer.

Bell believes that in mathematics, science and overall literacy, the Japanese educational system is far superior to our own. A major factor contributing to his assessment is drawn from the fact that Japanese schoolchildren attend classes 240 days out of the year, as compared to 180 for their American counterparts. And Japanese school days are seven hours long, while they are only six hours in this country.

Japanese education attains the 240 day attendance mark easily because a half-day on Saturday is included in each week of school.

And while Japanese children are at school, they are exposed to a rigorous and fast paced nationally standardized curriculum which requires that they master a second language.

The second language that is chosen, in the vast majority of cases, is English.

Bell stated that in Japan "Teachers don_____ t adjust instruction to fit each student. By golly, the student complies or else. The result is that students grow up learning to perform at the outer limit of their ability, which washes over into the workplace after they graduate."

Bell also believes that "state legislatures should follow the Japanese lead" and boost the salaries of teachers to attract the best and the brightest to that profession. College graduates in Japan compete for teaching positions because teachers are paid 30 percent more than career civil servants.

In the same issue of U.S. News & World Report Harvard sociologist Ezra Vogel echoed Bell's remarks and asserts that "The Japanese come out of school very well versed in language and math. They are well disciplined and used to working hard."

These exceptional fundamental skills are attributed to the fact that they enter a fiercely competitive educational atmosphere at age six and remain till the age of 14 when they are given the national educational examination after finishing high school.

Automation and improved employee relations may not improve this country's economic strength beyond a level which may have, unknowingly, already been reached. It may necessitate a grass-roots educational initiative akin to the one which ushered in the race to the moon.

University smoking policy enacted

Barbara Caron
News Reporter

On Aprnated areas only. The University of Wisconsin Stout's nonsmoking policy is designed to comply with Act 211. UW-Stout is concerned for the rights and interests of all its employees, students, and campus visitors, whether they are smokers or nonsmokers.

Stout's nonsmoking policy does not totally prohibit smoking on University premises, but it does restrict it to specific areas. The policy seeks a reasonable accommodation between smokers and nonsmokers. However, where the rights and interests of smokers and nonsmokers conflict, the interests of nonsmokers will prevail.

Smoking is prohibited in any University building space unless signs are posted which say smoking is permitted in a particular room or area. The only exception to this policy is private offices, and areas occupied exclusively for smokers.

Smoking is prohibited in areas such as classrooms, lecture halls, cashier waiting lines, hallways, restrooms, stairwells, lobbies, and food service lines. In addition to these areas, smoking is also prohibited where combustible fumes can collect, such as in garage and storage areas, areas where chemicals are used, and all other areas where an occupational safety or health hazard might exist if smoking materials were used.

"No smoking signs are not required to prohibit smoking.

—Dean Sankey, Director of Safety"

The UW-Stout's nonsmoking policy specifically states that "To implement this policy, action on designation of smoking and nonsmoking areas within buildings shall be the responsibility of the Building Supervisor in connection with area supervisors. Smoker and nonsmoker preferences should be accommodated as possible."

The policy also states that "rooms or areas within rooms or buildings may be designated as smoking areas. However, these areas must be identified by conspicuously posted signs. Signs must be posted at or near the entrance of rooms designed for smoking or signs must identify the area within a room where smoking is permitted. Absence of such signs means smoking is prohibited.

According to Dean Sankey, Director of Safety for UW-Stout "No smoking signs are not required to prohibit smoking."

"The purpose of this policy," said Sankey, "is not to prohibit smoking, but restrict it to certain areas. Because it (smoking) is a fairly new social concern, individuals by habit will smoke in non-designated areas. Before this policy is to work, everyone must help by encouraging violators to comply with the policy itself."

According to UW-Stout's nonsmoking policy a committee on nonsmoking will deal with questions, concerns, and interpretations on the UW-Stout nonsmoking policy. It will use the policy's suggested implementation procedures as guidelines.

The nonsmoking committee will be made up of fourteen members, of whom thirteen will be elected or appointed to serve three-year terms, with terms staggered at one-year intervals. The fourteenth member will be ex-officio; Director of Safety. The thirteen voting members will serve as representatives from the following areas:

One member from each academic school and learning resource.

- Administrative Services.
- Student Services.
- Auxiliary Services.
- Student Representative.
- Two Classified Representatives.
- Unclassified Representative.
- Union Representative.
- Ex-officio; Director of Safety.

Sankey stressed that "with the Clean Indoor Act 211 and the new UW-Stout Nonsmoking policy that people must remember and be aware that you can only smoke in the designated areas."

Anyone violating the new policy can be issued a $31.50 fine. This applies to all faculty, students, and visitors at UW-Stout.

Positions available on senate and executive board

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The Stout Student Association (SSA) begins the new term in search of two individuals to fill vacancies in the executive board and the student senate.

The executive board vacancy was created last June when SSA President Joann Prange requested and received the resignation of the vice president for Legislative Affairs (VPLA), sophomore Jeff Campeau.

Campeau had been elected president of JTC last spring and said in a recent interview that he was aware at that time that by being hall president and VPLA, he was violating the SSA constitution.

An apparent misunderstanding occurred between Prange and Campeau last spring when she informed him he was indeed violating the constitution by holding both positions. "I told him if he'd give up his position title (JTC president) he could train for the exec board," Prange said.

All Campeau was willing to say was that since the end of last May, "Things changed over the summer," and as a result he had to resign.

According to Prange, job responsibilities of the VPLA position include "keeping students up-to-date on legislative issues and events of concern to them," according to Prange. Office hours are required as is meeting attendance. The major benefits that come with the job include the legislative experience received, the personal contacts made and that the job pays full tuition.

To fill the job of VPLA you must have been enrolled at UW-Stout for at least one semester. A VPLA must possess good written and verbal communication skills plus the awareness and knowledge of current issues.

Prange is equally concerned about filling the position of Minority Affairs senator. The minority affairs senator must have communicative skills equalling those of the VPLA. Prange cautioned that, "We can't help minorities unless we know what they need."

The Minority Affairs senator must be aware of the programming going on on-campus in order to point out any problems affecting minorities and work to alleviate these problems.

The formal responsibility of the minority affairs senator is attending the United Council meetings which occur once each month on a different UW campus each time. Prange emphasized that at the United Council meetings members will have the valuable experience of sharing ideas with minority senators throughout the UW-System.

Prange looks forward to selecting an outstanding Minority Affairs senator. "We have had excellent minority people in this position and we want to continue this tradition."

To qualify as an applicant for Minority Affairs senator you must be either female, an ethnic minority, handicapped, gay or lesbian, non-traditional or a veteran.

The tentative due date for applications is Tuesday, September 3.

Whether you aspire to be vice president for Legislative Affairs or Minority Affairs senator, the SSA awaits your application.

Desperate/Seeking tenant's rights

A security deposit is only supposed to be used to "protect" a landlord from the occasional lousy tenant who does damage to the landlords' property — either through intentional malicious vandalism, or negligence caused by blitzed-out, rowdy partying.

Feature

I am a responsible individual that enjoys living in a well-kept environment. I would like to believe that the majority of Stout students feel the same. We are not out to destroy, but to better our living condition. In most cases, when checking out of a rental unit, the conditions are better than when I moved in.

Tell me why the fact remains my security deposit is tampered with and used on frivolous damages I've never heard of!

How can I secure my security deposit?
Signed,
Every Year Security Deposit Blues

Dear Security Deposit Blues,
Moving In:

1. When you give the landlord your deposit, be sure to get a receipt and make sure the receipt says it's for a security deposit. If you've got a written lease, see to it that the lease states that amount you paid on your deposit. If it's not on there, get the landlord to acknowledge it in writing, ON THE LEASE!

2. Within seven days of when you move in, inspect the apartment. Note, if there are any damages at this time,try to get the landlord to inspect with you. If he or she can't, or won't, get a friend. If there are any damages write down what they are. After you've done this, make two copies of your findings and send one of them by registered mail to your landlord and keep the other for your records.

3. Whenever you begin to have problems with your place, put your complaints in writing as they occur. Once again, two copies: one for you and one for the landlord.
Moving Out:

A few weeks before you move out, call your landlord and tell him you are planning to leave. Arrange for him to come and inspect the place to see that there aren't any damages. Right after you talk with him, send him a brief note saying something like: "Just to confirm our conversation on (date). I understand that you will come to my apartment on (date) at (time) to inspect the premises to make the necessary determinations with regard to the return of my security deposit." It might be a good idea to remind him to dig out the copy of the registered letter you sent him when you moved in. Get your copy out as well. You may pick up your check in-check out list in the SSA Office.

Deliver inquiries or questions to DESPERATE in the SSA Office in the new Memorial Student Center.

Opinions

Editorial

Armed security personnel an unnecessary presence

It is often said that the only things in life which are definite and unalterable are death and taxes. Although this is true, the administration of this University also believes, via their decision to allow specially designated Stout Security Officers to carry sidearms, that lawlessness in this locale is not only on the increase, but also definite and unalterable.

It is also a widely acknowledged and accepted fact of today's society, in addition to death and taxes, that law enforcement must have the ultimate option of lethal force to protect the citizenry from those who would do irreversible harm to that same citizenry.

Because the Menomonie Police Department already has the option of lethal force in specific situations, the question is raised as to whether another law enforcement agency in this community should be similarly equipped. Specifically, should Stout Security Officers carry sidearms?

Our answer is a resounding no for several, we believe, very sound reasons.

If a situation would arise where lethal force may come into play, the Menomonie Police Department is but a telephone call away. This arrangement has served us well since the creation of this university. There is no viable reason to believe that it is suddenly obsolete.

Even though the Stout officers are properly trained in the use of their sidearms, the students of this University are now exposed to the possibility of lethal force on a more frequent basis because University Security Personnel have contact with us far more than the Menomonie Police.

Many students, in all probability, may be intimidated by the presence of firearms in an academic environment which had been relatively free of weapons. A feeling of uneasiness and distrust may pervade the campus.

To put it bluntly, if push does come to shove, a nightstick in the ribs is far better than a bullet in the heart.

Crash and burn

Back to the old grind

Matt Kalina

For many students, returning to Stout in the fall is a welcome opportunity to experience a vigorous educational challenge. For others, it's an extremely rude awakening. I fall into the latter category, especially this year.

Except for seeing old buddies, coming back to school has generally been a downer for me. I suppose it's because I had too much fun this summer and am too lazy to accept the responsibilities of becoming a full-time student. Maybe it's just because I have an inborn aversion to sitting still in a desk listening to teachers bombard me with lectures.

I was told that I am a junior this year, yet for the first week I felt like a freshman. Everything seems bewildering and remote this year.

For example, the registration process actually operated without a hitch or headache, and best yet, virtually without lines. I wonder who could have thought of something as simple and ingenious as paying tuition by mail?

Another source of confusion is the shifting of the major hub of the campus. Last year Stout's social meeting place existed around the Union, Harvey Hall and Bowman Hall. Now the center of campus moved down the hill away from the business area of Menomonie and materialized around the library and the new Union (generally referred to by all the high-brow socialites as the Library Learning Center and the Memorial Student Center respectfully).

The area around the old union is now nearly deserted, void of any activity.

I have caught myself on numerous occasions striding up the hill to the old Union for a coffee only to remember that the real Union is now down the hill.

I laughed out loud the first time I heard the new sound resonating from the Bowman Hall belltower. The bell tunes (for which I have used for telling the time ever since I have lost my watch) sound like someone banging on some tin cans. At least with the old recording that was used last year, it realistically sounded like bells tolling.

Yes, I definitely started this school year off in a cloud of disorientation. Campus security officers packing pistols? "No way, not at Stout," I thought as I first heard about it Friday. I was wrong.

The library to eliminate the card catalogue? "They aren't that nuts," I thought last week after reading a story about it. I was wrong again.

The first week of school I wandered from class to class with a single notebook in hand, distraught that summer vacation was finished, over and done with.

As school let out last May, I naively thought that the 13 weeks of summer vacation would last forever, but disgustingly enough, I relearned the lesson that it just plain doesn't.

Now that I have paid my minimum payment on my tuition, forked over $30 for books and study-guides at the bookstore and made my trip of insanity over to Rental Resources for a fresh load of textbooks, I've finally gotten my head on straight and I'm ready to roll.

Now if I can only find my pen.

Letters to the editor

Off-campus fines

Dear Editor,

The Menomonie Apartment Association (MAA) wants to welcome the UW-Stout students to Menomonie. MAA is pleased to be able to offer superior housing services to the community.

As new persons in this city, MAA wants students to be aware of the most common offended city ordinances. MAA does not want students to suffer embarassment and financial loss because they do not know the local law. Listed are the city of Menomonie's ordinances which most often cause financial loss for students:

1. Noisy parties and loud music. Fine: $125 1st offense, $250 2nd offense, $355 3rd offense.

2. Parking on lawns, sidewalks and boulevards will bring a $25.00 fine.

3. Uncovered garbage may cost one $25.

4. Sidewalks are to be cleared of snow by 12:00 noon of the day of a snowfall end. Failure to do so will result in a $32.50 fine. Second offense is $66. In addition, the postman will not deliver to those addresses not cleared of snow.

5. All pets must be controlled. There is a $21.20 fine for pets running at large.

All cities have their choice offenses. Those listed are the ones new folks in Menomonie most often unknowingly abuse. Be sure to avoid doing the items listed and students should find that living in Menomonie is most pleasant. Welcome, and MAA looks forward to serving you.

Menomonie Apartment Association Steve Hakes, President

Vandals ravage city

Dear Students,

This letter is directed only to those few who choose to do vandalism to the city of Menomonie, its businesses and its residents. Unfortunately, this reflects on the student body as a whole.

Where is your pride? Why the vandalism? Do you really get such a kick out of destroying other people's property? You live in this city nine months out of the year, four years of your life. Shouldn't this cause you to have some respect for its appearance?

Sunday morning I drove through downtown only to see flowers lying all over the streets and sidewalks. These plants have been beautiful all summer. It's sad to see them now. As I drove further, I saw a broken window and doorways and gutters decorated with beer cans and plastic cups. Can't you leave the cans and cups in the bars and the flowers in the planters?

We love Menomonie and hope you do too. After all, you're the ones that chose to come here to school and make this your college home. Be proud of it and help us make this a city we all can enjoy and a place you can be proud to say you're an alumni from.

CAMPUS SLANT/Should security officers carry arms?

Text by Matt Kalina Photos by Todd Nelson

Cathy Benike,
Senior,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

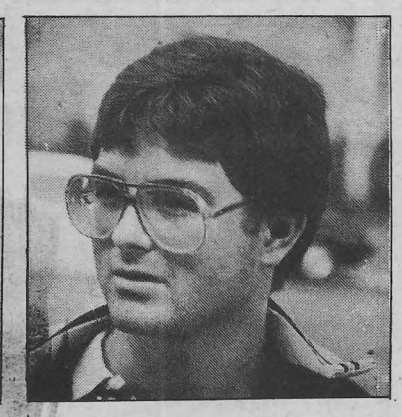
There is really no reason for it at all. I think it sounds excessive.

Parmadish Seepersad,
Sophomore,
Industrial Technology

I don't think the campus has any problems that would require guns. It may be okay for outside the campus but not inside the campus.

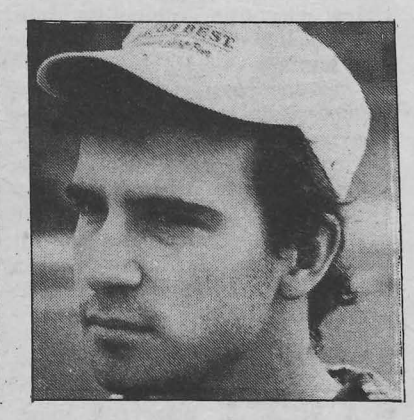
Sharon Weber,
Senior,
Clothing, Textile and Design

From my experiences as an R.A. on North Campus, I don't see a need at all for them to carry weapons. If they did need them, there is always the Menomonie Police Department to come and help them out. As far as what they deal with in the halls, there is no need for it at all, and it would only bring more problems I would think.



Bruce Trepton,
Senior,
Marketing Education

It sounds alright. The use of sidearms could at times be effective by stopping students when problems are occurring.



Mark Bentley,
Sophomore,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

It would cause a lot more problems than it would help anything. You get some guys carrying a sidearm around and they'll take a shot at somebody. There is always a chance. I don't feel that there is ever a situation where sidearms should be involved.

University Notes

Tower Rings Again

Thanks to the recent installation of a computerized music system, UW-Stout's 89-year-old clock tower is once again chiming every 15 minutes.

Consisting of a Yamaha electronic synthesizer, Apple II Plus computer and four Toa amplifiers, the system can produce almost every sound imaginable including most musical instruments and other non-musical sounds. The music can be produced manually on a keyboard or can be programmed on computer software.

The $6,500 system, paid for out of the general operating budget, is the the third system to produce sound for the tower. A mechanical carillon purchased in 1958 has operated off and on in recent years, and was removed during the recent renovation of Bowman Hall. It was repaired in 1984, but continued to perform poorly.

The original 7,000 lb. bell is still in the tower. Powered over the years by compressed air and a water-powered striking mechanism, the bell hasn't rung since the 1930's and can no longer do so because it is badly cracked.

Take Back The Night

Menomonie's second annual "Take Back the Night" celebration will be held Thursday through Saturday, September 5-7.

Activities include a march at dusk on September 7 beginning at Wilson Park. Refreshments will be served before and after the march. From noon to 3:00 p.m. on September 5 and 6 the movie "Men's Lives" will be shown in room 118 of the Student Center. There will also be classes in self-defense and role-playing. All the seminars and presentations held on those days will focus on the theme of "Women's Empowerment."

In addition to the above activities, there will be a "benefit boogie" at 8:00 p.m. on September 5 in the Great Hall. A rhythm and blues band will play, with tickets selling for $2.50. The event is sponsored by the Stout Student Association.

DNR Hunter Education Course

Designed to enhance the abilities of experienced hunters, the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources, in conjunction with the West Wisconsin Tecnical Institute, is offering a certification course for hunters.

Persons completing the course successfully will be certified as having gone through a hunter safety course. Several Western states require this certification before hunters can buy a license. The class will meet for the first time at the Technical Institute in Eau Claire on Tuesday, September 3, at 7:30 p.m.

The Community Program

A series of non-credit short courses and workshops for area residents will be offered by UW-Stout again this fall. Under the heading of "The Community Program," the courses will be grouped into four areas: art, small business, children, and youth and leisure.

Costs of attendance will range from $15 to $40, depending on topic and length. Interested people may register by mail, phone or in person through Stout's Office of Continuing Education. The office is located on the second floor of the Administration Building and the phone number is 232-2693 or 232-1167. Classes will meet in September and October.

HELP Line Available

Have a question about Stout or the University of Wisconsin system? Look for HELP, the Higher Education Location Program, to provide the answer. A toll-free number will put you in touch with someone who can answer your question or locate someone who will.

Open from 9:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. Monday and Tuesday and 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, 1-800-362-3020 was dialed by nearly 30,000 people last year. Ranging from a seven-foot high school student wondering if any of the UW schools had extra-long mattresses to non-traditional students looking for information on returning to school, almost any question can be answered.

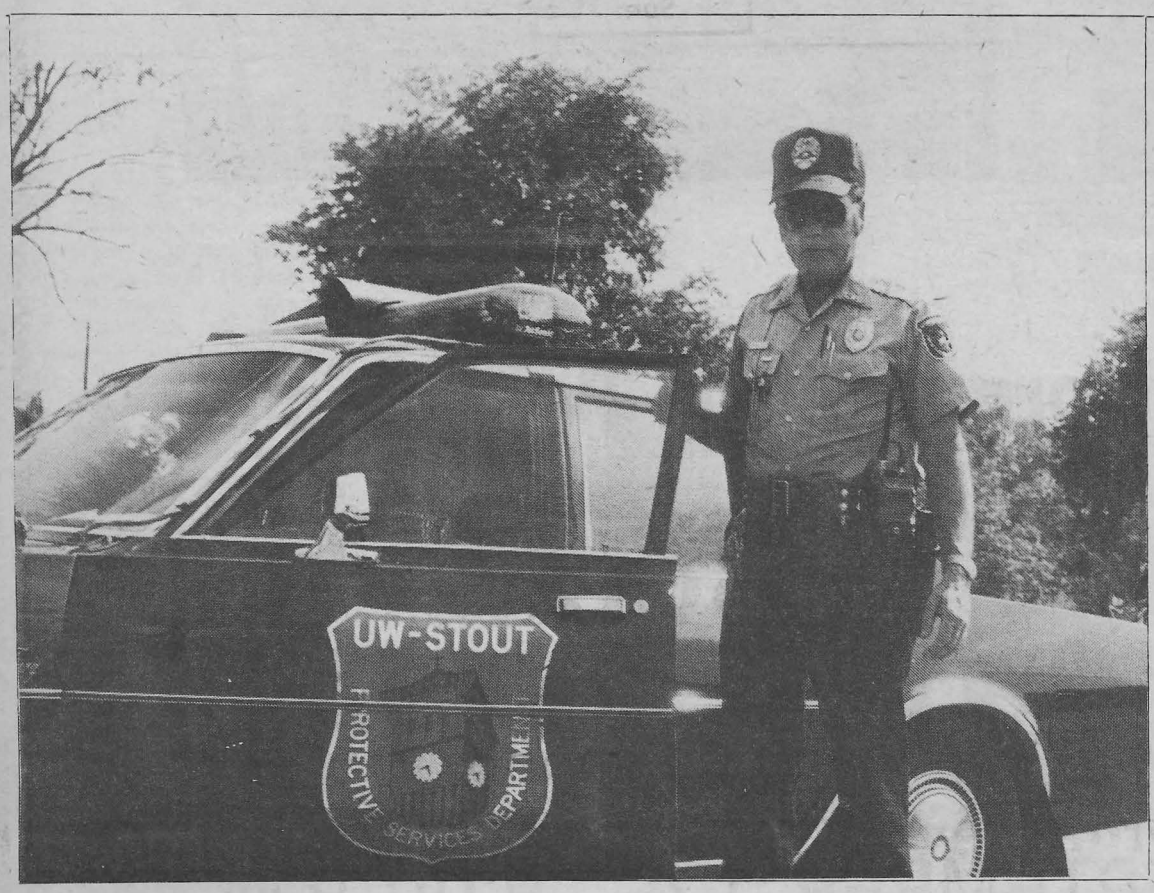
cessfully complete a 320 hour recruitment-training program as outlined by the state of Wisconsin Law Enforcement Standards. Each officer will receive at least 40 hours of refresher courses every year. "These requirements are set up for all law enforcement officers in the state of Wisconsin," Buckley said.

Beyond these requirements, Buckley said, "Our policy for our officers is for far stricter training than for any law enforcement agency around here."

SSA President Joann Prange questioned the need for campus police to have guns. She was especially concerned about the potential for trouble on occasions where campus police encountered a drunk student. "We will be much more receptive to that situation than the (Menomonie) police," Buckley said. He referred to the fact that campus police participate in training with hall directors and resident advisors each year and and as such they should react appropriately to any situation.

The controversy over campus police and their new authority may subside as students become accustomed to the new change. More definite conclusions about the program's success may be made as the program experiences the test of time.



INCREASED PROTECTIVE CAPABILITY— Six full-time and two part-time University Security Officers have been adequately trained and authorized to carry sidearms. While Protective Services applauds the move, many students remain skeptical.

King of England instructs art at Stout

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

King, of England, will be an instructor this year in the Stout Art department. Clive King, that is.

A temporary exchange arranged by Stout art faculty member Charles Wimmer provided the opportunity for King to teach here. Prior to this exchange, Clive King taught art and design at Oxford Polytechnic. He will return there for the fall 1986 term.

Wimmer, who has had several such exchanges in the past, sent a large number of proposals to various English art colleges and King's response lead to the agreement. The exchange included course loads, and in addition, an exchange of houses.

King explained advantages and disadvantages of his new position. He stressed that the main advantage from his point of view was the studio space provided for faculty in Ray Hall. "I like the idea that the lecturers are like professionals — they are coming up here and chipping away and there's another little subsidiary art scene that is all very healthy as well."

King said he appreciated the work schedule, particularly starting work at 8 am., and finishing his day at 2 pm. At Oxford Polytechnic, King said the day started at 10:30 and ran later.

A further difference was the length of the school year. The year starts in October and runs into July, however there are several month-long vacations. Also, the art faculty at Oxford Poly is given a semester leave every two or three years to work freely on their own art.

"Oxford is a place of two sides," King said. Besides the colleges and universities, "the big industry is British Leland, the British car industry." There is the auto worker district and the other side of Oxford, the suburbs, which King explained looks much like the Menomonie area. "There are areas which I feel I can recognize here, and I realize that I am halfway around the world."

The availability of a large studio space allows King to continue work on a drawing he has labored over for a year and a half. "It's about 50 feet long at the moment, and it's going to be about 200 feet long and it is kind of an autobiographical thing. It's from the village I was brought up in Wales, which translated means 'the valley of witches.' It's all very wierd, about superstitions and things like that."

"Another section will be about here, because it's autobiographical, and it's continuous." The piece is made up of a number of individual drawings on two by three foot sheets of white paper.

The work is designed so as to frame each drawing singly and combined into a larger grid, but each drawing can be exhibited individually. "The difficulty is I sell sections of it so I have to knock in another section." Each drawing is an expansion of a smaller working or preliminary drawing made in a sketchbook. On the table were several dozen sketches waiting to be incorporated into the larger work.

The sketches themselves have a visual appeal in their condensed simplicity. King has taken to reproducing these images as hand-colored etchings which look like an abstract cartoon strip.

Eventually, groups of drawings will made into 7 by 9 foot canvases. "I'm not going to translate this directly into canvases."

King was originally from Wales. He left for England to study at Exeter and Goldsmith College in London. He described his accent as "watered-down Welsh."

His art has gone through several periods, including a phase in computer graphics. His interest in computers lead to his requesting a bit of computer time and an operations assistant from a computer firm. The company declined, and instead they sent King to study graphics part-time while he worked in their design department.

Later he worked as an art consultant for Liquitex, a world-wide art supply manufacturer. Since then, King has taught art, graphic design, and lectured in art history.

King enjoys teaching and the stimulation of working with students and the constant flux of new ideas. "It's super, really... I steal all the students ideas I can," King said jokingly. "It's part of the excitement, and you keep yourself sharp while you are helping students."

King seemed very pleased with his new position at Stout and his first two weeks in America. He flew into Washington D.C. from England, "and that was marvelous. I thought the museums and galleries were fantastic. I was always crackers about pop art in the 60's. It was nice to see some of those things in the flesh."

Some changes are novel experiences for King and his family. "We exchanged houses, which is peculiar because I have a much smaller house than Charlie. And now I am in all this acreage, and to see things like a skunk, which I've never seen before. It was extraordinary. I've only seen those in Walt Disney cartoons.

WVSS programs with new laser technology

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

You can have a front row seat at a Bruce Springsteen concert or to a world class symphony right here in Menomonie. This year WVSS will be able to bring you clear, realistic sound with the new laser disc technology.

WVSS is the station located in the Communications Center for instructional radio production. It can be located on the dial at 100 FM on UW-Stout's campus, 91 FM in Menomonie and 105 FM on the UW-Eau Claire campus.

A disc, which is a mere 4 3/4 inches in diameter, can be read by a compact disc player for a maximum of approximately 70 minutes. The sounds produced make it seem as though the band or musical group is playing right before the listener's very ears. This is not magic, but the culmination of much technology put into a small disc and its player.

One side of the disc is silver where the music is stored. The opposite side is pressed plastic. The disc is covered with aluminum and a lacquer finish. Tougher than carbon albums, the small disc has a longer life with proper handling.

One of the reasons a disc has a long life is because it is not touched by a needle. It is exposed to a small laser beam which reads codes and numbers rather than the grooves of regular records.

At the WVSS station, the Yamaha model CD37 is four inches high and 19 inches wide. When a disc or DAD (digital audio or compact disc) is inserted into the player, a laser beam reads the information on the outer ring of the disc. It then displays the number of tracs or songs contained on the disc and the amount of time left when playing.

Due to programability, the player can be told to play the songs in a different order, then repeat, or even repeat the songs in an alternate order. This feature is a plus for a radio station. WVSS will be able to broadcast for 24 hours.

Flat spaces and pits make up the musical surface of the disc. Sound is stored as numbers, 14 digits in length. The laser reflects off of the disc in order to measure the curve of the sound waves. The laser takes 44,000 samples a second in order to reproduce a wave as realistically as possible. If the disc has a scratch or flaw, the error correct feature reads the musical digits before and after the flaw and predicts and plays the sound which was distorted.

"If the disc was spread out to the size of the Roman Colosseum, the pits would be the size of rice grains," said Ace Matthews, General Manager of WVSS.

Matthews has been waiting for 2 1/2 years in order to acquire a 50 album automation system. With this system, 50 disc albums could be selected and played continuously. This automation was not available.

Recently, the station installed the compact disc player which was financially assisted by Menomonie's EME Audio Systems. The technology could not wait any longer. Matthews said, "College students are interested in good sound. We want to be known for quality and service."

How does this "new sound" compare to that of albums? WVSS had to reduce the volume of the station. Otherwise the powerful sounds could overblow other stations, which is illegal, and blow out listener's stereo speakers. Between the sounds of the music, no pops, hisses or distortion can be heard. It is purely music.

Presently, classical music makes up the majority of the disc collection at WVSS. From 9 A.M. to noon the classical concert will be played. Due to FCC, Federal Communications Commission. regulations this daily broadcast qualifies as a public service. Therefore, students of the radio production classes can play rock and roll without worrying about regulations. Playing rock and roll is not considered a public service.

> College students are interested in good sound.
> —Ace Matthews, General Manager, WVSS

Laser rock album concerts is a new program being developed at WVSS. "Our intention is to advertise the album all day long and continuously play the album at night," said Matthews. This would be an opportune time for students to record the album, due to the clarity and nonstop broadcast.

WVSS is also planning a library. With a deposit, discs may be checked out by students. A laser eye will keep track of the discs which have bar codes like grocery items.

Total cost of the discs and equipment will be approximately $1200. Due to the unpredicted popularity of the new technology, the only problem is buying discs. "Record manufacturers are so behind, they could double their capacity and still not catch up," said Matthews. WVSS will have an account at Musicland in Eau Claire. It will be easier to select the discs than order them and wait.

According to Russ Nelson, Manager of EME Audio Systems in Menomonie, manufacturers of the players have caught up to the demand. Now car compact disc players are on the market. The cost of players range form $299 to $1299 depending upon the degree of electronics and convenience. Some players are produced with remote control.

Compact discs range in price form $12.99 to $15.50. The lowered price of this technology has almost equaled that of regular turn-tables and albums. According to Matthews, future projections are that in 1999 LP records will be obsolete and discs will be the mode.

For 1985, the major difference to WVSS listeners will be a clearer, high freguency with powerful, heavy bases due to the technology of a small compact disc.

Campus offers varied activities

Kelly Moran
Arts Reporter

Are you bored? There are a wide variety of activities and events offered to Stout students, many for free or for a minimal fee.

The Art Gallery is a great place to spend an afternoon. Featuring a variety of art shows, it is located in Ray Hall, across from the old Union. September 10 is the premiere of the Art Department Faculty show which will run about three weeks.

University Cinema Commission brings newly released motion pictures to Stout students and faculty. All films are shown in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center and cost $1.

Foreign Film Society, an affiliate of the University Cinema, brings foreign films to campus once a month. The purpose of the Foreign Film Society is to increase people's awareness of film as a powerful means of expression. All films are shown in room 321 of Applied Arts at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. Admission is free.

Mabel Tainter Theatre, located in downtown Menomonie, offers various plays, concerts, and films. Beside hosting highly respected performances, the theater itself has long been the cultural center of Menomonie.

University Speaker Series presents a year long program of speakers on a wide variety of topics. The intention of the commission is to promote political and social awareness on the University campus and within the surrounding community.

The Recreation Center, located in the Memorial Student Center, offers open and league bowling, billiards, an amusement game area, and an outdoor resource center.

Performing Arts Commission develops a series of programs and cultural events in the areas of dance, theater, music and other performing arts.

Contemporary Music Productions, with an emphasis on contemporary music, sponsors major and mini concerts and movie videos.

Pawn Live sets up a regular schedule of Coffeehouse type performers for the Pawn. Acts range from one to four performers and usually appear on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings of each week.

There are also over 100 student organizations at Stout. Ranging from scuba to soccer, Project Friendship to Alfresco Outing, they provide an opportunity to develop or continue a special interest in the company of others with similar interests.

Young gridders face tough turnaround

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The 1985 UW-Stout gridders will have a challenging pursuit trying to turn things around after three straight years with losing records of 3-8, 2-9 and 2-9.

Preview

Sixth-year Head Coach Bob Kamish will have a difficult mission working with almost 30 percent more new people than last year. This year Kamish will have only 23 returning letter winners as compared to 32 letter winners last season.

Returning letter winners include three quarterbacks, starting with Glenn Majszak. Last year Majszak was out most of the season because of a broken tibia bone in his left leg. The injury occured in the second game of the season against UW-River Falls.

Majszak will be directing the offense when the Blue Devils take on Grand Valley, Mich. in the Hall of Fame game on Satuday, September 7. Behind the 5'11" 180-pound Majszak will be 6'2" 185-pound sophomore quarterback Rob Lindberg and 6'3" 205-pound sophomore quarterback Tim Kothlow.

Offensive Coordinator Bill Burns is less worried about the quarterback situation this year than last year with Majszak back from his injury and both Lindberg and Kothlow with a season's experience.

Burn's major concern is with the offensive line's inexperience. Most every position will be filled with new people. Kamish stated, "Out of the ten offensive line positions to be filled, there will be only one player with a year experience." Then Kamish added that the performance of the offense will be directly related to the effectiveness of the offensive line.

The one player on the line with experience is 6'1" 230-pound senior Doug Pahlow. Other letter winners returning are 6'1" 185-pound junior Ron Wise at wide receiver and 6'2" 225-pound tight end senior Scott Stauffacher. In the backfield there will be 5'8" 185-pound sophomore running back Chuck Carr. Stout fans will definitely need a program this year to keep track of all the new Blue Devils like Brian Tetzlaff and Todd Loomis.

The special teams will have last year's leading scorer, senior placekicker Todd Miles. Miles currently holds the school record for the longest field goal of 51 yards in last season's game against UW-Oshkosh. Last year Miles was good for seven field goals of over 40 yards.

The defense will be led by Co-captains Keith Jurek and Brian Kellett, both seniors. Jurek is the biggest player on the team at 6'5", 230 pounds. He should have no problems playing defensive lineman and Kellett at 6'2", 210 pounds will be at the linebacker position. Also coming on strong this year is 5'11" 180-pound senior linebacker Darren Cockerman.

Leading these seniors and the rest of the defense is Defensive Coordinator Steve Terry. Happy with this year's roster Terry said, " Even though we have nobody that is fantastic, we do have players who work hard and with this it will lead to steady progress during the season."

Last Saturday the gridders held an exhibition game at Nelson Field. In the game there was a white team and a blue team, each with half of the team's roster. The blue team has the first string offense, led by Majszak and the second string defense. The white team had the first team defense and the second team team offense, led by Rob Lindberg and later Tim Kothlow. All three quarterbacks had a chance to play. Both Majszak and Lindberg tried some throwing on the run to avoid the defensive rush.

The defense dominated most of the game, especially the first string defense on the white team. This made it difficult for Majszak and the first team offense to move the ball. Kamish and his staff were pleased with the results of the game.

ROLLING OUT—

SPORTS BEAT

Ad Lures Gridders: About 60 football prospects are due on the Upper Iowa University campus this fall, lured by Coach Steve Fickert's unusal recruiting method.

Fickert drew nationwide attention last month after he placed an advertisement in a Chicago newspaper seeking football players for Upper Iowa.

"We've gotten responses from Washington to New Jersey and Wisconsin to Florida, so we've covered a lot of the country," Fickert said. He is in his first year as Upper Iowa football coach.

The Division III school, which has under 1,000 students, offers no athletic scholarships.

Fickert said he has received about 250 calls from potential football players since the advertisement appeared in the Chicago Sun-Times on June 30.

Academic Honor: Former UW-Stout track standout Ray Parker received a Wisconsin State University Conference Medal of Honor for his outstanding athletic and scholastic achievements.

The Racine senior majored in Industrial Technology (Packaging) along with setting the WSUC 600-meter track record at last year's conference meet. Parker also set eight school records during his track career at Stout.

A Hand For Fan: Maurice "Maurie" Michelbook of Menomonie has been named to receive the University's Distinguished Athletic Service award.

Michelbook will be honored at the University's annual Hall of Fame ceremonies on Sept. 7 along with three former Stout athletes who will be inducted into the school's Hall of Fame. Heading the list includes all-conference wrestler Dale Evans, all-conference tackle John Widmar and three-sports star Darby Worman.

Intramural Softball: The intramural one-pitch softball tournament will be Saturday and Sunday at Wakanda Park.

"Sack the Quarterback" contest

Tom Roth

As major league baseball enters the final month of play, college football kicks off the season tonight. Brigham Young and Heisman Trophy candidate Robbie Bosco will invade Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. to take on Boston College in the third annual Kickoff Classic.

Defending National Champion BYU will be facing a tough Boston College team that likes to put the ball in the air as much as the Cougars potent air attack. Despite the graduation of last year's Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, the Eagles are expected to keep up their traditional passing offense.

BYU holds the longest current winning streak in the country with 24 consecutive victories. BYU and B.C. finished first and second last year in total offense so tonight's game should be a high-scoring dual.

The National Football League will kick off their season one week from Sunday with a full schedule of games.

Packer fans are hoping the "Pack is Back" to stay after last year's 8-8 season. With a few breaks Green Bay could give Chicago a run for their money.

Viking fans will be watching to see if new Head Coach Bud Grant can bring back the old glory days. Grant's past teams had played in frigid Met Stadium. Before the Metrodome was constructed, visiting teams were just glad to get out of Minnesota without frostbite.

SACK THE QUARTERBACK

Starting this week through Super Bowl Sunday, I will be staging the first annual "Sack The Quarterback" contest. What is the "Sack the Quarterback" contest all about? "Sack the Quarterback" involves picking the winners of the eight games that will be listed in the quarterback's colmun each week.

Not only will you get to try your luck against my expertise and other diehard football readers of the STOUTONIA, but you will have a shot at winning weekly prizes that will be given away by community businesses.

Since this is my contest we have to play by my rules. Here's the quaterback's rules.....

The Quarterback's Rules

1. All contest entries should be submitted on a 3" x 5" index card inside a sealed envelope marked "Sack The Quarterback". (A sheet of notebook paper will also be accepted)
2. Included on your entry should be ONLY the week's eight winners, your name, phone number and address. Also include the tiebreaker score, which will be the predicted point spread of the UW-Stout game every week unless notified otherwise. One entry per person.
3. Each week's games will be in this column and posted on the Stoutonia office window.
4. All entries must be submitted no later than noon every Thursday of the following week. Entries can be dropped off at the Stoutonia office located in the lower level of Memorial Student Center or mailed to "Sack the Quarterback", The Stoutonia, Memorial Student Center, Menomonie, Wisconsin 54751.

Here are the quarterback's games for week one of "Sack The Quarterback". (Entries due by noon on Thursday, September 5.) Grand Rapids, Mich. at Stout; San Francisco at Minnesota; Green Bay at New England; UCLA at BYU; Southern California at Illinois; Oklahoma State at Washington; Florida State at Nebraska; Colorado State at Colorado. Domino's Pizza will be awarding a small three-item pizza and two Cokes to the winner of week one's contest.

Runners strive for return to nationals

Danielle Anderson
Sports Reporter

As the UW-Stout men's and women's cross-country season opens, the men will be looking forward to qualifying for their fifth straight NAIA National Championship and the women will also be vying for a return trip to the championships for their second consecutive year.

The men harriers lost three of their top five runners and two of their top three from last year's team. Paul Bons, last year's number one runner, and Todd Fox, last year's number three runner, have both decided to red shirt (not compete) this season. Herb Haines, number five last year, was lost to graduation.

This year's team will look to senior Captain Matt Christenson for leadership. Christenson, an industrial education major from DePere, Wis., was last year's number two runner. He finished 32 and 75 in the WSUC and NAIA Championships, respectively, last year.

Christenson was also voted last year's most improved runner. According to Christenson, he logged many miles this summer and appears ready to pick up where he left off last year. Christenson said, "My goals for this year include making all-conference, which is a big goal of mine as is All-American honors."

To attain these goals he would need to place in the top 25 at both the WSUC Championships and at the NAIA Championships. He says his team goals are to have the team place in the top five at the conference meet and to be in the top 20 at the national meet.

Other returnees from last year's squad include junior Eric Bretl (4th man last year),senior Todd Zuerlein (6th), sophomore Bob Hackly (7th), sophomore Ben Haney (8th), and Ed Wojdlya (10th). Transfer Mike Bennet and freshmen Gary Poppe, Tim Stordahl, Dave Polishinski and Steve Voll should challenge for varsity spots this year.

Pushing Geere for the number-one spot on this year's team will be Ann Meyer. Meyer qualified for last year's NCAA Division III Track and Field Championships in the 3000-meter run. Others vying for varsity positions are Sue Meyer, a transfer from UW-Parkside, and freshmen Liz Lund, Leslie Droll and Kelly Burke.

The teams will be running the Wakanda Wander on Monday. This is a fun run and is open to anyone who wishes to compete. For more information, contact Lou Klitzke, x-2161.

Another goal of Geere's is to have the team qualify for the national championships. Geere said, "I hope that this year's team can have a lot of fun and learn to be a dedicated team. We don't have the numbers, but we have the spirit to pull us through the season."

The women's team has constantly been on the upswing since its origin as a varsity sport back in 1980. Last year, the Lady Blue Devil harriers qualified for their first trip to the NAIA National Championships. They finished 21 out of 31 schools that qualified.

At the WSUC Cross-Country Championships the Lady Blue Devils were fourth out of nine schools.

The women will be without former standout Kay Rehm this year. Rehm was lost to graduation. Senior Sheila Geere, this year's captain, is expected to take up some of the slack. Geere, a Hotel and Restaurant Management major from Inver Grove Heights, Minn., was last year's number two runner.

Over three years of competition at Stout, Geere has improved her 5000-meter personal best time from 19:55 to 19:15. She won the award for most team spirit as a freshman and last year she was voted the team's most improved runner. Geere's goals for this year include making the All-Conference team and to run under 19 minutes consistently. She also says a goal of hers is to field a full team. In the past this has been a problem for the lady harriers.

Coach seeks dedication from netters

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

"I have little time for people who don't eat, drink, and sleep tennis," UW-Stout Tennis Coach Bob Smith commented. By looking at the tennis paraphernalia in his fieldhouse office, this seems to be his chief concern.

Last season the UW-Stout women netters ended the season with a seven win ll loss record, which earned the Lady Blue Devils a fifth place conference finish. Coach Smith said that they should have done better. "Oshkosh only beat us out of fourth by a one-point spread," he notes.

Although Academic All-American Nancy Zedler graduated, returning will be the squad's key player, Mary Malloy. "Mary will lead by example," Smith said. Also he will look toward two juniors, Lynn Papenfuss and Jean Feyen for team leadership. In addition, Beth Rogers, who was a member of the team last year, will assist in coaching.

Round-robin play begins this week, which will determine the positions for the squad. Smith expects Malloy and Papenfuss to be up at the top, but notes that there are a few freshman who could play very high. He hesitates to make prediction because, according to Smith, "My predictions are almost always wrong."

Presently, Smith notes that it is tough to determine the better players on the team. Several are hitting the ball well in the early practices, but he says firmly, "It will all depend on who will be able to hit the shots under pressure."

Coach Smith remarks that this season will be interesting. "There are a lot of unknown elements. Just look at the mixture of players this year. Our team will consist of two juniors, two sophomores, and five freshman, and three or four freshman could play in the the top six slots."

Smith believes in the talent of this team, but questions their desire for success. "High goals are something that the women's tennis team has lacked in the past," Smith declared.

He predicts the women netters will be in the upper half of the conference with UW-Whitewater being their strongest opponent. They face UW-Eau Claire Wednesday, Sept.4, to begin the season. Their first home match will be Saturday, Sept. 7, at 9 a.m. where they will challenge UW-River Falls and UW-Stevens Point.

Registration problems eased this year

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

The implemention of the new registration process helped alleviate many long lines for UW-Stout students this fall. Students received packets in early August which included all the necessary information for registration. Many student needed to only pay their fees by mail or at the specified time during the first week of school and turn in information/address cards. Most students found this process much simpler but many were left with the question, "Is there anything else to do?" The answer was no.

Returning UW-Stout students were informed last spring of the new process during pre-registration. In addition, all were reminded of the change when the registration packets were received in August.

by mail, and according to Howard Slinden, Bursar, approximately 50 to 60 percent of them did. Others paid and/or picked up their financial aid on the specified date during the first week or during the open payment/disbursement time from 4:00 to 7:00 p.m. each evening.

Although the number is not definite, there are some students that had not paid as of the August 27 deadline and will be assessed a $20.00 fine. All students must pay their bill or make other arrangements by September 4 or their registration will be cancelled.

Previously, add/drop was done within a two-hour time frame at the fieldhouse. The Registrar's Office, having to relocate in the fieldhouse, was able to use only one terminal for entering the necessary data, which made the lines long. Now that they can remain in their Bowman Hall office, they have been able to spread add/drop over an eight-hour day using five terminals and decreasing lines.

A major problem in the past has been delinquent accounts from such sources as parking fines, library fines, lab fees and residence hall damages. Now students are not allowed to register unless they have paid these bills. According to Sharon Stewart, Registrar, this process eliminates delinquency due to the fact that failure to pay these bills results in a hold on his/her registration permit.

As a result of the new procedure, the various offices involved in the registration process were also able to hire less temporary help. The Business Office previously hired approximately 60 people, but this year only hired 16. Although the staff hours were about the same as in the past, they did not have to concentrate all the work into two days. In the past, the Registrar's Office had hired organizations such as the Gamma Sigma Sigmas and the Society of Manufacturing Engineers to help alleviate their workload. This year they hired only two limited-time employees to disseminate information and enter information on the computers.

Slinden stated that this process puts much more responsibility on the students to make sure they have accomplished all the necessary tasks of registration. Stewart felt most students had read the information in the packets and suggests that they continue to read the information received as some things may be changed to make the process more efficient. Stewart said, "Students should not take for granted that this process will be the same next semester. We will evaluate and refine this fall's experience, hence it becomes very important for the students to read the information for next semester."

Both Slinden and Stewart felt that this new process was very effective. Slinden said, "Students were very understanding and cooperative, which helped the process run smoothly." However, there are some rough spots to overcome, according to Slinden, such as assuring the information/address cards are received or making the students aware of when their payment is due.

The main goal, according to Stewart, is to alleviate the stressful situation found previously in registration. All students interviewed felt it did relieve the tension of past registrations and new students found it easy and efficient. Ann Ducklow, a junior, said, "It was very organized and efficient. I walked in, wrote out my check and left. The options for payment were good for the needs of all different students." Freshman Chris Zeuli agreed, saying, "The registration packet was easy to understand and included plenty of instructions. The option for mailing the payment in was very helpful. It was also convenient to have the option to pay monthly."

Overall, staff and students seem pleased with the efficiency of the new registration process. All returning staff and students can appreciate the ease of this new system.

Cycling across U.S. to promote world peace

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Closing his solar energy business and leaving his diploma from Harvard University's Business School behind him in Sausalito, Calif., John Ince is pedalling his way across the country with an 18-speed bicycle on a long-term commitment to promote world peace.

Stopping in Menomonie at UW-Stout on Aug. 28, Ince said that the United Nations, in a rare unanimous vote in 1981, designated the opening day of their session, the third day in September, as International Peace Day. "Unfortunately, no one knows about that, and it is not an official holiday," Ince said.

Ince, 37, hopes to change all this by presenting a 15-foot scroll, filled with signatures of supporters that he encountered along the way, to officials urging them to establish an international holiday for peace. "All the holidays we have are either geared toward a religious calendar or toward some national figure's birthday," Ince said. "There is no one day to be celebrated world-wide."

Ince said that the ultimate goal of his cross-country trip is to establish a form of communication "which is only possible in this day and age among the ordinary citizens of different nations."

"Imagine having people in the United States making an expression of a desire for peace on the International Peace Day," said Ince. "All across the country, as the earth rotates, people stop what they are doing that day. An image can be beamed via satellite over to the Soviet Union and let's assume that they reciprocate. What you have, then, are people who are perceived to be our enemies, seeing us expressing our desire for peace that day, and they are humanized."

Beginning his 4,000 mile journey in Seattle, July 25, and averaging 50 miles a day, Ince plans to arrive in New York City on United Nations Day, Oct. 24.

Ince's goal is to recruit bicyclists to join him next year on a ride across the United States with relay teams carrying scrolls to the United Nations. He also plans to organize a peace concert in Washington, D.C. and a mass bike-a-thon from Washington, D.C. to New York City.

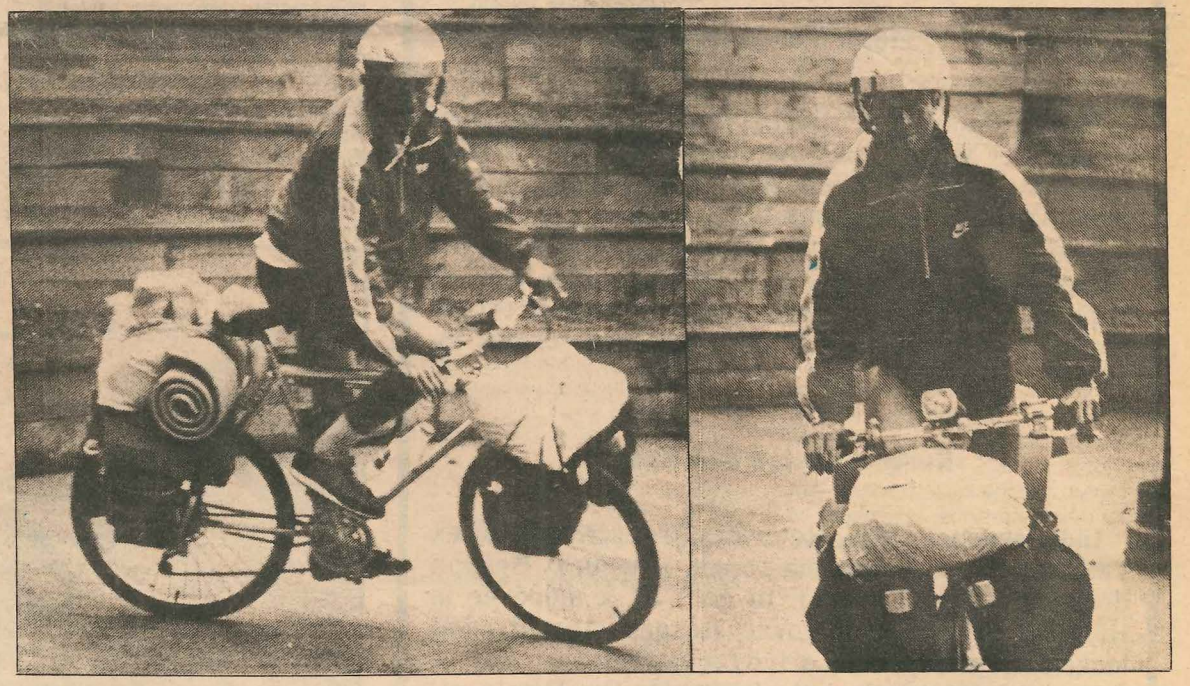
A part of Ince's promotion for world peace is a mock presidential candidate called Zeke Daniels, for whom Ince acts as campaign manager.

"The 60's are now seen as a time when political activity existed," Ince said. "Zeke Daniels embodies the spirit of the 60's."

Ince said that he created the idea of Zeke from talking with former classmates at his 10th annual class reunion at Harvard University. He discussed with them about how caught up they were in their jobs and families, and that they were no longer involved in issues like they were in the 60's.

According to Ince, Zeke is a peace candidate who runs on the platform of peace, love, justice and freedom. "What I am trying to convey is the notion that the 60's are still alive in the 80's," said Ince.

"The important thing," Ince said, "is that people believe they have the power to change."



PEACE RIDER— John Ince peddled his 18-speed bicycle in Menomonie on August 28 in support of world peace. Ince hopes to complete his 4,000 mile journey across the United States by United Nations Day on Oct. 24.

Porn rock skips beat

What do the wives of Senators Bob Packwood of Oregon, John Danforth of Missouri, Strom Thurmond and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, John Heinz of Pennsylvania, Paul Trible of Virginia, David Durenberger of Minnesota, Paul Simon of Illinois amd Treasury Secretary James Baker have in common?

All are co-signers of a request made by the Parents' Music Resource Center (PMRC) asking the record industry to "exercise voluntary restraint" and incorporate a rating system for records akin to the one now used for rating movies.

This group of women, self-labeled the "Washington Wives", have persuaded radio and television stations not to air songs that describe or promote various acts like incest, sadomasochism, thrill killing and oral sex at gunpoint. But these steps are only the beginning. On August 8, Recording Industry Association of America President Stanley Gortikov announced that 19 recording firms will label albums and cassettes with a message similar to "Parental Guidance:Explicit Lyrics."

Those 19 firms distribute 80 percent of the records and tapes sold in this country.

PMRC is headed by Mary Elizabeth "Tipper" Gore, wife of Senator Albert Gore (D-Tenn.). Mrs. Gore is quoted in the August 26, 1985 issue of U.S. News & World Report as saying that she was initially ignorant of the content in rock music until she purchased Prince's "Purple Rain" album for her 12-year-old daughter.

"I was shocked when I heard the words to one of the songs, " Darling Nikki," Gore said in U.S. News. "It describes masturbation by Nikki, who is called a sex fiend."

Other records which are used by the PMRC as examples of "porn rock" are "Eat Me Alive" by Judas Priest, "Fits Like a Glove" by Kiss, and "Live Wire" by Motley Crue.

Although some assert that warning labels on records and tapes aren't enough, Doubleday Broadcasting Company President Gary Stevens is quoted in the same issue of U.S. News & World Report as saying that "This is censorship. Many of us have been careful not to play pornographic records, but a few well-connected people have imposed their views of good taste on the masses. The record industry has caved in, and the broadcasters are bearing the brunt of it."

Others who support the recording industry insist that all the publicity surrounding the porn rock has overshadowed the good the industry has done via the "U.S.A. for Africa" and "Live Aid" concerts.

In addition, they also stress that porn rock is but a small fraction of the 26 percent of the industry which rock music comprises. People over the age of 20 purchase 69 percent of rock records and tapes, while those under 14 account for a mere nine percent of the market.

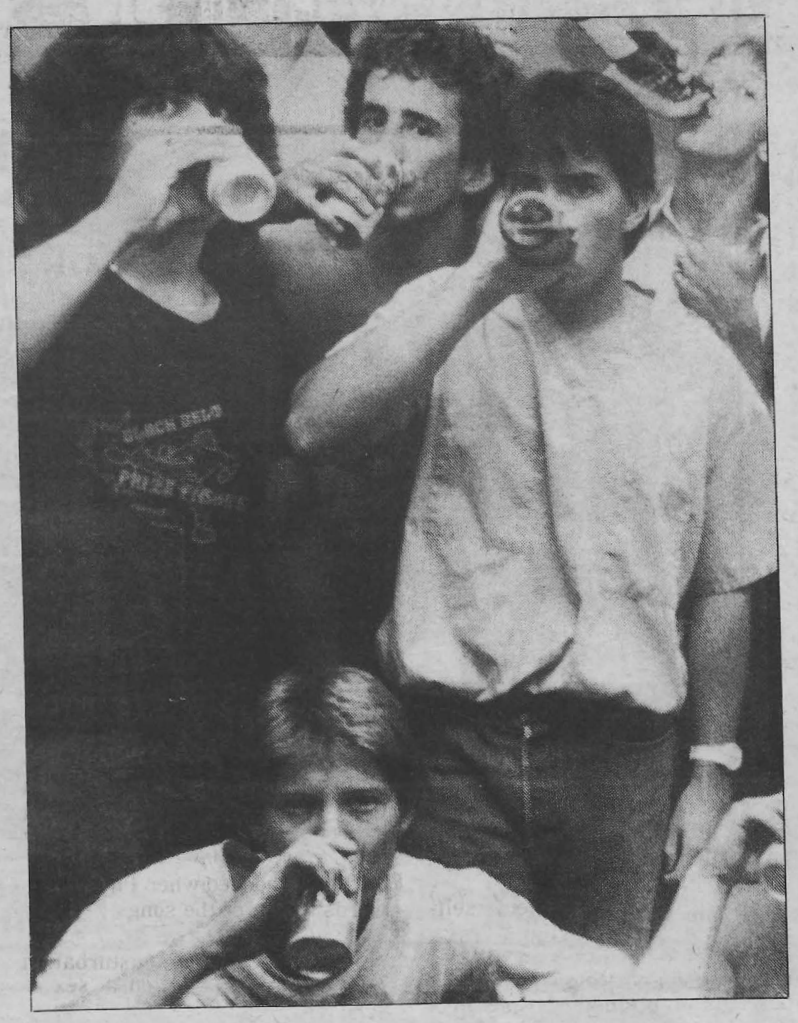
All dorm residents affected by policy

Barb Caron
News Reporter

As a result of the legal drinking age being changed in 1984 from 18 to 19 years of age, virtually all new freshmen are unable to drink legally. As a result of this change, the University of Wisconsin Stout makes it clear that only those who have reached the drinking age may consume alcohol in the residence halls. Those who are of legal drinking age are also expected not to serve, or make available alcohol to underage persons.

The University also recognizes and supports the concept of "responsible drinking" by persons of legal drinking age. As defined by the University, in the UW-Stout Residence Hall Handbook, responsible drinking refers to the "consumption of alcohol and resultant behavior which is healthy and enhances one's social relationship; behavior resulting from responsible drinking also does not adversely affect fellow residents within the floor and hall communities."

According to the Handbook a definition for irresponsible drinking is defined as the "consumption of alcohol and resultlant behavior which is unhealthy to the individual and the community environment, adversely affects others or impairs social relationships. The inappropriate use of alcohol in conjunction with other chemicals is considered irresponsible. The University expects students to drink responsibly. Specifically, the University does not consider drinking to excess to be responsible."



EXPENSIVE DRINKS—
Heavy fines will be levied against underage drinkers and their suppliers in compliance with new state drinking laws. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

With these two definitions in mind it is up to all residents in the halls to adhere to the new policies enacted since the increase of the drinking age from 18 to 19 years of age.

Persons who have not reached the legal age may not consume alcohol or have it in their possession. If a minor is seen drinking alcohol Stout Security will be called and they will issue a $67.50 citation. Persons caught furnishing beer or liquor to underage persons in the resident halls can be issued a $125.00 citation.

How exactly does the increase in the drinking age affect the resident halls and their staff?

A Resident Advisor (RA) who wishes to remain anonymous said that she doesn't feel the increase in drinking age will affectrinking Lafayette said, "yes, I play baseball, and the Rec Center in the Student Center is also an excellent alternative to drinking."

When Mike Duffy a freshman in Graphic Design was asked if he felt left out of the social atmosphere here at Stout by not being able to drink he said, "No, everyone in the dorms is partying anyway so it doesn't matter if you can't go to the bars."

Whether you are a minor, or of the legal drinking age and living in the residence halls you are encouraged by University and the staff of the residence halls to be responsible not only in your own drinking habits, but of those around you.

Will new drinking law dent off-campus parties?

Charles Keller
News Reporter

On November 3, 1983, Govenor Earl signed into law Assembly Bill 260 (1983) into effect. A bill that changed the legal drinking age from 18 to 19 years old. As a result of this new law, for the first time, incoming freshman - for the most part- are unable to enter the local bars and liquor stores.

> They can't come in with people who are buying alcohol
> —Gale Davis, Owner, Ajax Liquor

Gale Davis, owner of Ajax Liquor Store, said her biggest problem with minors is that "They just don't understand the law. They can't come in with people who are buying alchohol." She has also noticed an increase in the number of attempts of false I.D. cards being used. Davis said that most cards come from Illinois, Wisconsin cards are harder to fake. Davis says that only" proper and legal" I.D.'s are being accepted.

"Everyone has been good about being carded, because we card everybody," stated Davis. "sometimes students say 'don't you remember me', but with all the students on campus its hard to remember them all at first."

Ajax business has been "very close to last year," according to Davis. "We've lost the trade we would normally get from the incoming freshmen, but other factors are increasing to maintain our trade." These other factors include the new tougher O.W.I.(operating while intoxicated) laws.

Adults are drinking more at home now, they are afraid to drive to the bars for fear of being picked up on the way home.

Tim Grozdanich, who has worked at Jim's Spirit Shoppe for two years, has seen a "slight decrease" in sales. His biggest problem with minors has been people trying to buy without proper I.D. So far this year he has had to turn away 5 or 10 people because they had no proper I.D.

According to Campus Police Supervisor Robert E. Hoage, Protective Services has no authority over off campus affairs. But some laws that effect minors drinking are Chapter 18.06 of the Universty of Wisconsin Administration Code that states,"Use or Posession of Intxicating Liquors" on university property by minors. The fine for this is $77.50. A minor is considered the age of 18-19 years old. State Statute 125.07 deals with minors(under 18 years old). The fine for juveniles is 50 dollars for the first offense, 100 dollars for the second, and 150 dollars for the third. It is possible to lose your drivers license as a juvenile. The presence of any alcohol on a subject's breath is probable cause for arrest.

"The problem with under aged adults is much worse this year," Hoage said. "We have twice as many under age persons on campus as last year."

Campus Security are not the only people minors pose a problem to. Off campus houses are also affected. Brian, a resident of a local well-known party house, says his whole house is unsure what to do about having parties. "We have to," he said, "We just can't take the risk of getting caught with minors drinking."

Opinions

Editorial

Student Center a first step but fieldhouse deserves equal attention

In his address to the faculty and staff of this university marking the start of a new academic year, UW-Stout Chancellor Robert Swanson elaborated on the "new" Stout. He believes that there exists a type of school spirit "for which I don't need to provide incentives. It's a quiet spirit, perhaps better called pride and responsibility. It's associated with being an established, confident institution. It would be difficult not to have pride in our physical surroundings today. [We now have] what may be the only completely new student center in the country. Our grounds are fantastic. Every nook and cranny holds a flower bed. So many of our labs and rooms are newly remodeled."

The new student center, which we believe is a standard that all others can be compared by, is a welcome change compared to its predecessor which was designed to accommodate a maximum of 3500 students while the university's enrollment has grown to approximately 7300.

We agree with the chancellor that we have much to be proud of. And not only in facilities, but in staff and curriculum as well.

But let us not be lulled into a false sense of security by what we now have. Students and staff alike should strive to not only maintain our respected position in academia, but push it to new heights. And in relation to facilities, while our new student center is a blessing, it is not yet enough.

We should not forget that we have a fieldhouse which is, in many ways, a UW-system embarrassment.

A fieldhouse whose bleachers were previously condemned.

A fieldhouse whose track is in such shameful condition that practically no other school in the conference will compete on it.

Let us turn our pride in our school into constructive energy that will enable us to repair and expand the fieldhouse. In the very near future our state legislators will decide if fieldhouse money for this university should be allocated in the next state budget.

Write your elected representatives and let them know that we are in dire need of these much needed funds.

Let's all make Stout not only a "new" university, but a "complete" university.

My final word

What about philosophy?

Rich Langberg

No doubt you've heard the saying, "the students of today are the leaders of tomorrow," or something similar. Come the year 2000 or so, you and I will be well into our lives and may be leaders. Leaders of what? If you would ask a graduating senior such as myself, the answer would probably be a leader in industry.

UW-Stout prepares you well for your chosen field, there is little doubt of that. Its reputation as a "hands on" University is backed up by some solid placement figures. In my major, Hotel and Restaurant Management, well over 90 percent of the seniors looking for jobs find them. As graduates of Stout, we pretty much meet the demands of the on-campus recruiters.

But I have no desire to remain as an entry-level manager for very long. With all these people getting jobs at that same level, what will seperate us when it comes time for promotion? To be sure, on the job performance is a key element, but there is mounting evidence that your general education is also a big factor.

Many Chief Executive Officers today prefer that their employees have a well-rounded educational experience. Ironically, personnel managers in those same companies would like to have graduates with specific skills. So it is possible that your choice of classes now could affect your level of employment later in life.

It would be difficult, I think, to convince students today of the need for a broad educational base. With out-of-state tuition and costs averaging over $5,000 per year nationally and faced with large debts upon graduation, students can't be faulted for pursuing an education that allows them maximum salary upon graduation. More then ever before, money is the pervading thought among college seniors.

> With all these people getting jobs at that same level, what will separate us when it comes time for promotion?

At UW-Madison, in the area of humanities, (philosophy, foreign languages, art, history and English) the number of undergraduates in these majors have dropped 10.8 percent from 1976 to 1983. These fields don't offer much in the way of money immediatly upon graduation, but do give one a broader perspective on life.

Similarily, classes in business, computers and engineering are harder and harder to get into at Madison. The business department anticipates turning away 400 students this fall. In the ultra-conservative 1980's, many students have pretty much forgotten that there is more to life then being a successful capitalist.

Back to the fact that some of us will be leaders later in life. It is my hope that a less conservative President will soon be in the White House, and that this country will start to put more emphasis on people rather then weapons that destroy people. Who is to say that you and I can't become a leader one day, and be able to affect that change?

How can you afford to just latch onto a job and ride the political tide throughout your life? With issues such as nuclear arms, genetic engineering and space travel and usage that will so greatly affect our future, do you want to just watch and accept the consequences of other people's actions?

If you channel your life so narrowly as to only take courses within your major and possibly a business minor, it is easy to see what your path in life will be. A well-rounded, broader education will open your eyes, and possibly open doors to higher levels of your chosen profession.

Let's Holler

Rich Brueckner

This column will address many issues over the coming year. The basic idea I have in mind is to poke fun at some of the goings on here in this Siberia of NorthernWisconsin. I like the Siberia reference because it ties in with the cold weather and the fact that we can't get such modern conveniences here as MCI, Sprint, and "call waiting". These would certainly be nice but I guess that we'll all have to do without.

The following is a copy of a letter I sent to the Civil Liberties Union, Milwaukee office. If you have ever been to a party that was "busted" for noise, or if you ever plan on attending a party in the future, please read on.

Civil Liberties Union P.O. Box 18658 Milwaukee, WI 53218

Dear Sirs,

I have been told that your organization is the protector of the Constitution of the United States. My concern is that the enclosed copy of the noise ordinance here in Menomonie is an example of a law that is vague and blatently unconstitutional.

Section IV. Regulation of Noises (1) No person owning or having charge of any building or premises, or any part thereof, shall cause, suffer, or allow any unreasonablely loud or excessive noise in the operating or use of any radio, phonograph or other mechanical or electrical sound making device, instrument or machine under circumstances in which the conduct,sufferance or allowance tends to cause or provoke a distubance or which tends to disturb the comfort, quiet or repose of any reasonable person in the vicinity.

This law carries a hefty $125.00 fine. I have not received one of these citations but I have freinds that owe the city hundreds of dollars because of this nonsense. Don't get me wrong, I have no gripe with the police department. They are just doing their job - a difficult one at that. They are obligated to follow up on complaints and enforce the laws set before them by the city council. The noise ordinance simply gives the police too much discretion. A law is needed that specifies such things as decibel levels and measuring criteria.

There is a racetrack here that I can hear inside my home at 11:00 pm on most any summer Friday evening. The track is three miles from my house! How is this possible with a noise ordinace in town? Quite simply, the law is directed at students and students only. As far as I'm concerned the laws of this land are supposed to apply equally to all. Any exception to this is evidence of tyranny!

I don't want to take on the race track lobby. I might even go to a race if they lowered the price of admission. It is the city council that I wish to address about this injustice. That is going to be a tough fight because quite frankly these fines generate a lot of revenue for the city. I kid my old room mate that the $250.00 he paid in "noise fines" this summer paid for the hole in the road next to his house that makes driving in his neighborhood somewhat of an ordeal.

This town has been legislating against the university for far too long. This year we are going to fight back. Please help us to restore that little item known as the constitution to absent minds and laws of our fine city council.

Please keep me informed as to any actions you may take.

Respecfully, Rich Brueckner

Nobody has to stand for injustice. Just because students do not have enough money to take their cases to the appeals courts doesn't mean that the city council can legislate anything they feel they can get away with. They have higher laws that govern them. That is why we have a constitution. If we believe in it - we damn well all better respect it!

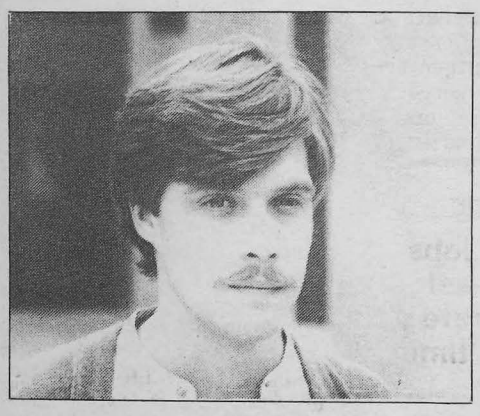
Campus Slant/ What are your goals this school year?

Text by Matt Kalina Photos by Todd Nelson

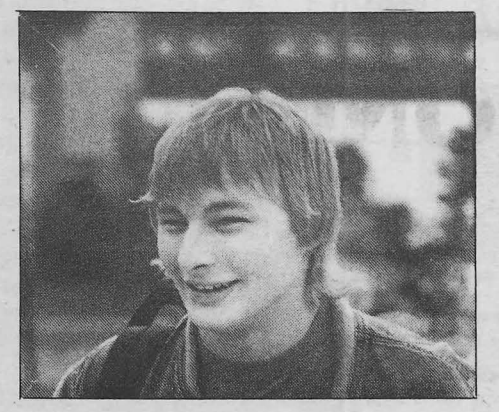


Bob Utke,
Graduate,
Vocational Rehabilitation

I want to get to know a lot of people. I want to really feel like a part of the campus community.

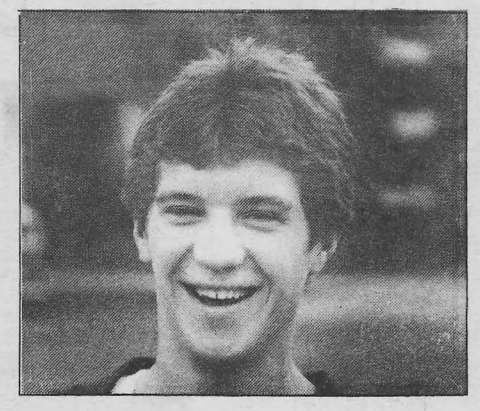
Stephanie Davis,
Freshman,
Business Administration

I want to make it through textiles class. That's my main one. I also want to try to get my English teacher to speak in English. He has a French accent and he's hard to understand.



Curt Swanson,
Junior,
Applied Technology

I'm going to resolve to permanently alter my lifestyle by attempting to drink as much as possible and attend class as little as possible. Also, I'm shooting for straight A's.



Barry Larson,
Junior,
Packaging

I want to set my priorities straight this year. My main objective is to party righteously every chance I get. Also, I'm proud of my killer attendance so far. It's hard to believe, but I've been through a whole week of school without blowing off a single class.

Inventor Conference

UW-Stout's annual "Northwoods Inventors Conference" will be held in the Memorial Student Center Friday and Saturday, October 18 and 19. Workshops on the 18th will deal with "How to Plan Your Own Business," "Where to Look for Assistance," "Idea Generation" and "Selling Your Idea to Someone Else."

Sessions on the following day will include "How to Finance Your Idea," "To Patent or Not to Patent" and the seminar will end with a special workshop entitled, "Success Stories and Wrap-up," in which inventors who have successfully marketed their ideas will share their stories.

Pre-registration (before Oct. 1) is $45, after which the price goes up to $50. More information can be obtained from Stout's Office of Continuing Education. The phone number is 800-22-STOUT inside Wisconsin and 800-45-STOUT outside the state.

Nuclear Waste Symposium

On September 27 and 28, the Wisconsin Radioactive Waste Review Board will sponsor the North Central Regional Conference on High-Level Nuclear Waste at UW-Superior, in Superior, Wis.

The Department of Energy is looking for two sites to deposit nuclear waste in the U.S., one of which will probably be located in Wisconsin, Minnesota or Michigan. Citizens, local governments and Indian Tribes from the North Central region will be at the conference to represent their views.

In order that no one be prevented from attending, there will be no registration fee for the conference. Lodging is available for $10 per night. To register or for more information, contact James Lund at 715-394-8439.

UW Dorms Overcrowded

Students at a number of UW-System schools are being placed in alternative housing this fall due to the overcrowding of the dormitories. At UW-Whitewater, 22 students are in the Sherwood Forest Inn, enjoying privileges like free TV, but unable to hang up any posters. Another 130 students are living in residence hall lounges for the semester.

UW-Madison, which began school this week, looks to have 135 students placed in some kind of temporary housing. If you really want to live in a dorm right away, try UW-Superior. With an enrollment of just over 2,000, one of the dorms has been shut down due to a lack of residents.

Student Senate Notes

The Stout Student Association (SSA) received four applications for the vacant position of Vice-President of Legislative Affairs (VPLA) and two for the position of Minority Affairs Representative. There will be a search and screen committee set up that will work in the next three days to bring back a recommendation for the VPLA position. The Senate will accept applications for the Minority Affairs position through midnight, September 10.

SSA urged all students to attend the "Take Back the Night" benefit dance Thursday, September 5. Tickets are $2.50, and can be purchased from any SSA senator. There will also be a movie shown on Sept. 5 and 6 at noon entitled "The Power Pinch." It will be shown in the White Pine room of the Memorial Student Center.

There will be three workshops held both the 5th and 6th, all in the White Pine room. They all tie in with the theme of the event, Women's Enpowerment." For more information, please contact the SSA office.

Library eliminates card catalog; Students forced to use A.L.I.S.

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Another sign of the computer age has become evident on the UW-Stout campus. The Library Learning Center (LLC) has recently disposed of it's card catalog and switched over to an automated system, becoming one of the first libraries in the nation to do so.

This system is called the Automated Library Information System, or A.L.I.S., and was first installed in January 1983. For the past year and a half, A.L.I.S. and the card catalog have been parallel systems, providing the same information as the computer system was tested for reliability. Early in August, A.L.I.S. was deemed ready and the card catalog was removed. This disposed of over 4,000 pounds of paper and freed up more then 600 square feet of space.

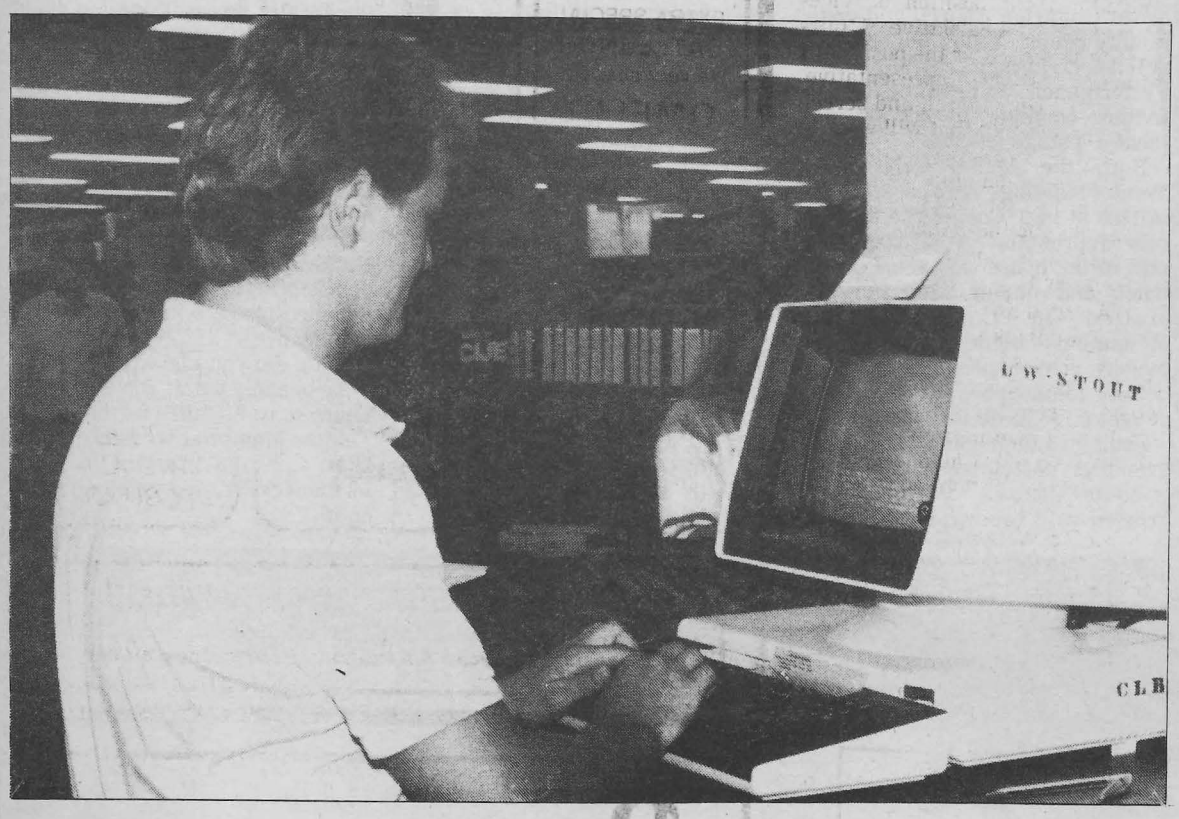
Joe Jax, LLC Director said, "The card catalog has so much rigidity. It's been a trusty merchant of bibliographic information, but in modern technology, it's outdated."

"When you think about it, it's remarkable," said Jax, refering to the fact that A.L.I.S. has been operating 99.3 percent of the time since it began. Although A.L.I.S. isn't perfect, it has many advantages over the card catalog. Listings that come up on the computer screen indicate whether the book or other resource is ordered for purchase, checked out, placed on hold or on the shelves. Because people won't have to search the stacks or ask a librarian about the status of a resource, their time will be spent more efficiently.

A.L.I.S. operates almost 24 hours a day, and as a result, information can be obtained even when the library is closed. In addition, many people can have access to the same information at a given time, using the 41 terminals in the library. The residence hall terminals and personal computers can also be made compatable with the system.

Another advantage of A.L.I.S. is that it saves time and money. Since student workers won't have to spend 10-15 hours a week filing the cards, they will be able to work on other projects. Card purchases and the cost of labor to file as many as five cards for each book cost the library about $4,000 each year.

The 72-drawer units that house the cards cost $5,000 apiece and use a considerable amount of floor space. The space gained form the catalog removal has been used for more terminal space and additional seating. The cards are being recycled and the drawer units are being sold.



NO MORE CARD FILES— Go ask A.L.I.S. - I think she'll know. Junior George Hunt tests out the Library Learning Center's automated information system, A.L.I.S. The system replaces the traditional card catalog files. (Stoutonia photo by Eileen O'Neil)

Desperate/ Seeking tenant's rights

Feature

Dear Patty,
Landlord Tenant Rep,

I'm about ready to move into an apartment and the owner wants me to sign a lease. I'm a psychology major with little experience/interest in legal documents. The lease looks like it was written in Greek! Who can I talk with to get an understanding of this lease?

Signed, About to be Lease Fleeced!

Dear Lease Fleeced,

You could consult with the Sig Tau Greek council. However, you might not get too far. My sincere suggestion to you before your John Hancock goes down is to consult and inspect the lease. Read everything carefully. Be sure that all blank spaces are filled in the terms that you have agreed to. You may find legal assistance by bringing your lease to your Landlord Tenant Representative at the Stout Student Association or by consulting an attorney. An attorney will charge a minimal fee or nothing for the first 1/2 hour of consultation to aid you in your inspection.

Make sure that all promises are included in your lease: You may do this by attaching a list of promises made by the landlord and signed by him or her!

Any agreement and responsiblities should be spelled out in writing and signed by both the landlord and tenant. Keep your copy of the lease in a safe place you can get at when you need to.

P.S. Don't forget your check-in list.

Remember if you have a question you feel would benefit an off campus tenant or just want to relieve some frustration--drop it off in the SSA office at your friendly Landlord Tenant Rep's desk.

Ghosts of the past haunt Menomonie

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

While in Menomonie do you pass by ghosts on your way to class or while walking down Main Street? Ghosts of the past do exist in the form of exquisite architecture, intricately carved stone and unique relics of days of old. These elements are contained in such buildings as the Mabel Tainter Memorial and the Louis Smith Tainter House.

History behind these buildings and the people who built them is intermixed and related to the beginnings of what is now UW-Stout.

Back in the 1890's the population of Menomonie was about 8000, approximately equal to the number of students now enrolled at Stout. Menomonie was not just another midwestern town. According to Rosanne Johnson, Campaign Manager for Capital Campaign Toward - Century II, this town was the "social hub" of the elite and wealthy, even more popular than the nearby Minneapolis and St. Paul.

During this extravagant era, wood was the king and the proprietors of the Knapp, Stout & Co., Company were living off its harvest. At its peak of production, the lumbering company was the largest in the world. It employed 4000 workers, controlled one million acres, twelve towns and three local governments.

Among the lumber barons of the company were the partners. Henry Stout and John Knapp and silent partners William Wilson and Andrew Tainter. According to facts compiled by Donald Steffen, editor of University Relations, James Huff Stout was the son of Henry Stout. He began a manual training school in the 1890's which led to the development of the University of today.

Andrew Tainter came to Wisconsin from New York in the 1850's. He began cutting lumber for the Knapp, Stout & Co., Company. Soon the company owed him so much money that they brought him into the business as a silent partner. Tainter was a steamboat captain and made sure the lumber made its way down the Red Cedar River.

Mary Poskin was the first wife of Tainter. Poskin was a Chippewa Indian princess, Daylight Beyond. Due to cultural differences, Tainter and Poskin separated. She returned to her reservation while Tainter kept their children in Menomonie.

Tainter hired Bertha Lucas Lesure to look after his children. Lesure was a widow with children of her own. Tainter soon married this woman and they had five children of their own: Louis, Ruth, Irene, Mabel and Fanny.

Ruth and Irene died very young. Mabel died at the age of 19, of what is speculated appendicitis, but which the death certificate declares as "cancer of the side". The Mabel Tainter Memorial Theater located on Main Street stands in memory of this young girl.

Louis Smith Tainter was given the gigantic home which is located on north campus as a wedding gift. He married a Californian, Effie Crouch.

Andrew Tainter hired the Buffington Architectural Firm of Minneapolis to build both the theater and house. The Buffingtons in turn hired Harvey Ellis to design the buildings.

Ellis was an immensely talented designer educated in Paris, France. Although he was prone to drink and distractions, the firm hired him. This man had a major influence upon midwestern architecture of the 1890's.

Richardsonian Romanesque is the official style of both the theater and the house. Carved sandstone from the Dunnville quarry makes up the exterior of both of the buildings.

Originally the theater's exterior was a dark cream and has weathered to today's black color. The headstone on the front entrance was carved to form the head of a boat in honor of Captain Tainter, a steamboat operator.

Walking into the auditorium itself, is like entering the contents of a jewel. Walls are hand-stenciled, balconies are dressed with fine velvets and glass, jewel-like forms decorate the stage. A butterfly curtain covers the stage, the only one left in the United States.

Not only was the memorial building a theater, but also served as an Unitarian Church and community center. Today the building still has its library - reading room. Performances and community activities continue to occupy the theater's stage.

Both the Mabel and Louis Tainter buildings were constructed in 1889 to 1890. Cost of the theater was approximately $125,000 and cost of the house was $7400. Electricity and running water were installed in the buildings. Menomonie incorporated these modern conveniences in 1883 even before Minneapolis or St. Paul caught on to these luxuries.

Louis Tainter's home, with all its grandeur, entertained many well-to-do of the era. Visitors were greeted with tapestries lining the sidewalks. Entertainers who performed for social events were the top singers and orchestras of the age.

Inside the home is a large entrance room. A staircase leads the visitor to an expansive conservatory overlooking the interstate of rivers. The house has ten fireplaces, six full baths, two dining rooms and quarters for family members and servants.

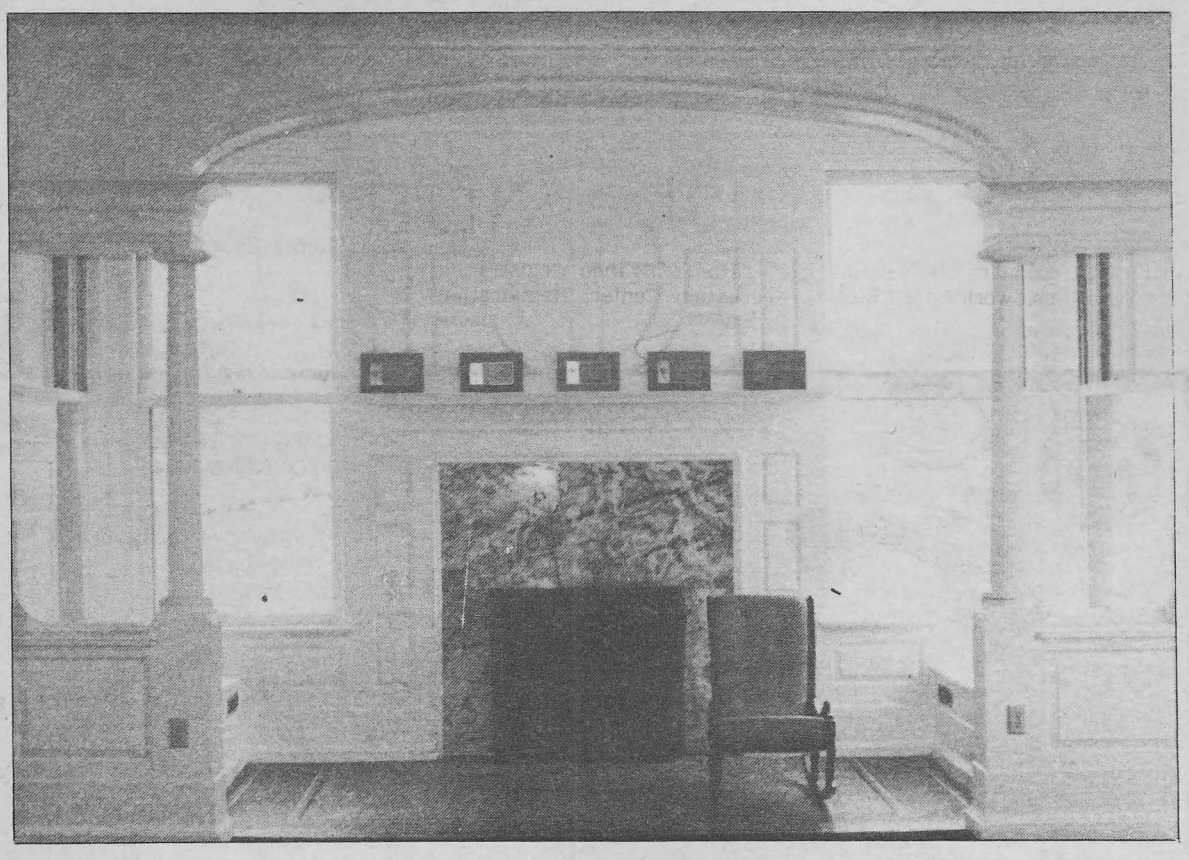
Ellis designed curved solid oak doors in a few of the rooms. This concept was considered achitectually impossible at the time.

While money was being raked in, the land was being striped of its wood resources. By 1902 nothing was left to cut. Louis Tainter and his family moved to San Francisco then to Boston, always in the lumbering business.

Paul Wilson, also an heir of the lumbering company, moved into the Tainter house. They, too, lived high, but without the woods, their income decreased rapidly. Dunn County seized the property for back taxes of $100. After a few years, Stout State University purchased the building for $9000.

Now the grand home is used for offices for the University Alumni, Foundation and Forward Wisconsin. Being on the National Registry of Historical Sites, the interior is being restored to its original state of elegance.

Little did you know these ghosts were peaking out at you everyday. Tours may be taken at the Mabel Tainter Memorial on weekdays at 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. and performances are always taking place on its stage.



HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS— The Louis Tainter house boasts of 10 fireplaces. Natural light accents the many graceful arches throughout the building. Stoutonia photo by Eileen O'Neil)

Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra to perform for Stout

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Lovers of fine music will have a rare opportunity to hear the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra in concert at Johnson Fieldhouse, Wednesday, September 18. Performance time is 8 p.m. This event is sponsored by UW-Stout Performing Arts Commission.

The program includes a performance by guest artist Jerome Franke, who will perform the Violin Concerto No. 2 of Wieniawski.

According to Peter Davis of the New York Times, the Milwaukee Symphony is "a first-class orchestra." The Symphony's Carnegie Hall appearance also won praise from New Yorker critic Winthrop Sargeant. He wrote that the Milwaukee Symphony is "as beautifully trained and subtly coordinated as the finest in the land."

The symphony was founded in 1959 and has grown at an astonishing rate to a technical mastery and maturity unexpected from a relatively new orchestra.

Part of their success is due to their current conducting team. Lukas Foss is the present Music Director and Principal Conductor. Foss is also an accomplished composer and pianist. He studied with Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Chicago Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky, of the New York Philharmonic.

Foss has appeared as guest conductor of every major American orchestra, as well as the Berlin Philharmonic, the Leningrad Symphony, and the Tokyo Philharmonic.

Foss is in his final season as Principal Conductor. He will hand over the baton to current Principal Guest Conductor Zdenek Macal. Foss will continue as Conductor Laureate and devote further time to composition.

A further strength of the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra is Associate Conductor Jo Ann Falletta. Falletta is only one of two women holding important posts with major American orchestras. She is a doctoral candidate at the prestigious Juilliard School. An accomplished flutist and classical guitarist, she also teaches at Queens College and Mannes School of Music.

Falletta has won the two significant American conducting competitions, the Toscanini and Leopold Stokowski Conducting competition. She is currently music director of the Queens Philharmonic and the Denver Chamber Orchestra.

The Milwaukee Symphony plays over 180 concerts each year, and their broadcast network extends to 230 U.S. cities.

The program in Menomonie will open with Aaron Copland's Fanfare for the Common Man. It will continue with Barber's Adagio for Strings and guest artist Franke, performing the Violin Concerto No. 2 of Wieniawski. After the intermission, the orchestra will conclude with Beethoven's Symphony

Tickets are available through the Service Desk in the Student Union. The student price is $2 and non-student price is $4. The concert is funded through Arts Midwest with additional funds from the Wisconsin Arts Board and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Quotes quench readers' thirst; provide wisdom, humor and faith

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

"The Nation that controls magnetism, controls the universe," -- Dick Tracy

Isn't it the truth.

There have been several dozen books of quotations printed in the English language. Some are pompous, righteous and virtuous. Others are full of cocktail party cliches and one-line wisdom. A few contemporary volumes are pithy and packed with the liberating bluntness of current opinions.

Readers of books of quotations are put before a rapid-fire exposure to new ideas, funny or depressing, brilliant, maybe provocative. One well-placed quotation can fracture the well-being of a borderline lunatic. For instance, "The basis of optimism is sheer terror," --Oscar Wilde. Or Helen Keller's radical 1910 statement, "College is not the place to go for ideas." Well fine.

Antique quotations can be abused for comic relief. Shakespeare can be obscure enough to modern readers, but when taken out of context, new interpretations are possible. "Screw your courage to the sticking place," has a new tone for a new age.

The contradictions between different thinkers can be set up for easy reference by using two quotations. In the Bible, James iv. 7. says, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from thee." This seems to be good advice should you ever see the devil. Beat generation philosopher, Ken Kesey, spins a modern twist by saying, "Resist evil, and as soon as it's gone, you'll fold."

Not every priceless quotation is easy to understand. That verbal contortionist, President Dwight Eisenhower once made a statement that will live forever as one of the great semantic puzzles, "Things are more like they are now than they ever were before." I like Ike. "The mistake you make is trying to figure it out," -- Tennessee Williams.

Eisenhower wasn't always so baffling. Near to retirement, he said this: "I think that the people want peace so much that one of these days the government had better get out of their way and let them have it."

Our main obligation is to amuse ourselves.

—S. J. Perlman, Author

Another bit of presidential prophecy comes from that champion of decency, Richard Nixon, who once said, "Sure there are dishonest men in local government. But there are dishonest men in national government too." (Nixon's campaign slogan was Nixon's the One).

A good source of quotations are comedians. Groucho Marx was one of the sharpest wits of this century and has provided many memorable lines. Cigar in hand, he rolled his eyes saying, "Go, and never darken my towels again."

S.J. Perlman used to write gags for Groucho Marx and put his own healthy philosophy into one simple line: "Our main obligation is to amuse ourselves."

The alert writer can turn a quotation on the reader. Browsing through a book of quotations and feeling the swell of growing intellectual reserve, it can be the perfect puncture to read, "It is good for uneducated men to read books of quotations," --Winston Churchill. Well fine. Or this gem, from Robert Benchley, "It is rather to be chosen than great riches, unless I have omitted something from the quotation."

The reader is given a further burn by Susan Sontag in her book Duet for Cannibals, when she has a character say, "Ho Chi Minh said that all people are good, only governments are bad...No...All quotations are good, only people are bad."

Many of the best quotes help explain who we are to ourselves,

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions – more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations – like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics – at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.

Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

Historical costume exhibit explores heritage of fashions and accessories

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

UW-Stout's Apparel, Textile and Design Historical Costume Collection allows students to explore their heritage through fashions from the past.

The collection contains men's, women's and children's clothing and accessories from 1850 to the present. There is also a smaller collection of international garments and accessories.

Many of the items have been donated to the collection from alumni and other interested community members, although a few garmets have been purchased at used clothing stores.

Exhibits are held periodically in room 369 of the Home Economics Building. This display area has recently been doubled in size to house larger exhibits. In addititon, a large storage room is also available for the garmets.

"We're quite proud of the changes that have been made," said Dr. Marsha Metcalf of the Apparel, Textile and Design Department.

Students, under the guidance of Dr. Metcalf, are directly involved in preserving and displaying the 500 garments and accessories included in the collection.

Kaleene Kenning, a sophomore majoring in apparel design, has been working with the collection for two years. This year she is involved through an independent study project.

Kenning explained that the processes involved in storing, repairing and cleaning the garments are very time consuming.

The garments are first sorted and classified by age. They are then hung in various storage cabinets by thick padded hangers. Several of the garments are so fragile that they must be wrapped in acid free tissue and stored in clothing boxes.

> "It's interesting to see how the styles have changed..."
> —Kaleene Kenning, Sophomore, Apparel Design

The students are also responsible for mending and restoring any worn or damaged garment. This can mean hour after hour of precise sewing, according to Kenning. There is also an elaborate cleaning process used to launder the antique clothing.

Kenning says that she enjoys her work with the collection. She is also starting a special collection of clothing from her own family's past.

"It's interesting to see how the styles have changed throughout the years," she said. "I especially like to connect clothing with my family history."

Kenning and the other student workers are also in charge of the collection's periodic displays.

Past displays have included exhibits of hats, children's clothing, evening wear and lingerie.

Kenning tries to make the displays both attractive and authentic. Often research must be conducted to determine the exact ages of the garments and to discover the appropriate accessories and props of the time period.

Kenning often consults a related collection of early women's magazines to gain ideas and information for the exhibits. These magazines are also used as props in the displays for an extra touch of reality.

The next historical costume display will be in October. All students and faculty are welcome to attend. For further information on the collection, contact Dr. Metcalf in the Home Economics Building.

Perfect picnic packing

Linda Konkol

It seems that even the simplest foods taste better when eaten outdoors. September still has a few weeks of good picnic weather, so for a break from the Commons or kitchen, pack a lunch and round up a few friends for a picnic.

Good picnic sites in Menomonie include Wilson park, Riverside park, and the picnic tables behind the Applied Arts building.

Whether your picnic basket is the traditional woven type or a handle bag from Don's Supervalue, there are a few supplies that it should contain: a tablecloth, sheet, or towel to spread on the ground or table, plates, flatware, glasses, serving equipment such as a can opener, paper towels for cleanup, and of course, food.

The food to pack may be as simple as sandwiches or as elaborate as a gourmet dinner. In either case, it's important to handle foods carefully so that food poisoning doesn't strike.

Handle foods as little as possible before serving. Pack the fixings for sandwiches in separate containers, and assemble the sandwiches at the picnic site if possible.

If mayonnaise is used in a salad for a picnic, carry the mayonnaise in a jar on ice, and mix it with the other ingredients just before serving.

Keep serving dishes of food covered when eating outdoors, since flies are notorious disease carriers.

To pack baskets for keeping food cold, line the basket with a heavy plastic garbage bag. Place a layer of cracked ice in the bottom. Insert the foods to be chilled, and pack more ice around them.

Baskets lined with layers of newspaper will help keep hot foods hot. Cover dishes of hot food with more newspapers and a tablecloth for extra insulation.

This vegetable pizza can be used as an appetizer, but it also makes a filling main dish for a picnic. The recipe can easily be doubled for a larger crowd.

Vegetable Pizza

1 pkg. (8 oz.) refrigerated crescent rolls
1 pkg. (8 oz.) cream cheese, softened
1/3 cup mayonnaise
1/2 tsp. dill weed
1/2 tsp. chopped onion
2 to 3 cups toppings of your choice: chopped raw vegetables such as broccoli, tomatoes, shredded carrots; sliced olives; pimento; shredded cheese

Unroll crescent rolls. Place on an ungreased cookie sheet and flatten. Bake at 375 for 11 to 13 minutes. Cool 45 to 60 minutes. Combine cream cheese, mayonnaise, dill weed, and onion; beat with an electric mixer. Spread cream cheese mixture on cooled baked crust. Cover with assorted toppings. Refrigerate. Makes 9 pieces.

The caramel recipe is easy to make, as the name implies; it is also easy to transport to a picnic. The long cooking time causes the sugar content of the milk to caramelize in the can.

Easy Caramel Custard

1 can (14 oz.) sweetened condensed milk

Remove and discard paper label from the can of milk. Place the can of milk in a saucepan or hot pot and cover with water. Bring to a boil, then lower heat and simmer for 3 hours, adding water as necessary to keep the can covered. To avoid pressure build-up, DO NOT COVER THE PAN. Remove can from the water and cool. To serve, open both ends of the can and slide the custard out. Slice into 8 servings.

The caramel custard may also be heated and used as an ice cream topping.

those who are seekers of deeper understanding. After all, "There's a seeker born every minute." (Firesign Theater said it best).

"We are all in the gutter, but some of us are looking at the stars," -- Oscar Wilde. There is courage facing mortality, "Death is psychosomatic," --Charles Manson.

Quotations can provide a sense of faith and hope "I could prove God statistically," -- George Gallup. Or 60's pop music phenomenon Tiny Tim, who once said, "I'd like to see Christ come back to crush the spirit of hate and make men put down their guns. I'd also like just one more hit single."

Quotations can be true; they can be about truth. "What is true is what I can't help believing," --Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr. "Truth is silly putty," --Paul Krassner. "Who ever heard of a black and white sunset?" --Toshiba TV ad.

Sometimes, a good quote only hints at the idea that the truth doesn't fit neatly into words. Jazz musician Miles Davis once said, "I'll play it first, and tell you what it is later." "The truth is beautiful, without doubt; but so are lies," --Ralph Waldo Emerson. "What we need are more good lies, there are too many bad ones around," --Kurt Vonnegut. "A little inaccuracy sometimes saves tons of explanation," --H. H. Munro.

The unattributed quotation is one of the sad inequities of literature. Anonymous has produced some of the great lines in history. Anonymous possesses a profound understanding of the human condition and is a prolific writer.

Among anonymous' more memorable statements: "I was born in Australia because my mother wanted me to be near her." "I will always cherish the initial misconceptions I had about you." "Ammonia is beautiful." "Time is nature's way of keeping everything from happening at once." "I'm in a phone booth at the corner of Walk and Don't Walk."

Wisdom of all sorts comes from quotations from some odd places. Performance artist Laurie Anderson says, "I can see two tiny pictures of myself and there is one in each of your eyes." Heroic cartoon racer Tom Slick used this classic line, "Remember Gerty, there is no such word as 'fail' in auto racing."

For those seeking a sense of direction, "Lord Ronald said nothing; he flung himself from the room, flung himself upon his horse and rode madly off in all directions," --Stephen Leacock. And Woody Allen, "More than any time in history, mankind faces a crossroads. One path leads to despair and utter hopelessness, the other to total extinction. Let us pray that we have the wisdom to choose correctly."

"And that's the world in a nutshell, an appropriate receptacle," --Stan Dunn.

Golf coach anticipates best team ever

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

Head Golf Coach Sten Pierce believes his 1985 UW-Stout men's golf team will be the best team he's had since he began the Stout golf program four years ago.

One reason Pierce is so confident about this year's team is because of seven returning veterans from last year. Four of the seven returning veterans are seniors and the other three are juniors, so lack of experience should not be a problem this fall for Pierce.

Leading the way for the Blue Devils will be Pierce's son, Eric, the team's most valuable player last season, and junior Steve Mongerson, who was the team's most improved player last season.

Preview

"I believe my strongest point in my game our my short irons," Mongerson commented. "But I need to improve at making crucial putts and keeping the ball in play to perfect my game."

Other returning veterans include Eric Galles, Shawn Schellpfeffer, Jeff Spence, Brian Widder and Terry O'Reilly.

According to Pierce there are 23 men trying out for this year's team. Pierce will keep 12 golfers, which will include eight veterans and four first-year golfers. A 54-hole qualifying round over several days will determine this year's squad.

"We're a greatly improved team despite our eighth place finish in the conference championship last year," Pierce commented. "The team really had an off day so an upper division finish this year is a realistic goal for our team."

Pierce stressed that for his team to be successful in 1985 his players will have to learn how to manage their games better and be consistent.

"Accuracy is the most important thing when hitting the ball, not length," Pierce stated. "It takes time and discipline to use a longer club and swing easy rather than trying to kill the ball."

Stout will be hosting the first ever Blue Devil Collegiate Invitational this Saturday and Sunday. The invitational will get under way on Saturday morning at Glenwood Country Club and will conclude on Sunday at Tanglewood Golf Course. Pierce is encouraging everyone to come out Sunday morning to watch some of the Midwest's premiere college golfers in action.

Monday the Blue Devils will take their clubs to Green Lake for the Tuscumbia Collegiate followed by the Stevens Point Invitational the next weekend.

"The early meets are rehearsals and are to give the players a positive experience before the conference meet," Pierce said.

In closing Pierce commented about playing tough courses. "The toughest course is the one you're playing."

SPORTS BEAT

Vikings Cut Veterans: After coming out of retirement to coach Minnesota again this season, new Head Football Coach Bud Grant cut four starters and three other veteran players last Monday.

Those being cut included: starting nose tackle Charlie Johnson, a three time Pro Bowler in his ninth season; starting outside linebacker Fred McNeil, a 12-year veteran; starting free saftey Tommy Hannon, who started every game last season; and starting cornerback John Swain.

Other veterans cut were running back Ricky Young, tight end Bob Bruer and linebacker Dennis Fowlkes, the team's leading special team tackler last year.

Pete Gets His Way: The Cincinnati City Council recently fell victim to Pete Rose mania by renaming a street in honor of the 44-year-old Rose, the Reds player-manager expected to soon become baseball's all-time hit leader.

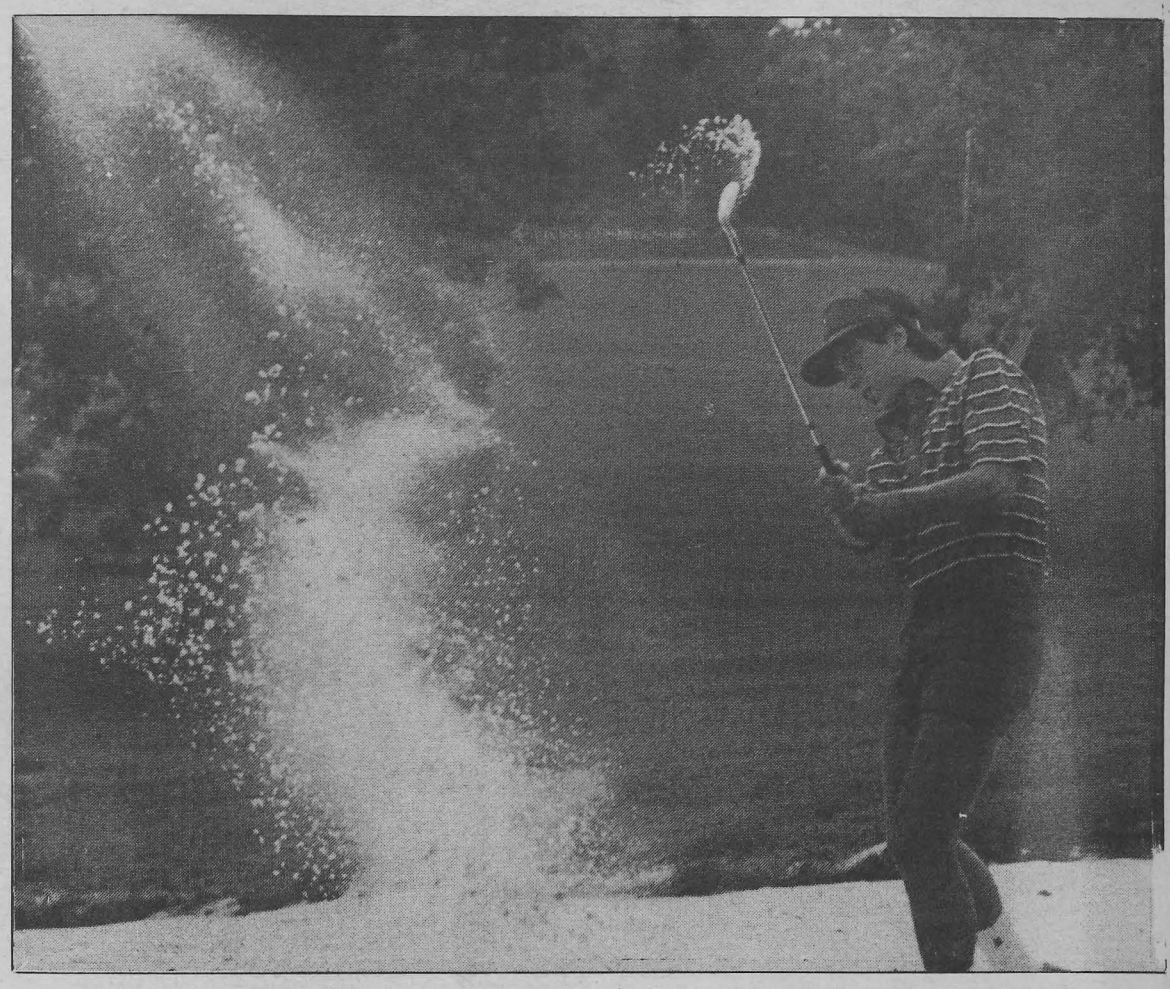
Council members barely passed the resolution to rename Second Street by calling it Pete Rose Way. The city will unveil the Rose street signs the day or night of the record-breaking hit. The unveiling will be followed by a celebration.

Heisman Trophy Candidate Injured: Ohio State University tailback Keith Byars, a leading candidate for the 1985 Heisman Trophy, has broken his right foot and will miss the beginning of the Buckeyes' season.

The 6'2", 238-pound senior was running a sweep and broke the foot as he attempted to make a cut on the artificial turf during an afternoon practice. Byars, who led the nation in rushing, scoring and all-purpose running last season is expected to miss one to three games.

Budd Secretly Sets Record: Zola Budd sliced more than 10 seconds off the women's world record for 5,000-meters last Monday after secretly entering a track meet to avoid the anti-apartheid protesters that have dogged her since she took British citizenship last year.

Intramural Update: Winner of this year's golf tournament in the intermediate division was Jon Nordlund, carding a 39. Second place went to Gary Cooper (40) followed by Greg Stai (43), Jim Larsen (45) and Mark Manoleff (47). Winner of the beginner division was Kevin Jadin followed by Todd Kempinger and Andy Ruge.



SAND PITCHER—
Shawn Schellpfeffer, one of the seven returning Blue Devil linksters, pitches his ball out of the bunker and onto the green during practice last week. The Blue Devils will have to avoid the traps this season to be successful. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Tinman Triathlon has uncertain future

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

The Tinman Triathlon, one of the most prestigious events in Menomonie, took place for the sixth straight year last Sunday morning in Wakanda Park. The event's future might be going under water, however.

No, the Tinman committee is not thinking about adding submarine races to next year's annual event. But for the city of Menomonie to keep up the tradition of running one of the best-organized triathlons in the midwest, new volunteers are needed.

This year's challenging Tinman drew 218 participants and wound up with 205 proud finishers of the grueling course. The course consisted of 1K of swimming, 55 miles of biking and 12.4 miles of running.

"The Tinman is definitely the toughest triathlon I've ever competed in, though.

—Matt Haugen, Champion"

When the race began at 9 a.m. on Wakanda Park Beach, the water temperature in Lake Menomin was a chilly 62 degrees Fahrenheit and the skies were overcast. Despite the gloomy skies and the cold water, it looked as if everyone was still enjoying themselves after completing the 1K swim loop.

Matthew Evans was the first contestant to complete the swim, which took him only 12 minutes, and in a matter of minutes he had his biking gear on and was off for the torturous 55 mile bike ride.

Matt Haugen, winner of this year's and last year's Tinman, set a course record by becoming the first person ever to break four hours in the history of the Tinman.

"The weather was a lot better this year than last year and my concentration was good," Haugen, a Northfield, Minn. resident, commented about his record-breaking time. "The Tinman is definitely the toughest triathlon I've ever competed in, though."

After the biking competition Allen Limberg had taken over the lead and Haugen had closed in to take second place. Second place finsher Andrew Smith was a close third. At the two-mile mark Haugen passed Limberg for the lead and never trailed the rest of the race as he breezed past the finish line almost nine minutes before Smith.

Haugen's training included about three miles swimming, 100 miles biking and 20 miles of running every week. Haugen said his plans for next year are to participate in the Ironman Triathlon in Hawaii, which is approximately twice as long as the Tinman.

In the women's division, last year's runner-up by 30 seconds, Diane Culp of St. Louis Park, Minn., took the crown in four hours and 26 minutes. Her time bested second place finisher Barb Bradley of Minneapolis by almost 12 minutes. Patricia Burns, 18, of Menomonie finished the course in less than five hours for third place overall.

Former UW-Stout athlete Loren Jacot finished third in the men's division. Jacot has been in all six Tinmans. Jacot, who is an experienced triathloner, has participated in seven triathlons this summer and has finished in the top ten in every one.

Another six-time participant of the Tinman is Jeff Peterson of Menomonie. An exhausted Peterson said, "Running up the hill by Wolskey Bay is a real challenge and the biking is also very tough with so many hills over the course."

Only three Stout students and one faculty member were believed to finish the challenging course. The three students were Richard Kane in five hours and seven minutes; freshman Matt Cleary, five hours and 23 minutes; and freshman Kathy Bilse, five hours and 49 minutes.

The lone faculty member tackling the 68-mile plus course was Chemistry Professor Dr. Martin Ondrus. Ondrus, who finished 51st, completed the course in four hours and 41 minutes.

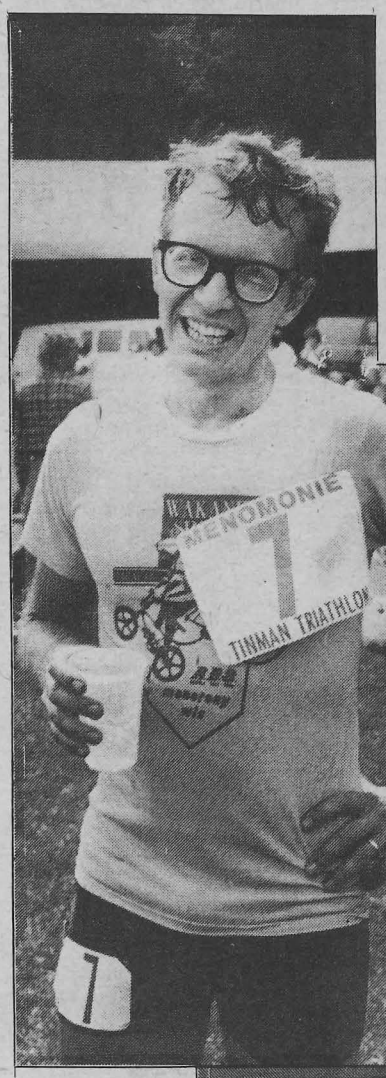
"The running was the hardest part of the race for me because I didn't do that much running in preparation for the race," the 18-year old Bilse commented. "The biking didn't bother me like a lot of people because I had rode the course about five or six times before when I was training."

Cleary disagreed by saying, "I've raced bikes before but I have never encountered a tougher course than the Tinman's bike course." Cleary's speciality is swimming and he proved that by finishing in the top ten of the swimming competition.

As the Tinman continues to be one of the toughest triathlon's in the Midwest, it didn't scare off 61-year old Roy Carlsted of St. Paul who finished the triathlon in just over five hours.

Other local competitors were George Howard, Paul Loderhose, Harry Nelson, Jerry Bilse, Steve Brown, and Tom Bilse.

The Menomonie Tinman Triathlon might not be back next year. If not, at least Menomonie went out in style as the competitors are still talking about how well-organized the Tinman is year after year.



TINMAN ACTION—
Clockwise: The first group of swimmers get set to hit the chilly water in Lake Menomin for a 1K swim. One Tinman participant struggles to climb one of the many steep hills along the 55-mile bike route. Matt Haugen became the first Tinman contestant to cross the finish line in less than four hours. Stout Chemistry Professor Martin Ondrus takes a breather after completing the grueling Tinman course. (Photos courtesy of Jim Becker)

Armchair quarterback

"Big Four" dominate WSUC

Tom Roth

This year's Wisconsin State University Conference might be the most powerful ever. The conference includes three teams that are rated in the Top 20 in recent preseason football polls.

According to the preseason conference press releases, the majority of the WSUC coaches are picking UW-River Falls to repeat as conference champions.

If the Falcons are going to bring home the championship trophy, Head Coach Mike Farley is going to have to find a replacement for his son, who was last year's quarterback, punter and placekicker.

UW-Whitewater and UW-Eau Claire are the other two WSUC teams rated in the Top 20. The Warhawks are always tough but new Head Coach Bob Berezowitz will have a tough job picking things up where legend coach Forrest Perkins left off. Berezowitz will have the chore of replacing 18 seniors from last year's team.

Eau Claire is also expected to challenge for this year's crown if they can stay healthy. No one ever counts the Blugolds out of the race as they have the best won-lost record in the conference over the last four years.

UW-La Crosse will have to replace quarterback Bob Krepfle, who shattered more than a handful of records while at La Crosse. That may not be a problem, however, as the Indians seem to produce quality players year after year.

The Indians have produced more professional football players than any other school in the conference and this year should be no exception as All-American guard Tom Newberry returns for his final season. Newberry, who weighed a walloping 284 pounds last spring, ran the 40-yard dash in 4.78 seconds for pro scouts.

UW-Oshkosh, UW-Platteville, UW-Stevens Point, UW-Stout and UW-Superior will all be hoping to sneak up on the powerful "big four."

For most of the bottom five teams, an upper division finish will depend a lot on how healthy they can stay. Most of these teams don't have the depth of the "big four" so their success will depend on whether or not their first string can stay healthy.

The Quarterback's Picks

Grand Valley, Mich. at Stout-Stout may have only won two games last year, but that's two more than Grand Valley won. That's got to be worth at least a couple of touchdowns. Stout by 13.

San Francisco at Minnesota - There's no hope Viking fans. 49ers by 23.

Green Bay at New England-It's too far away from home for the Packers to win this opener. New England by 17.

UCLA at BYU-Robbie Bosco is too smooth for the Bruins. BYU should extend their winning streak to 26 straight games. BYU by 14.

USC at Illinois-This might be the best game of the week. A real toss-up. USC by 3.

Oklahoma St. at Washington-This is another toss-up, but the Cowboys should run over the Huskies. Oklahoma St. by 7.

Florida St. at Nebraska-The Big Red just doesn't lose at home. Nebraska by 19.

Colorado St. at Colorado-What a great interstate rivalry. Colorado by 3.

Sack the Quarterback Rules

1. All contest entries should be submitted on a 3" x 5" index card inside a sealed envelope marked "Sack the Quarterback". (A sheet of notebook paper will also be accepted)

2. Included on your entry should be ONLY the week's eight winners, your name, phone number and address. Also include the tiebreaker score, which will be the predicted point spread of the UW-Stout game every week unless notified otherwise. One entry per person.

3. Each week's game will be in this column and posted on the Stoutonia office window.

4. All entries must be submitted no later than noon every Thursday of the following week. Get our new $49* software module when you buy an HP-41.

It's a deal that has no equal, for a calculator that has no equal.

Our new HP-41 Advantage software module packs 12K of ROM. One and a half times the capacity of any other HP-41 module. Large enough to hold the most popular engineering, mathematical and financial programs ever written for the HP-41.

You get comprehensive advanced matrix math functions, roots of equations and polynomials, integrations, base conversion and logic functions, and time value of money functions.

Our new module is also sub-programmable. So you can quickly access just a portion of a program, or transfer that section to your own program.

And it's even menu-driven. That eliminates overlays and reduces the number of prompts.

In short, you get everything it's going to take to help you make the grade in everything from Linear Algebra to Physics to Electronics to Statics and Dynamics.

The HP-41 is a deal all its own. Its operating system is so advanced, it doesn't need an "equals" key. Little wonder it's preferred by more engineers than any other calculator.

This is a limited time offer. Call (800) FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658B. We'll instantly give you the name of a dealer who has no equal.

Do it now. The phone call is free.

But our new module won't be for long.

Lady spikers seek to improve record

Judy Nelson
Sports Reporter

As the UW-Stout women's volleyball team prepares to open its 1985 season, Lynda Lee is preparing for her debut as head coach of the Lady Blue Devils.

Lee, a Menomonie native, has taken over coaching rsponsibilities in women's volleyball and basketball, as well as teaching a number of courses for the Physical Education Department as a result of the resignation of former coach Vicki Rees.

"We're pleased that we have an opportunity to hire an outstanding Menomonie athlete into one of our coaching positions," Athletic Director Warren Bowlus said. "With her background, I am sure she will build programs in both sports that we can be proud of."

Lee graduated from Menomonie High School in 1977, where she lettered three years in basketball and track, and four years in volleyball. Her senior year, Lee was selected to the all-conference team as well as voted the most valuable player in the conference in basketball. She was named most valuable player for the volleyball squad her senior year as well.

Lee spent her college years at Concordia College in Moorhead, Minn., then went on to coach at Augsburg College, St. Thomas College, Tartan (Oakdale, Minn.) and Fargo South High Schools.

Her master's degree was earned at Western Illinois University in athletic administration. Lee then went on to serve an internship at California State College in Bakersfield, where she acted as assistant volleyball coach.

Lee is still in the process of organizing, reorganizing and preparing for the upcoming season, having signed her contract only two days before the start of school. "The lack of prep time is one of the toughest things I'll have to overcome this season," states Lee. "I'm still trying to catch up."

Being unfamiliar with the program, Lee found herself a little nervous when confronted with last year's not-so-pleasant record. Yet she's "determined to improve upon that record and gain some respect in the conference."

The raw materials Lee will be working with this season include four returning players from last year's squad, four players from past squads excluding last year, and five first-year players.

Returning players from last year include hitters Barb Carlson and Mari Church, and setters Michelle Espe and Valerie DeVries. Wendy Morrow will rejoin the team after having red-shirted last year due to injuries.

Also returning after a year's absence are hitters Dawn Kreuziger and Becky Horsman, and hitter/setter Karen Mickelson.

The new faces for this year's squad include Shelly Gasow, Carol Kelley, Michelle Lomperski, Sheila McNamara and Denise Zahm.

Coach Lee sees a lot of potential in this year's squad. The team unity and balance of leadership are cited as strong points that will help them develop into a strong conference contender. "The girls are hard workers, and where we lack in natural talent, we'll compensate for in determination," Lee said.

Lee will look to veteran setters, Michelle Espe and Valerie DeVries for the team's verbal leadership. "Mish has good volleyball sense and knowledge. She's more instinctive in her play, which will make her a natural leader out on the court," Lee said, "while Val is a very determined player who tends to set her personal goals very high and sets an example of hard work for the other girls."

Wendy Morrow, a power hitter, will be counted on for her strong offensive skills and aggression at the net. States Morrow, "It's going to be a fun and exciting year. The attitudes are great and the energy level is high."

Barb Carlson, a sophomore hitter, also showed enthusiasm about this year's prospects. "We're working real well together right now. We're stronger than we were last year at this time, and I see a lot of promise in this year's team," Carlson adds.

As far as preseason preparation goes, Lee is hard at work teaching the girls a new offense which she hopes will not only bring good results record-wise for the team, but also "wet their appetites early, hopefully making them anxious and determined to really push themselves and go further."

The Lady Blue Devils will open their season this Saturday at River Falls, where they will play a quadrangular tournament against UW-River Falls, UW-Oshkosh and Bethel College. They will be on the road the entire month of September, finally playing in front of their home crowd for the first time on Wednesday, October 2.

Dickey, Kramer are keys to success

Packers versus Vikings

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

Packer

The Green Bay Packers are now having serious problems with filling the position of quarterback. Earlier this season the Packers turned away the chance to sign former L.A. Ram quarterback Vince Ferragamo to avoid a possible quarterback controversy. The question now lurks is which quarterback to go with, rookie Joe Shields or verteran Lynn Dickey in a wheelchair.

Seriously though, the Pack will have to face the facts. 1) If Lynn Dickey does play, he will struggle with a past history of injuries. 2) Randy Wright never completely recovered 100% from a knee injury last season. 3) The trading of seasoned veteran quarterback Scott Brunner because he didn't "quite fit into the system." 4) Passing up the opportunity to sign the USFL's premiere quarterback, Bobby Hebert, because it was "too costly."

The quarterback situation is not the only place the Packers need help. In the backfield the running game could be called spotty at best. Hopefully, with the return of Eddy Lee Ivery and just-signed USFL standout Buford Jordan, Green Bay can get some type of running game into the offense.

Looking to the brighter side of the Packer offense, the receivers are among the best in the league. They include wide receivers James Lofton and Phillip Epps and All-Pro tight end Paul Coffman.

In front of the Packer offense will be linemen Ron Hallstrom, Tim Huffman, Karl Swanke, Mark Cannon, and rookie Rich Moran.

The offense could be awesome with the right kind of quarterback. Maybe the Packers will spend some big money and get somebody who can do the job.

The defense showed it is adequate at best. The problem lies in the stopping of the other team's running game. Solving this problem depends on Alphonso Carreker further developing his skills at left end and nose tackle Donnie Humphrey getting in shape. With the added help of Mike Butler returning from the USFL, the Packers could force another team into more passing.

The linebackers are George Cumby, Randy Scott, John Anderson and Mike Douglass. These guys look like they lost something since the end of last season when the Packers finished 7-1. Behind the linebackers are the cornerbacks, Mark Lee and Tim Lewis, who do a pretty good job on pass coverage. The strong safety, Mark Murphy, is a little slow Tom Flynn, led the NFC last year with nine interceptions.

The team as a whole needs to find a healthy quarterback who can use the receiving talent effectively. It also needs to organize some kind of running game and be able to stop other teams from running. Last, they need to find the momentum they had at the end of last season.

Viking

The biggest change for the Minnesota Vikings is the return of Head Coach Bud Grant. Grant replaced Les Steckel after last year's record of 3-13. The problem with the Vikings is erasing last year and starting new. The Vikings' preseason record of 3-1 should solve any momentum problems.

The problem that the Vikings have is finding some talented receivers to catch the ball. So far the Vikings have obtained Anthony Carter from the USFL. Carter is a very good receiver and can be a deep threat for almost all defending teams. Back from last year will be leading receiver Leo Lewis, who does most of his damage after he catches the ball.

Tommy Kramer will be leading the offense again this year. The Vikings will need Kramer to stay healthy to have any kind of playoff chance. Behind Kramer in the backfield will be second-year running backs Alfred Anderson and Ted Brown. Also helping out will be Chuck Muncie, who had problems when playing for the San Diego Chargers. Muncie was suspended last year by NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle because of missing games and failing of a urinalysis test. Hopefully it will be forgotten and he can perform as in years past.

The front line will be a tough challenge as the Vikings were 25th in percentage of sacks allowed. Viking linemen Tim Erwin, Terry Tausch, Wes Hamilton, Ron Sams and Steve Riley will be looking for help from rookie Kieth Mallard and others to help prevent quarterback sacks and make use of the running talent the Vikings have.

The defense will be working to improve all over. With the return of Doug Martin, the defensive line will be better, but will need help from whoever Bud Grant can get.

The linebackers are better off with the signing off Scott Studwell. Helping Studwell will be Walker Ashley and Matt Blair. The defensive backs will need some rebuilding also. At right corner will be veteran Willy Teal and at safety will be Joey Browner. Other players like Rufus Bess and other Viking veterans have either lost a step or lost care for the game as they were better earlier in their careers.

The Vikings should definitely do better this year. The question to answer is how much better? That will depend on Kramer staying healthy and newly obtained players fitting into the Vikings system and performing well.

Bjork leaves professional sports to join Stout Athletic Department

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Imagine actually viewing the Pontiac Silverdome collapsing. Jeff Bjork did. Imagine being the Assistant Public Relations Director for the Detroit Pistons. Jeff Bjork was. But now he has cashed in the excitement and glamour of professional basketball to tackle the task of being Stout's Sports Information Director (S.I.D.).

How does a small town boy from River Falls make a dent in the media world? "I got lucky," Jeff says. It just happened that Jeff had all the right stuff at the right time. Some of that right stuff came from his work with the Minnesota Twins, and also from contributing to the sports department on The River Falls Journal. He landed into the Piston job when the previous S.I.D., Dwight Stewart, mentioned there might be an opening. He worked 60 and 70 hour weeks, mostly in dealing with the media.

Jeff's job as acting Sports Information Director for Stout is not all glitz and falling structures, but it does entail a considerable list of responsibilities. He describes his position as the "Sports Salesman" at Stout. He sends out Stout sports talk to the media across Wisconsin, Chicago, and the Twin City Metropolitan Area. Also highlights, scores, coaches responses, and all other aspects of the Stout sports program are his accountability.

> It's depressing to see all of the empty bleachers.
> —Jeff Bjork, S.I.D.

He even writes books. Stat books that is, along with programs and other promotional thoughts. A confessed "Statman," Jeff just completed a Stout baseball record book that encompasses everything you wanted to know about Stout baseball from 1909 to the present — a task only a true collegiate baseball fan could digest, and Jeff is a devoted enthusiast. "I like the non-revenue aspect of it," he comments.

Other angles of his job include sending the rosters and facts of the Stout teams to their opponents, and dispatching the Stout athletic participant's hometown press releases. Presently, he is trying to solve the absence of fans at the home games. "It's depressing to see all of the empty bleachers," he declares.

All this and a part-time business administration student at Stout? Yep. But don't forget that he always has a great seat at the home games. No watching the cheerleaders though! instead he concentrates on the statistics of the game, not the girls, and he says, "I love it."

Memorial Student Center

New facility receives high marks

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The grand opening ceremony for the new Memorial Student Center was held Wednesday afternoon at the northwest entrance to the building. The ceremony marked the beginning of week long festivities celebrating the formal opening of the $7.5 million Student Center.

The Director of the Student Center, Bob Johnson, is well aware of the close scrutiny the Student Center is receiving. Johnson reviews the history of the Student Center and says, "It's taken about six years and it's gone very well, from planning to design to construction." Johnson appreciates the value of constructive criticism, yet he hopes most people realize "The building won't be complete for six months to a year which is typical for most buildings."

The Assistant Director of the Student Center, Bill Siedlecki, gave a positive assessment of the new facility. "We're very pleased with it. The building works the way it was intended to." As he sees the Memorial Student Center, "We very definitely feel that not only physically but attitudinally it is the center of campus and can and should be used as such in terms of the student life here on campus." The transition from the old to the new Student Center has been most difficult for those who felt comfortable in the old Student Center and as a result feel rather lost in the new Student Center. Returning students seem most disturbed by the lack of warmth in the atmosphere of the new building. Junior Mike Melynchuk said, "The Pawn isn't the Pawn anymore. It's just a box. Put real furniture in there." His reference to the need for real furniture was due to the elimination of the booths they used to have in the Pawn.

Senior Robert Kronser also lamented the building's paltry atmosphere. "It's too much like an airport terminal. You check in at this counter and check out at that counter and that's it." Kronser also wished that the dining spaces were more open. "It seems we're more crowded in here than we were before."

Siedlecki said they're aware of the need to decorate the Pawn and they're working with an interior design student to achieve that end. "He now is working on a design theme for that room to make it a warmer facility." Siedlecki recognizes that "Right now, it looks like a surgical operating room."

The reverberant quality of the Pawn area plus the fact that it's adjacent to the bowling alley creates tremendous accoustical problems as well. Currently, they're working with an accoustical engineer to solve the problem. Siedlecki said, "We still have a reverberant building just simply because of the materials used in the facility and the design of the facility." Any resolution of the accoustical and design problems in the Pawn area is far off according to Siedlecki. "It's not going to happen next week."

Many students have commented that the new Student Center appears to have much more office space than the old Student Center. In response to this comment, Johnson said, "Most of the money was spent on spaces that serve the public. I think it appears there might be more because we've consolidated the office spaces so we have everyone together and hopefully we can provide better service to the students."

Senior Leslie Buys echoed these comments when she talked about how much more efficient they were at the student services desk. In the old student center there was only one person employed per shift at the information desk. Now there are as many as three workers per shift at the desk. Buys described the situation at the new Student Center as, "A lot more organized and a lot more compact."

SSA president, Joann Prange said, "We love our office space, but we wish we were more in the mainstream." Prange thought that students were having difficulty finding the office but was hopeful that the SSA/UPB open house scheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 10, would help publicize the office location.

Many students have commented about the disappointing variety of new foods being served at the Grandview Terrace. Foodservice Director of the new Student Center, Vern Rhodes, said it wouldn't be until homecoming that they would be able to offer a special new variety. "We plan on doing a lot with international foods, some Greek food and some Nigerian food and some Chinese food and whatever," Rhodes said.

Rhodes stressed the new efficiency of foodservice in the new Student Center. Rather than traditional one-line cafeteria service, the Terrace Cafe is designed in a "modified scramble" system. Diners choose menu items from six individual food stations — the Bakery, International Club, Terrace Grill, Main Course, Salad Bar and Grandview Deli."

Rhodes spoke glowingly about the improved service to individual customers. Hamburgers are now grilled individually for each customer instead of being prepared en masse and held in a warming table until served. French fries are prepared by the order and served hot which is the biggest difference most students mention according to Rhodes. Many students have reacted favorably to the wide selection available at the salad bar.

The biggest problem at the Grandview Terrace and the Pawn from the customer's perspective is the menu boards. Rhodes said, "They're very bad. I know our signage has to be changed in the whole building for all the foodservice, downstairs and up."

Looking ahead, Rhodes said, "We really plan on getting a lot more services down at the Pawn. Perhaps we can even have breakfast down there."

Rhodes said that no committee had been created to address the foodservice problems at the Student Center. He said that he thought such a committee was badly needed and would be very helpful.

In his analysis of the new building's advantages, Johnson said, "It gives us a lot of flexibility. We have a variety of requests for different sizes and types of spaces so we have a little more flexibility in providing space that the campus may need." The new center also has many energy-efficient features, such as entryways with canopies, the ventilation and air-conditioning systems, and air curtains at the doors.

Johnson likes to point out the potential of the Great Hall. "The Great Hall is pretty much state-of-the-art in terms of what we can do with sound and lighting. It will permit us to do many more and different functions than we've done in the past."

Campus Slant / How do you rate our Student Center?

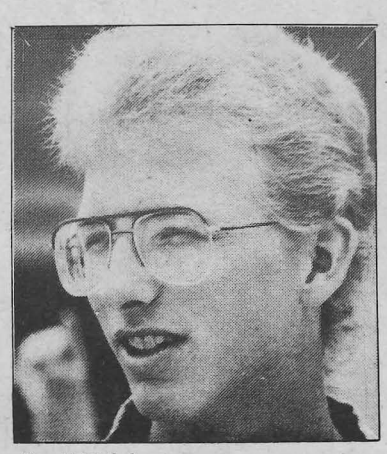
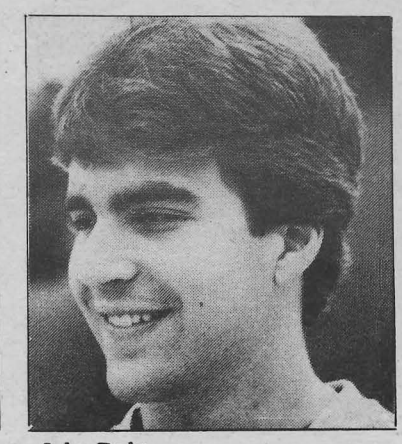
Lavonne Solem,
Graduate,
Vocational Rehabilitation,

It's pretty neon and really bright. It's bigger and more services are there, but I was really hoping that there would be a nice theater for films. It's more like an auditorium instead. I'm disappointed with that.



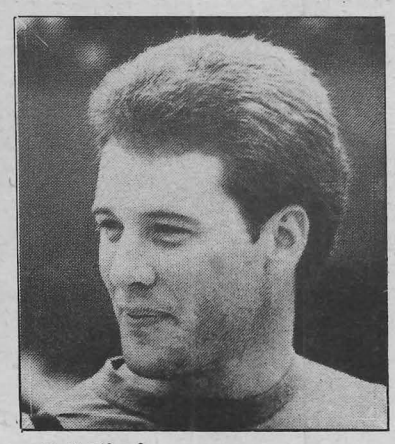
Scott Erickson,
Freshman,
Technology Education

It's like a hotel. You can go in there and do what you want to do, like shoot a game of pool. There are really no waiting lines. If there are no pool tables open, there is always a bowling alley or something. It's located in about the best place it can be.



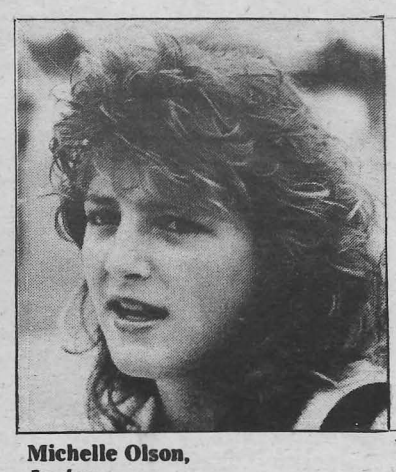
John Dale,
Senior,
Applied Technology

I like the neon signs. The building is centralized, being right in the middle of everything. I think people are impressed driving by the building. But the food is the same.



Jeff Finch,
Junior,
Packaging

The new Student Center makes the place seem like a real school now. It makes the whole campus seem bigger. One disadvantage, though, is that the Terrace Cafe isn't as big as the old Snackbar. That's the biggest problem I've seen.



Michelle Olson,
Junior,
Hotel and Restaurant Managem.

It adds a lot to the campus. I like the new bookstore, but the lines are long. The meeting rooms are nice. The old Student Center was outdated and it couldn't handle the flow of people and what the students needed.

Stout grad adds elegance to Center

Rich Langberg
News Editor

The new Student Center. Some people have said it looks like a mall, others said it reminds them of an airport terminal. Within this concrete and glass jungle is the Heritage room, a throwback to an era when wood was was the primary building material.

The architect behind the elegant woodworking in the Heritage room is Brian Tourville, a 1974 Stout graduate who worked five months to give the room its unique look. An Industrial Education major who concentrated on wood and metal working, he was contacted by Bob Johnson to take on this project.

"It took me two and a half months just to strip the wood," said Tourville. "the wood was so old I had to do it by hand with a soft kitchen brush."

All the woodwork was sitting in a Stout-owned warehouse. It had come from the old College President's house, which had been demolished to make way for the new Don's Super Value. The house was a perk that went along with being the President of Stout, and it was ornate.

Probably close to 100 years old, the oak and birch panels came from two rooms and even included an intricately inlaid fireplace that Tourvilee had to piece together after it had been stripped. After the stripping, it was a matter of moving all the panels to the yet-to-be completed Student Center.

"The big part was lining all the panels up," said Tourville. "I got some help from (Stout carpenter) Lester Johnson to get me started."

Bringing in his own tools, it took Tourville another two and a half months to put all the pieces together. He finished just a week before the start of the fall semester.

Tourville, who had previously done work for Stout in the Louis Smith Tainter building, has been doing this kind of work for almost 10 years. He built his own house and does woodworking for friends and neighbors. Currently, he is finishing up putting wainscotting in Bob Johnson's office in the Student Center.

"In Bob's office, I put the oak pieces together with 3/8" dowels," Tourville said. "In the Heritage room, it is held together with a process called mortise and tenon, which you need a special machine for. That is how they did it 100 years ago, but it is just too time consuming for me to do today."

The wainscotting and intricate wood framework around the windows add a elegant atmosphere to the dining room. Compared with the box-like President's room in the old Student Center, the Heritage room looks and feels like an elegant place to dine.

"The craftmanship is perfect," said food service director Vern Rhodes. "It really adds to the atmosphere of the room."

"I think we are preserving part of Stout's heritage," said Tourville. "With the wood fom the old house and the pictures of the former Presidents, this room is a little bit of Stout's history."

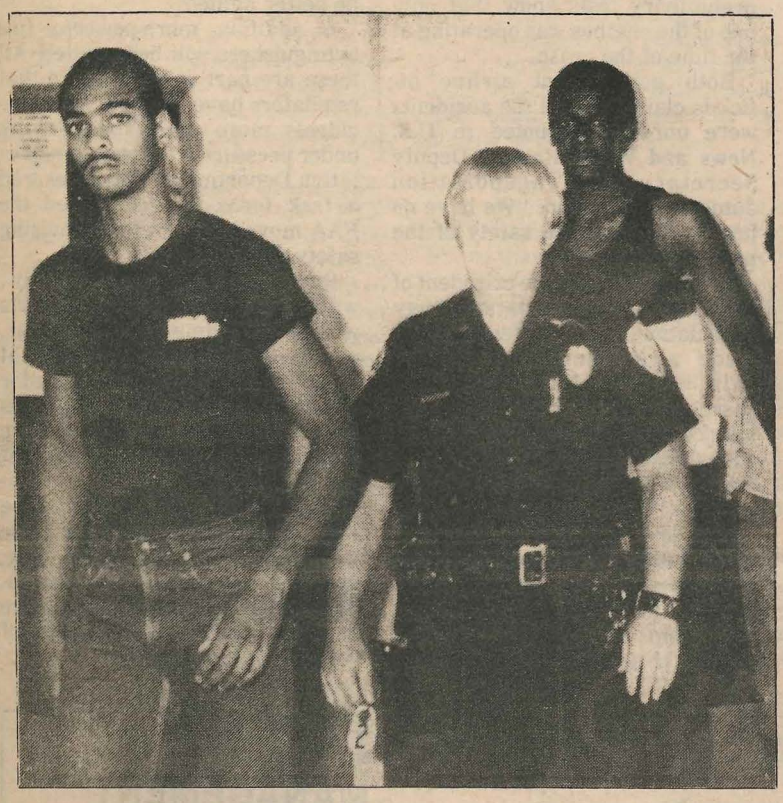
Three charged in campus rape

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Charged with raping an 18-year-old woman, three UW-Stout freshmen were ordered Monday to Dunn County Jail with cash bonds set at $7000 each, awaiting a preliminary hearing this morning.

After investigation by the Menomonie Police Department and Stout Protective Services, the District Attorney's Office issued arrest warrants for Joseph Woods, 19, of Minneapolis; Dennis Green, 19, of Peoria; and Gino Collins, 18, of Burlington, Wis.; charging each with first degree sexual assault and false imprisonment.



STOUT RAPE—
Two of the defendants charged in the rape of a Stout student were led into court this morning for pre-trial motions. (Stoutonia photo by Lary Derrah)

Friday, Sept. 6, on the Stout Campus, Menomonie police officers apprehended Woods at 10 a.m. and Green at 3:23 p.m. Collins turned himself into the Dunn County Sheriff's Office at 1:25 p.m., Saturday, Sept. 7. all three men were incarcerated at the Dunn County Jail.

According to the Dunn County District Attorney, Michael Furnstahl, a 17-year-old freshman, who is a roommate with Woods, was a witness to the alleged assault in Milnes Hall and did not report it and made no attempts to stop it.

The witness will not be charged because Furnstahl said the witness was "confused and scared" after the alleged incident. "Even if he was not confused and scared, there's no law that says that you have to report a crime." Furnstahl said the witness was not threatened by the suspects to keep the alleged incident unreported and that he cooperated fully with police investigation.

The witness told authorities that early last Friday morning he was awakened when the victim was brought into his room at 259 Milnes Hall by Woods and the other two suspects, according to a criminal complaint.

Furnstahl said after the alleged assaults, the victim was left crying in the hall outside of the room. Furnstahl said other students came upon her in the hall and reported the incident.

Police Chief Beety said that the victim was taken to Luther Hospital in Eau Claire. "The Department's policy is to take all alleged victims of sexual assaults to Luther Hospital for a thorough physical examination," said Beety.

Furnstahl said that at the preliminary hearing to be held this morning, his office plans to present testimony to show the court that there is probable cause to believe that the defendents committed the crime.

In references to reports that the suspects were members of the Stout basketball team, Warren Bowlus, director of physical education and athletics, said none were on the team. "As far as our program, we do not have a basketball team yet," Bowlus said. "We have no paperwork from anyone for this year at this point."

Stout Basketball Coach Dwain Mintz said that Woods was "heavily recruited" to play for Stout, but was not a member and neither were the other two suspects because the team is set after Oct. 15.

Associate Dean of Students Joseph Larkin declined Wednesday to give the current status of the three suspects as Stout students but said, "We have determined that the allegation is severe enough that it would fall into the category of leading to the suspension from the University." Larkin said the administration will give the three suspects letters that indicate that the University intends to suspend them.

Larkin said that the Chancellor has the right to temporarily suspend a student immediately if a potential threat is posed to another student or to themselves. "If they are let out on bail, they do pose a threat to another student ... or they may themselves be in an uncomfortable, threatening situation."

Larkin said that when the suspects are charged with suspension, they have a right to a hearing. Larkin said the suspects would be suspended from the campus grounds and in University buildings including the Residence Halls.

Two women assaulted

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Two alleged sexual assaults of UW-Stout women during the weekend is under an on-going investigation by Menomonie Police Officers, reported Police Chief Dennis Beety Tuesday.

Reportedly occurring between 10:30 and 11 p.m, Thursday, Sept. 5, a 17-year-old female student was assaulted in Wilson Park. According to Beety, the woman who had been drinking earlier that night, had a memory lapse and was unable to recall what exactly had occurred. She was examined at Luther Hospital in Eau Claire. The incident was reported at 1:21 a.m., Friday, Sept. 6.

A 19-year-old female student walking home early Saturday morning, Sept. 7 from the downtown area was forced into the back seat of what police reports describe as a large older model four door car by two white males in the 100 block of West 13th Ave. She was then reportedly kissed and fondled by the two men. Two other males were in the front seat of the vehicle. She screamed and fought with her attackers and escaped 5 to 10 minutes later when the vehicle stopped a few blocks from where she was abducted.

Beety also said the woman was robbed of $15 cash and her Stout identification card and that she lost her car keys.

The crime involved was fourth degree sexual assault and robbery, according to Beety. The incident which reportedly happened approximately 1:10 a.m. Saturday, was later reported at 1:24 a.m.

Beety said that the incidents have generated concern within the police department, the community, and particularily the University community. "I want it resolved before people create any hysteria," said Beety.

Remodeling of old Student Union underway

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Years of over-crowded facilities for students taking courses in Graphic Arts and Instructional Photography will finally be over after remodeling is completed on the old Memorial Student Center.

The completion date is estimated for late October, 1986 and the doors will be opening for students in January of 1987. Also moving into the remodeled building will be the Communication Systems Lab, Communications Storeroom, Duplicating Center and a teleconferencing room.

The Graphic Arts and Instructional Photography departments have been awaiting a new home since they vacated Bowman Hall in the fall of 1979 for Fryklund Hall and Ray Hall, respectively, in anticipation of remodeling which would better accommodate them.

After remodeling began it was discovered that it would be impossible to provide the high humidity and temperature control necessary to accommodate these departments in Bowman Hall. Hence, they have been awaiting appropriate accommodations ever since. "These departments have been in 'temporary' facilities much longer than would normally be the case," said Dr. Harry Herbert, assistant dean of Learning Resources and campus coordinator for the remodeling project.

This new and much larger facility will allow more room for equipment which has been in storage for many years due to lack of space. According to Dr. William Amthor, professor and department chairperson for Graphic Communications, the additional space will also permit the development of more courses and, in some cases, additional concentrations.

Applied Technology will now offer a concentration in Communication Systems. This concentration is approved, but is presently housed in an 800 square foot classroom/lab. The room is presently filled all day, every day, Monday through Friday. The new space will be 6,000 square feet — almost seven times the size of the present facility. The additional room will allow for more courses with separations between labs and classrooms.

The remodeling will produce 37,155 square feet to be used for classrooms and labs. Graphic Communications will occupy 25,552 square feet, including the Communications Systems Lab. The Duplicating Center will receive 3,000 square feet, Instructional Photography 8,033 square feet, and the teleconferencing room will occupy 570 square feet. There will also be a student lounge and vending machine area for the students' convenience.

According to Dr. Herbert, demolition of the building's interior is estimated to be completed

Release of last prisoners

Tel Aviv, Israel- The government released the last group of Arab detainees Tuesday whose freedom has been demanded by hijackers of a TWA jet in June, according to military sources. The group of about 130 prisoners are the last of 1200 captives, mostly Shiite Moslems, transferred from Ansar prison in northern Lebanon to Atlit prison in northern Israel as part of Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon.

Thai coup failed

Bangkok, Thailand-Rebel army detachments attempted to overthrow the Thai government Monday, but the loyalist soldiers crushed tank attacks on key army installations and forced the insurgents to surrender, top Thai offiials said. Authorities said at least four people, including two members of an NBC news crew - Bangkok Bureau Chief Neil Davis, an Austrailian, and American soundman Bill Latch - were killed in fighting that following proclamation of the coup.

Nation

Sanctions ordered

Washington D.C.- President Ronald Reagan, in a major reversal of the administration's opposition to economic sanctions against South Africa, announced he was adopting most of the trade and finiancial steps against apartheid sought by Congress. Reagan banned the sale of computers to South African security agencies; barred most loans to the Pretoria government; halted the importation of the Krugerrand, the South African gold coin, subject to consultations with trading partners, and stopped exports of nuclear technology until South Africa agrees to accords on preventing the spread of nuclear weapons.

State

Chippewa Indian rights

Madison- Testimony will begin in Federal Court next week to determine what rights Chippewa Indians have to hunt and fish on public land in northern Wisconsin, a decision that coluld be influenced by whether the state can rely on its key witness.

Federal Judge James E. Doyle said expert witness, anthropologist Robert Birmingham, could be useful to the DNR despite the reservations of DNR lawyers. Federal courts ruled that the six tribes retained their traditional rights to hunt, fish and gather wild rice on public lands in the northern third of the the state when treaties were signed in 1837 and 1842.

Tourism seeks funds

Madison- State tourism officials say Wisconsin had a successful summer without the benefit of the million of added promotion dollars spent by other states, but that more cash would be needed in the future to keep pace with the competition.

Milton Strauss, director of the State Division of Tourism, said his office could use more promotion dollars..."We've got heavy competition from neighboring states."

Perspective

Crash! Boom! Bang!

Compiled by Rich Langberg

Is air travel suddenly getting more dangerous? That is the question that many people are wondering. With five air disasters in a little over a month, public confidence in airplanes and airlines is very shaken.

The causes have all been different, so it is hard to pinpoint one reason for 1985 being such a deadly year. Delta Airlines flight 191 was probably the victim of a wind shear; a violent gust of wind that can toss a plane around like a toy.

Japan Air Lines flight 123 killed 520 people when the tail section fell off and the plane plunged into a mountain. In Manchester, England 10 days later, a fire that took 54 people may have started in the engine combusters that ignite the air-and-fuel mixture.

Famed child peace envoy Samantha Smith was the unfortunate victim of a light-plane crash only three days later near Auburn, Maine. The fifth one, the crash of Midwest Express flight 105 near Milwaukee, Wis. brings the spector of death very close to home. No cause has yet been determined, but preliminary tests show that only one of the engines was operating at the time of the crash.

Both government airline officials claim that all the accidents were unrelated. Quoted in U.S. News and World Report, Deputy Secretary of Transportation James Burnley said, "We have no hesitancy about the safety of the present system."

Wayne Williams, the president of the National Transportation Safety Association, whose members include airline-employee groups, said, "The industry and passengers have become a little too complacent and impressed with the statistics up to now. The numbers have finally caught up with us."

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has moved to institute some changes in the industry. Fire-resistant material will soon be required on all passenger seats. Smoke detectors will be mandatory in the lavatories. Emergency exits will be better lighted.

In addition, more-powerful fire extinguishers will be installed. All these are part of a timetable that regulators have set up to make accidents more survivable. This is under pressure from the Transportation Department, who sponsored a task force that concluded the FAA moved too slowly in devising safety rules.

Perhaps most significantly, within five years many airports will be installing Doppler radar, which is particularly adept at detecting wind shears. This radar is advocated by air-safety groups which also want more air-traffic controllers and crash-resistant seats.

If crashes continue at this same rate, pressure may build for more widespread changes. Right now, however, the public and the industry seem strangely quiet in the deadliest summer in the history of commercial aviation.

Women rally for rights and street safety

Barb Caron
News Reporter

On May Day eve in 1977, 3,000 women took to the streets of Frankfurt, West Germany to protest violence against women. The following year, similar marches were organized in France, England, Canada and the United States. Last week Menomonie held its second annual "Take Back the Night" celebration. The celebration ran from Thursday, September 5 to Saturday, September 7.

The focus of the the "Take Back the Night" (TBTN) celebration was the "Empowerment of Women." On Thursday and Friday a series of films and workshops were presented in the new Student Center. One of the workshops was "No Lessons."

According to Tracy Lea Landis, women's affairs senator and TBTN coordinator, "No lessons are designed so women learn how to protect themselves, think ahead to avoid trouble, learn not to send double messages, and to learn how to take physical advantage of the situation."

Landis also offered this advice to women: "Don't get too drunk. You're easy to knock down when you're drunk. You're easily confused and you're an easier mark."

Other workshops focused on self-defense. Landis feels that there is really a need to work on self-defense for women. "Women need to be able to defend themselves and not be vulnerable."

On Thursday night a benefit dance was held for the West Central Domestic Abuse Project (WCDAP). The price of a ticket was $2.50 with all of the proceeds going to the WCDAP. Music was provided by the rhythm and blues group "The Curbfeelers." Almost $500.00 was raised which will be used to provide part of the cash pad the WCDAP must come up with to match the grant given to them by the state of Wisconsin. Landis is hoping to find some organization to match the amount raised by the benefit dance.

On Friday night the movie "Sandakan 8" was shown in the Harvey Hall Auditorium. The film portrayed a Japanese woman sold into prostitution at the turn of the century. The movie was co-sponsored by the Stout Student Association (SSA), who according to Landis offered unanimous support in the showing of the movie.

"It meant a lot to me to be able to show this movie. I would especially like to thank SSA President JoAnn Prange and United Council Director Dave Kester for their support in seeing that it happened," Landis said.

The week's activities ended with a "Take Back the Night" march on Saturday night. The march began at Wilson Park at dusk and proceeded through lower campus, up Broadway, down Main Street, and then back to Wilson Park.

"The purpose of the march was to affirm women's rights, and the rights of women to be safe in the streets both day and night, and to celebrate the dignity of protecting your own space," said Landis.

Overall reactions to the TBTN celebration have been nothing but positive. SSA President JoAnn Prange commended Tracy Lea Landis for her work in organizing TBTN, and offered this advice to women: "Women should be aware to walk at night with a trusted friend, and to be aware of the consequences that may occur if they do walk alone."

Senate Caucus Leader and Off-Campus Senator Julie May commented, "Our responsibility as student leaders is to better educate the campus. Hopefully through TBTN all residents will become more aware of the violence against women, and get involved in the fight to stop it."

In looking back at the whole TBTN celebration, Landis commented, "Once we realize that dealing with these issues doesn't mean we are down on men we can start using activities such as "Take Back the Night" as educational institutions to help women do what they need to do to empower themselves."

TAKE BACK THE NIGHT— A march on Sept. 7 was designed to do just that. Tied in with the theme of "Women's Empowerment," women from the Stout community marched to show that women must learn how to protect themselves. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

REPAIR IN SIGHT— With an easement granted by the City Council, Stout has the go ahead to repair the path between the Applied Arts and Tech Wing. But when will they? (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

Hazardous pathway needs repair

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The pathway from Sixth Street down to the Tech Wing is the most direct route for many off-campus students to walk to campus. Due to its deterioration in recent years, it very well may be the most hazardous route as well.

At this time, everyone agrees on the need for repairing the pathway. The major question confronting the university is where will the funding come from. An answer to this question needs to be obtained prior to the onset of winter for the safety of the hundreds of students using the path every school day.

SSA President Joann Prange said last week that whether or not UW-Stout will start repairing the pathway depends on the information received by an SSA committee appointed to determine ownership of the property on which the path lies.

The formation of this committee appears to have been needless. Last week Glenn Schuckneckt, the director of Planning and Information Management at UW-Stout said about the pathway, "There's no confusion. The city owns it — at least the section at the top of the hill, the vacated part of Sixth Street representing one-third of the path that comes down to the Stout property line."

Schuknecht revealed that, "The university requested an easement on that property which the city council approved last spring, allowing the university to repair the path and solve the winter traffic problems."

Currently, the need for funding is the only thing preventing the repair of the path. Physical Plant Director Dan Newhall said, "At present we're trying to get the funds to have that section of the hill graded and get the steps removed. We're still looking. I'd like to see it paved. Again that depends on funding. Estimates are it will cost $14,000."

The major concern of students using the path is whether or not it will be safe to use this winter. Rob Mcardle of the SSA committee investigating the ownership of the path said, "It will be a nightmare in the wintertime."

Students' other concerns about the path include the need for lighting and to level the path and make it all one material. Currently, there's no lighting, so nighttime use of the path makes one uncomfortable and may even be hazardous. The top half of the pathway is pretty much black top. The lower half of the path is so badly deteriorated it ends up being mostly dirt at the bottom leading to the stairway to the parking lot.

> "...I'm sure things could be done to make it safer.
> —Wes Stead, SSA

When senior Wes Stead of the SSA learned that Stout had the right to repair the path he said, "We need a committee to figure out how you want to do it. I'm sure things could be done to make it safer."

Any committee working on this problem will need to make their decisions on the necessary repairs soon enough so the repairs can be completed before the winter of '85.

Sexual assaults infrequent yet students still take risks

Last week we reflected on the pride we all share in relation to our staff, school and curriculum. Yet shortly after we engaged in this positive self examination three young men allegedly raped a fellow student.

To say that this incident tarnished Stout's image is, at the very least, an understatement. Even though our primary thoughts and concerns are with the victim of this brutal and inhuman act, we are also saddened by the negative state-wide attention our university has unwillingly garnered.

Although what happened is viewed with a degree of astonishment by some members of the University and Menomonie communities, we should not be surprised. Let us not forget the Nigerian student who, in the early morning hours of June 19, 1982 was murdered in the alley behind the Den Tavern.

Just because this university is located in a small community does not mean that we are immune from the harsh realities of society which plague larger metropolitan areas.

Although we have no "answer" as to how we can permanently rid ourselves of sexually-related crimes we do believe that, as students, we can take steps to lessen our exposure to the possibility of being sexually molested.

First, let us remember that this community is comprised of a "potpourri" of individuals from all over the country and world whose morals may be far different from our own.

Second, we should be cognizant of the fact that walking alone may be an open invitation in and of itself, while "safety in numbers" lessens the chance of uninvited interference.

Third, last week's incident demonstrates that sexual assault can occur "anywhere."

In conclusion, although we will not make a moral "judgement call" in regard to the interaction our fellow students engage in while in a mutually agreed upon setting, we should not assume that we are all alike merely because we attend class together.

The Bottom Line

Happiness is a warm gun

Rich Brueckner

You do not know how soundly I sleep now that the Stout Security Special Forces are carrying artillery. Just by watching television these days one can see the undeniable need for lethal force here. Lets take a look at the new fall lineup.

-FIRST BLOOD III: RAMBO I-94- In this, the third and final episode of the trilogy, Rambo's wanderings lead him to Menomonie during homecoming weekend. Befriended by an intoxicated tech major, Rambo finds himself called back into action when latenight party-goers decide to retake I-94. Armed with explosive arrows, Rambo handily wipes out the entire Menomonie and Eau Claire riot squads. Swept up with the fact that he got to win one this time, Rambo is carried downtown for victory drinks. Alas, our bullet-proof-vested hero is later shot down for urinating behind the Marion Bar by an oblivious Stout Security person, who gleefully pulls the trigger with the exclamation, "Eat teflon, sucker!"

-MENOMONIE VICE-Tubbs and Crocket are sent to bust a townie joint peddler who drives a Ferrari convertable just like theirs. While undercover the two discover that the car was paid for almost entirely by boozeless freshman desperate for a buzz. In the climatic car chase scene, (set to Deep Purple's "Highway Star") Tubbs and Crocket are mortally wounded by Stout Security in a case of mistaken identity. The pusher escapes unscathed, buys some land, and later becomes head of the Menomonie Landlord Association.

-FRYKLUND DRIVE BLUES-Security persons Hill and Renko are summoned by a redneck R.A. to bust some dorm dwellers for drinking and gambling. Beer, games of chance, and nubile coeds being weak spots for the pair, they decide to "have a cold one and let it slide". Lieutenant Howard Hunter, while conducting a snap inspection, discovers the drunken officers in the dorm room singing along with John Lennon to "Happiness is a Warm Gun!" Enraged at the scandal that Stout Security will suffer as a result, Howard shoots everyone in the room and then turns his weapon on himself. Captain Frank Furrillo soon hears the news and immediately heads to "triple cripple" in order to fall from sobriety.

-THE REVENGE OF MAGNUM FORCE- A young blond Stoutonia columnist parks his motorcycle in front of the science wing and decides to "blow off" the parking meter. He turns only to have a 44 magnum barrel shoved up his left nostril. This cannon is connected to a clenched-jawed Clint Eastwood-impersonator who states deliberately, "Go ahead, make my day!"

Telvision is easy to joke about but this is a serious subject. Bear with me for a short anecdote.

I grew up in a small town in Southeastern Wisconsin. When I was eight my dad moonlighted as a part-time police officer there. At the time I had a mutt, that was fathered by a chihuahua-pekinese stud, named Homer who spent most of his time on a perpetual "trim hunt." Someone called the cops on Homer one day. The sergeant arrived and instead of just ushering the harmless little beast into his vehicle, (he knew the dog and his owner personally) he took out his brand spanking new tranquilizer gun and shot. Homer died instantly from the dart. Confused, I asked my dad why they had killed poor Homer. He answered quickly, "Those guys are just like kids: they get a new toy like that dart gun and they just can't wait to use it."

I understand that the secruity people have recieved extensive training in lethal force. I don't care if they spent a year each listening to Joeseph Wambach or even Dr. Ruth Westheimer for that matter. In a split second decision on whether to draw and fire a weapon, NO amount of training can be recalled in an instant. If one of you security people injures or even kills someone mistakenly, we will all suffer great pain. You would have to live with guilt, fear, and hatred that I would not wish on my worst enemy. I urge you to turn in your weapons before such a tragedy occurs a day, a month, or even ten years down the road. Lethal force should remain in the hands of professionals in this well-patrolled community. They are only human of course, but at least THEY aren't out of their element.

Diversity is something we all can learn from

Approximately 8,500 students, staff and faculty have gathered once again for another school year. Each one of us brings unique gifts and talents to share with others. Each of us is both learner and teacher within the university community.

Guest

UW-Stout is not just the place where we work or go to school - it is much more. We have chosen to be a part of this university community. "Being a part of" includes the opportunity to share ourselves with others for the betterment of the community, knowing others are doing the same.

Diversity is an integral part of a university community. Too often we view diversity and differences as annoyances rather than as opportunities to learn. An important part of a university education is exposure to new ideas, experiences and people. Those of us who have been here for awhile know it would be easier if we could just carry on as usual, but new faces bring us new ideas and perspectives. We need to remember that we learn and grow from differences and conflicts, not from sameness.

People are very different. That may seem to be an obvious statement, but one that is often overlooked. We come from very different backgrounds of family, culture, race and education. Add the fact that we have different personality types and one wonders if such a group of people can live, work and learn together. We can if we respect differences and are willing to make compromises in satisfying our own wants.

Judy Spain - Director Residence Halls

When different opinions or values are expressed, we do not have to take those different opinions and values as attacks on our own. People who don't see eye-to-eye do not have to be enemies. We may indeed have to work out differences of opinions and values and learn to live with them, but we need not allow them to become a basis of hostility toward one another.

A university is a place for ideals. It is one thing to hold an ideal of a university community; it is quite another thing to actually live that ideal day in and day out. A university community is always in the making. Being a part of a university must be approached actively, not passively. It means effort. However, to be a part of a university rather than regarding it as "the place I work or go to school" is worth the effort.

If Rich Brueckner, in the Stoutonia column, "Let's Holler"(Sept. 5, page 5) is seriously going to charge ANYBODY with tyranny and prejudice he ought to do more homework before releasing the charges for publication.

Brueckner does quote a local noise ordinance, which "denies ANY person owning or having charge of any building or premises, or any part thereof, to cause, suffer, or allow or other mechanical or electrical sound making devise...which tends to cause or provoke a disturbance or which tends to disturb the comfort, quiet or repose of any reasonable person in the vicinity."

He contends that the enforcement of the ordinance falls upon students alone. He implores his readers to fight back. "Please help us to restore that little item known as the Constitution," he writes, "to absent minds and laws of our fine city council".

Brueckner is partially right. The U.S. Constitution IS a "little" item. Had he wished, he could have read the entire document in 32 minutes, according to one Reading Skills yardstick for the average college reader. Or he might have informed himself enough from the Bill of Rights alone (reading time, 6 minutes) to avoid rendering parts of his charges to be factually inaccurate, specious, and perhaps even spurious? The entire 10th Amendment highly relevent to the charges constitutes but one sentence.

"THE POWERS NOT DELEGATED TO THE UNITED STATES BY THE CONSTITUTION, NOR PROHIBITED BY IT TO THE STATES, ARE RESERVED TO THE STATES RESPECTIVELY, OR TO THE PEOPLE."

Is it not safe then to presume that a law having to do with loud noises in a given community need not come first from the Supreme Law of the Land?

And might Mr. Brueckner and I agree that if I were to play my radio, in my home or my yard, so loudly that he could not hear his radio in his home or in his yard without truning up the volume, it would be an excessive noise?

But in closing I should like to concur at least this much with the Rich Brueckner column. That Friday night race track noise is terrible! The catch is, they tell me, it is County property and as such is beyond city council jurisdiction, and apparently the race track lobby has the inside track with the County Board, so far at least?
Respectfully submitted,

Weapons necessary

Mr. Nelson,

Both editions of The Stoutonia published this fall have contained attacks on the new Protective Services policy which arms Campus Police Officers. I can see no reason for you or anyone else on the Stoutonia staff to be opposed to these professionals being given the tools necessary to perform their duties.

Campus Police Officers do encounter dangerous situations in the line of duty. The September 4, 1985 UW-River Falls Student Voice describes an incident where a River Falls Campus Police Officer was shot at while investigating a break-in on campus.

I am a Sophomore here at Stout and have always found that the Campus Police Officers perform their duties in a courteous and professional manner. I feel that the Campus Police Officers do their job well, and deserve respect rather than criticism.

The Stout campus is a community of 7000. Can you imagine any town of a comparable size where the Police Officers are unarmed.

Paul Peltier

Do you feel endangered by walking the streets of Menomonie after dark?

When I was a freshman I [used an escort service,] but I have been here now for so long that I haven't really been hearing much going on, and I haven't encountered anything, so I feel pretty safe. If you are a girl, you are scared no matter where you are.

Heidi Holznagel,
Freshman,
Fashion Merchandising

Usually I don't go out alone. I'm usually with someone else or in a group. It's very dark down by the fieldhouse and that whole street and parking lot.

Jill Stardy
Senior,

Once in a while I feel threatened at night. Dark places, like around the old Union are unsafe. I don't see them [Protective Services Officers] out a lot at night. They should have more people out at night.

Amy Thiel,
Junior,
Clothing Textile and Design

Near the Commons it is unlit. I don't think that [Protective Services] is paying enough attention to this issue because I never see them around at night. I don't know of any [escort service] for me. My friend carries mace on her keys.

Tracy Gerlach,
Senior,
Home Economics in Business

Sometimes I feel kind of uneasy walking alone. Around Harvey Hall, it is kind of dark to walk through there. I think it's good that campus security is carrying guns.

Desperate/ Seeking tenant's rights

Dear Patty,
Landlord Tenant Rep,

Why are the simple things in life made so difficult? I'm not asking for miracles. All I want is my landlord to maintain his responsibility to keep my living quarters (his house) in basic good up-keep. It's like pulling teeth to get him over here. Half the time I can't even reach him.
Signed, Helpless and Hopeless

Feature

Dear Helpless,
The quickest way for a landlord to reduce cost is to cut back on maintenance and repairs. Poor maintenance and repairs is the largest single problem experienced by UW-Stout student renters.

The responsibilities of landlords and tenants for repairs understate law (Wis. S. 704.07 and MGO 32.13) are outlined below.

1. Keep in good repair all areas of the building over which he or she maintains control, such as the common areas.

2. Maintain all services which he or she has agreed to supply (heat, plumbing, elevator, water or air conditioning). If equipment for these services existed in the building when the tenant moved in, that is sufficient to show that the landlord had agreed to provide those services.

3. Make all structural repairs.

4. Repair any code violations in the building.

The Tenant Must:

1. Repair damages resulting from the tenant's negligent or improper use of the property. The landlord must be given the option to make the repairs himself or herself and charge the tenant the cost of doing so. The landlord's cost is presumed reasonable unless the tenant can prove otherwise.

2. Keep the plumbing, wiring, machinery and equipment furnished with the apartment in reasonable working order, if the cost of these repairs is minor in comparison to rent.

There is no legal defintion of "minor in relation to rent", but repairs costing over $20 could be considered major. Changing light bulbs and batteries in smoke dectors or replacing washers in a faucet are some examples of actions by the tenant that maintain the unity in "reasonable working order at a minor cost."

during the week of October 6, 1985 and construction should begin at approximately the same time. The general contractor for the project is Hueppner Building Corporation of Eau Claire along with various subcontractors including Halverson Bros. of Menomonie who will be installing the plumbing as well as the heating, ventilation and air conditioning.

The budget for the project is $3,120,000 with approximately $2.5 million being spent on construction alone. Another large portion of the budget is provided for design and supervision at approximately $245,000, and moveable equipment at $150,000.

The moveable equipment needed (classroom and lab equipment for the entire building) is now estimated to be $1.7 million, up from the $1.1 million estimate of four years ago; the increase is due to aging equipment and changing technology. Because the Building Commission could not approve any more money for moveable equipment, the Board of Business and Industrial Advisors at Stout have taken on a challenge to assist Graphic Communications and Graphic Arts to raise money for necessary equipment, according to Dr. Amthor.

Joe Kluessendorf, a senior in Industrial Technology with a concentration in Graphic Arts Management is happy with the remodeling of the old union but wishes that he had the use of the larger facilities while working on his degree. "There was a lot of equipment in storage that we never had a chance to experience. The freshmen and sophomores are excited for the larger space, but the seniors regret that they won't be able to use the new facility."

Students and faculty alike are excited for the remodeling of the old Memorial Student Center to be completed. The additional space will allow students to consider new course offerings. Students will also be able to use equipment that has been stored as well as new equipment and therefore will receive more of the "hands-on" experience that Stout is praised for.

Probot invades new Student Center

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Those who witnessed the grand opening of the new Memorial Student Center had the opportunity of a close encounter of the robotic kind.

Probot, the promotional robot who roamed the halls of the Student Center last week promoting the grand opening activities, received a mixed reception from humans who encountered him.

Tom Taggart, the man who is both the creator and performer as Probot, wasn't surprised at all by this reaction. "You get two basic reactions. Either they don't want to talk to a robot because they're embarassed or depending on their personality, they get in there and converse," His overall view of his experience with students at the Student Center was, "We have a good time. We cut up and carry on."

Probot is a robot with mechanical arms and legs and built about the size of R2D2 of Star Wars fame. Every person privileged to meet this robotic cut-up in the Student Center received a Tobor travel ticket and thus was entitled to an all expenses paid journey to Probot's home planet which is only 300 million light years away. Hopefully, those who left on the journey packed a change of underwear.

Apparently, Probot found it hard to be humble. This comical robot liked giving out the ticket to Tobor because then he could tell his invited guest, "If you roll it over there's a picture of the most handsome robot in the universe." Probot was definitely a legend in his own terminals.

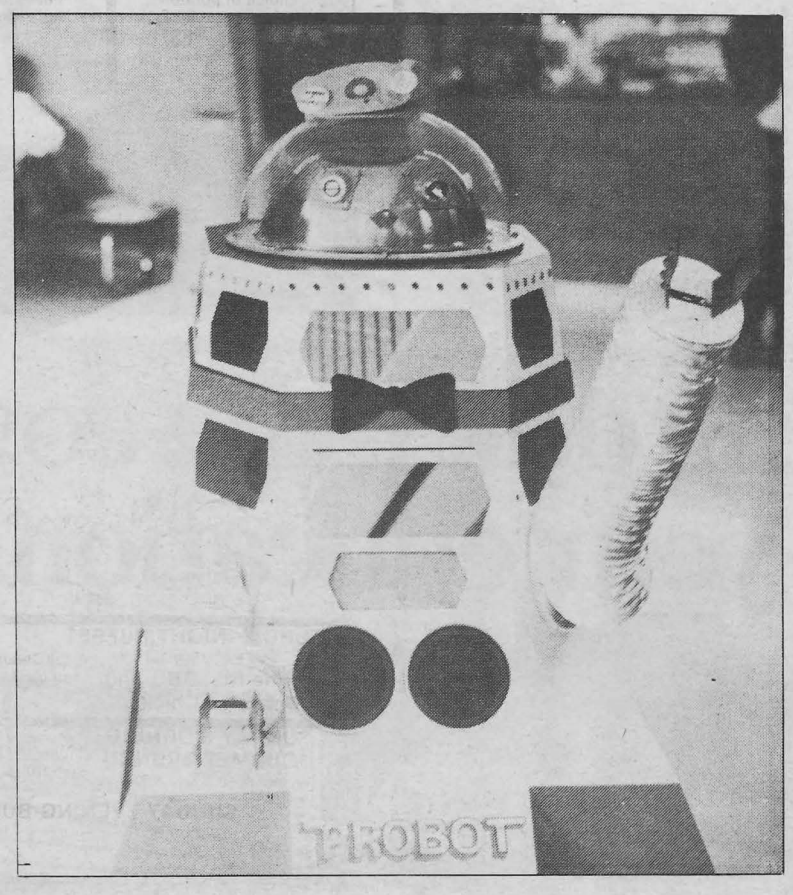
Probot was up on current events at UW-Stout. When he learned he was being interviewed for the Stoutonia he said, "You guys have a handy way with words. You welcome kids to class and the first thing you tell them about in the headlines is the cops got guns. Welcome to our campus. You're going to get blown away."

Thinking over his last statement Probot said, "Actually, I think it's great. I'd rather those guys have them and not need them, than need them and not have them."

To the question of whether or not he had been shot at in his intergalactic journeys he responded, "Only with cameras." One gets the impression that Probot must have been featured in Robot's Quarterly. There were a number of students who said they felt harassed by Probot but the majority said they had a good time with him.

With the reverberant quality of the new Student Center, Probot was difficult to miss. He constantly traveled around the center and when he wasn't talking to people he'd play songs such as I Get Around and the Star Wars theme.

There's an interesting story behind Probot. It started about 2-1/2 years ago, according to Taggart. After working several years as a helicopter pilot in Nederland, Texas just outside Beaumont, Taggart and a friend, helicopter pilot Clarence Cotton, decided to get into a business which could be financially rewarding yet didn't require you to pass a medical examination every six months to stay in business.



PROBOT TO EARTH!—

The way Taggart explains the conception of his promotional robot, "We were sitting around one day having dinner, his wife and mine, the four of us, and he mentioned having seen a professional robot on TV performing at a shopping mall and he said that's what I ought to do."

Once Taggart and his wife were satisfied with their plans to build Probot he said, "We started assembling and gathering parts six months prior to completion and then the majority of it came together in the last four to six weeks." Probot made his earthly premiere last February at a National Association of Campus Activities convention.

Taggart is happy with his business prospects. "It's an appeal," he said. "Robots are in now." Defining what he does, Taggart said,"It's as much education as it is entertainment."

Taggart complimented the new Student Center both as an activity center and a building that is easy to get around. "They've just got something fantastic here," he said.

In conclusion, Taggart said "Entertaining and robotics is really appealing to me. We're looking to turn it into a full-time job just as soon as possible."

The next time you become involved in discourse with an apparent robot who's also quite a cut-up it's quite possible you're talking with Tom Taggart.

Building Commission

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Led by Chancellor Robert Swanson, UW-Stout hosted a meeting of the state's Building Commission Monday. The commission plans to visit each of the campuses in the UW-System during this month. Their goal is to familiarize themselves with the needs they should be addressing. Governor Anthony Earl, the commission's chairman, did not join the tour because he was in Washington, D.C.

Reviewing the situation on Wisconsin campuses, Swanson said, "Nobody visualized that they would get as big and complex as they are today." Swanson's concern was that the campus at Stout grow to fit the students' needs. "There were times when we said, Well, the enrollment will decline again,' and it did not. We're saying that again today and whether that will be true or not, I don't know."

Swanson outlined projects occurring over the next biennium. The rebuilding of the old Student Center into the new graphics arts lab he said, "Will give us a new facility for graphic arts and instructional photography. In about a year's time we'll be moving into that." Swanson also noted that the planned addition to the General Services building has the needed funding and should start construction next spring.

Swanson also used the occasion to point out Stout's plans to add on to the Home Economics building in the '87-'89 biennium. From '89 to '91 they have proposed remodeling Fryklund Hall which has the dubious distinction of being the oldest laboratory on campus.

Looking six years ahead, Swanson asked the Building Commission to consider a proposal to add on to Jarvis Hall. Swanson also took advantage of the opportunity to inform the commission of the need for a new fieldhouse.

Commission members toured campus facilities after their orientation from Swanson. The meeting was not made for the purpose of taking action.

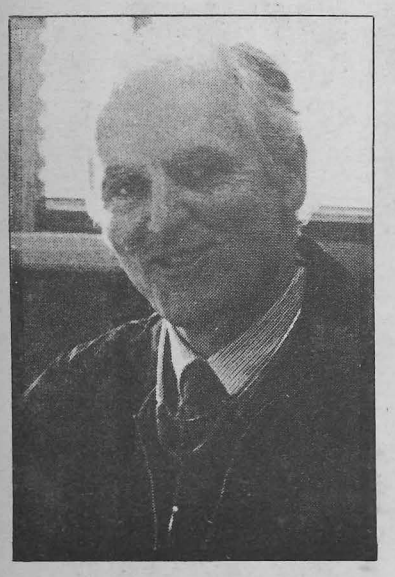
Health Services welcomes new head physician to Stout campus

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Dr. Philip Schleifer has left his successful private practice to take over the position of head physician at the UW-Stout Health Services Department.



Dr. Philip Schleifer

Dr. Schleifer completed his undergraduate work at UW-Madison and UW-Milwaukee. He received his doctor of medicine degree from the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee. He is a registered family practitioner and previously had his own private practice in Colfax. The past year was spent working for UW-Eau Claire health services. He has also worked in the Minocqua/Woodruff area and in the emergency room of Sacred Heart Hospital in Eau Claire.

Dr. Schleifer decided to come to Menomonie because he enjoys working as a solo practitioner and because he likes the Menomonie area. Originally he had decided to leave his private practice for health reasons and because other options would allow him to work under less stressful conditions.

Dr. Schleifer's goal at Stout is "to provide the best possible medical care with the help of the staff." When asked if the current patient load was too heavy for the services of one doctor, he thought it wasn't, but "would like to see the services of a nurse practitioner added in the future." The addition of a physician's assistant would be another option to consider.

There are several health related areas Dr. Schleifer would like to work on in the future. He would like to see more information and help available to students in the areas of sexually transmitted diseases, alcoholism, drug abuse, eating disorders such as bulimia and anorexia, and learning cancer prevention techniques such as monthly breast exams and testicular self-examinations, both of which are especially important for people in the college-age group.

Drug and alcohol abuse is an area of particular concern to Schleifer. "I have always had an interest in drug and alcohol abuse," stated Schleifer. This is evidenced by the fact that Dr. Schleifer has worked on the task force against drug and alcohol abuse, supported by Nancy Reagan.

When questioned about the role of the college physician, some students seemed to feel that his role was mainly to "hand out birth control pills and penicillin." Dr. Schleifer does not feel this type of attitude presents any problems to him, stating that what mattered most was "leaving the students with a good impression" and that by "being a good physician, your patients will have confidence in you."

Students who have already been to the health services center seem to like Dr. Schleifer. Leslie Matthews, a freshman, said, "He's really nice and very helpful." However, according to Matthews, she had to wait 30 minutes with a locked jaw and felt that health services should be "more efficient." Wendi Hill, who went for x-rays of her ankle, said, "He's very nice," and that "he is an improvement over past Stout physicians."

In addition to medicine, Dr. Schleifer enjoys raising animals. He had raised heifers up until last year and presently owns horses. He also said, "I really enjoy the outdoors."

Dr. Schleifer has been married for 22 years. He and his wife Sue, an accountant, have two children, Cathy and Fred, both of whom attend UW-Madison.

Student Senate appoints Keller; praises Landis for women's march

Rich Langberg
News Editor

The eighth session of the 16th congress of the Stout Student Association (SSA) convened Tuesday night in the crystal ballroom of the new Memorial Student Center.

Business discussed included a briefing in open forum by Patti Strassman about a planned SSA retreat to be held in the near future at Deep Woods resort. Goal setting and brainstorming are major reasons for retreat.

In the presidential report, JoAnn Prange praised the "Take Back the Night" rally, and Tracy Lea Landis was presented a certificate of appreciation for her efforts involved with this program. Prange also noted that the bookstore is now cashing student payroll checks. This service is quite an expense for the bookstore so use is urged or this service may be terminated.

Due to recent incidents a committee was formed to report on the maps, escort services, education, and "no" lessons for making the campus a safer place to be. The committee's results will be discussed in open forum October 8.

The Senate then went into closed session as for personal matters called for by Wisconsin State Statue 19.85c. The reason for this was to discuss and decide on the candidates for the position of vice-president of legislative affairs. After the meeting is was found out that Chuck Keller was appointed to this position.

Administrative assistant Vic Sundvall stated in his report that voting for homecoming would done on computer this year.

After some discussion, and a defeated amendment, a motion was passed to penalize groups who overspend allocations. The group or organization will be penalized the amount of the over-expenditure, plus in special instances a double penalty (twice the over-expenditure) will be extended to that group's next years budget.

Sands McAllees reported on upcoming events sponsored by UPB (Universty Programming Board). "The event of the semester" was how she described the upcoming performance of the Milwaukee Symphony Orcherstra on September 18. The concert will be in the fieldhouse and cost $2.00. Other events include the movie "Karate Kid" and the "Bad Boy" concert Thursday night.

University Notes

Convocation Set

The School of Home Economics will have it's Annual Convocation on Sept. 16 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center. The convocation gives students a chance to meet the faculty and staff of the of the School, and also allows the 18 student organizations in the School an opportunity to present their goals and activities. It will be held from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., and all students in Home Economics are encouraged to attend.

Supervisors Training Workshop

A one-day program on supervisor training in safety and worker's compensation will be held at the Midway Motor Lodge in Eau Claire on Wednesday, Oct. 9. Presented as a service by the UW-Stout Vocational Development Center and Safety-Loss Control Center, the fifth annual session will also feature an advisory board of local employers.

Topics will include "True Costs of Accidents and Injuries," "Supervisor's Responsibilities for Accident Prevention," "Proper Job Instruction-Training-Communication," and "Dealing Effectively with Injured Workers Returning to the Job."

Due to limited enrollment, early registration is urged. The cost is $35 per person or $30 per person when three or more supervisors from the same organization attend. The registration fee may be made payable to the Vocational Development Center, and all correspondence should be directed to Jolene Draeger at the Center.

Get our new $49* software module when you buy an HP-41.

It's a deal that has no equal, for a calculator that has no equal.

Our new HP-41 Advantage software module packs 12K of ROM. One and a half times the capacity of any other HP-41 module. Large enough to hold the most popular engineering, mathematical and financial programs ever written for the HP-41.

You get comprehensive advanced matrix math functions, roots of equations and polynomials, integrations, base conversion and logic functions, and time value of money functions.

Our new module is also sub-programmable. So you can quickly access just a portion of a program, or transfer that section to your own program.

And it's even menu-driven. That eliminates overlays and reduces the number of prompts.

In short, you get everything it's going to take to help you make the grade in everything from Linear Algebra to Physics to Electronics to Statics and Dynamics.

The HP-41 is a deal all its own. Its operating system is so advanced, it doesn't need an "equals" key. Little wonder it's preferred by more engineers than any other calculator.

This is a limited time offer. Call (800) FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658B. We'll instantly give you the name of a dealer who has no equal.

Do it now. The phone call is free.

Faculty art featured in Ray Hall gallery

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

On occassion, statements are heard about a lack-of-culture shock in Menomonie. But there is a culture, we merely have to look for it. One good place to look is Gallery 104 in Ray Hall.

Showing from September 11 through September 27, Gallery 104 is hosting the work of seven solid, vital artistic personalities. Art faculty studio instructors are featured in this first show of the 1985-86 season.

Artists represented are: Todd Boppel, Paul Delong, Alan Gamache, Dion Manriquez, Rob Price, Robb Wilson and Ed Wong.

Being alone in an empty, well-lit gallery is, for me, like being a diamond thief alone, at night, in a jewelry store. There is a silent music of light and images, a treasury of shapes and color.

The first impression at a glance, is a striking sense of the hours of labor involved in the various endeavors. The art department is noted for providing its staff with schedules conducive to artistic research.

The show includes the work of artists who work in three-dimensions, ceramicist Robb Wilson, and sculptor Alan Gamache.

Gamache has two small figures, two bust-scale sculptures, a facial piece and a white-plaster wall-medallion in low-relief.

The figurative sculpture pieces add to the sensation of silence and serenity. The works stand with a strong stiffness and vertical poise that has a quiet dignity.

One figure is a life-styled bronze, the other a more abstracted plaster piece with a texture of controlled incisions. It is dusted with dry black tempera paint, then white tempera giving it a matte, metallic finish. The interplay of light and shadow is strengthened.

One plaster bust is sculpted with a tilted beret. The power of the design is in the long tapered shoulders, accenting the thin neck and face. The V-shape of the shoulders is counterpointed by an incised V-neck of the clothing. The eyes are closed or downcast, giving the portrait a neutral, calm expression.

Wilson's ceramics are a beautiful combination of function and art. It is an ancient craft, enhanced by individual visions of form and decoration. Wilson's advanced potter's skills are obvious in his highly developed sense of form and proportion.

Printmaking instructor Rob Price is represented by a fascinating construction entitled: "Mara — A Spring Commemorative."

This construction on panel is based on a vertical-horizontal arrangement, richly painted in greens, blues, and purples. It combines tight strings as linear elements, small blocks of wood, strips of wood and thin dowels.

Another Price construction is built on thick, textured, handmade paper. The upper half is five horizontal bands that looks like rust, or iron oxide earth, or clay.

On the lower portion is mounted a fish skeleton on the gray-white paper. At a distance, it resembles a fossil below layers of river sediment. It may be a veneration of the Earth, the elements, and the power of ages. Then again, it may be about a fishing trip. That's a funny thing about art.

The most extensively worked surfaces in the show belong to Todd Boppel. The paintings contain numerous short marker lines, coaxed and redrawn through layers of dappled colors.

One blue painting, looks strictly like a tonal study. Under closer scrutiny, there is a rich underpainting layer of dark crimson.

Boppel's works look like luxurious textiles or hanging tapestries, and require as much time as woven fabrics would to produce the same effects.

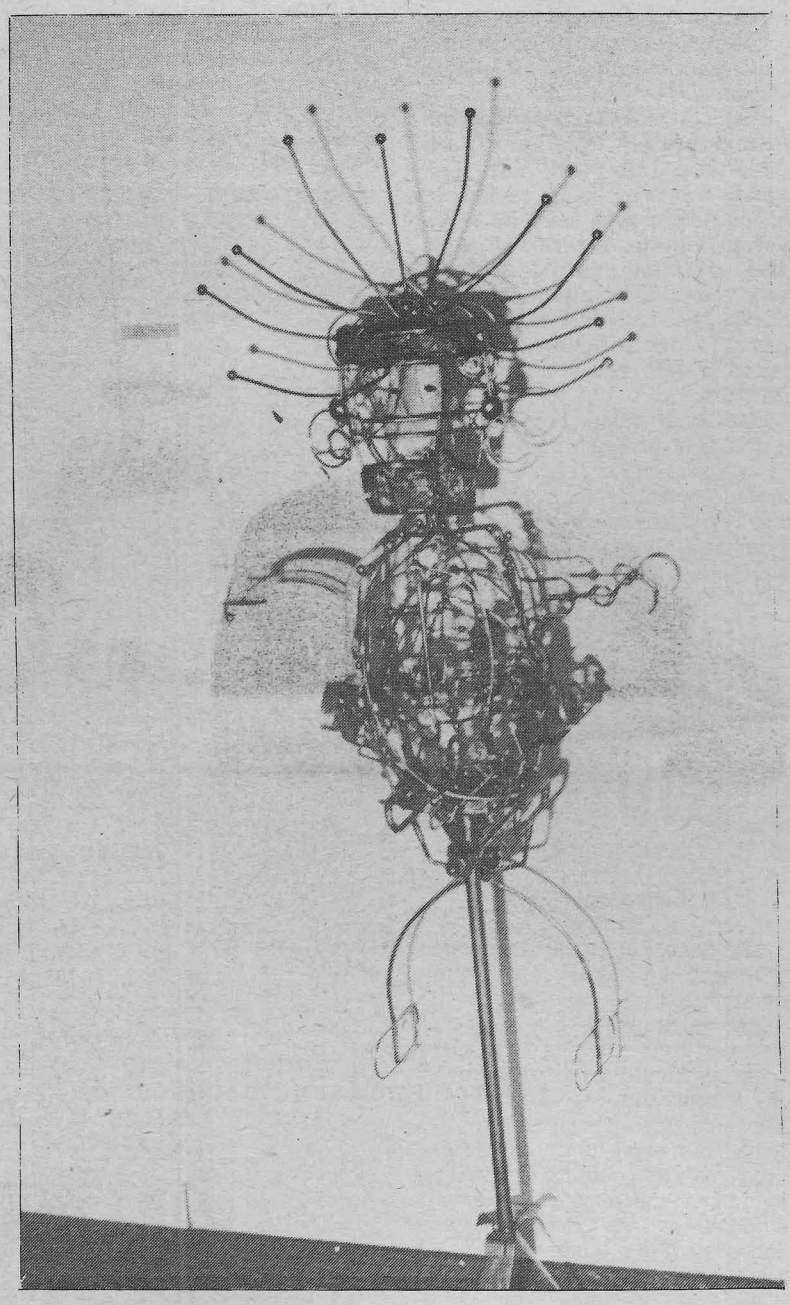
The deliberateness of Boppel is juxtaposed with the bizarre comic sense of Dion Manriquez. His delightfully demented figure stylizations show distinct influence of South American and Mexican relics.

One playful red figure is a concoction of the miscellaneous trinkets in Manriquez's collection. There are fork tines for hands, a chin-strap chin and zipper lips. These are actually, very carefully chosen pieces used for their appearance and for references of their real uses. There are bottlecaps, cheap jewelry, bobbers and baubles.

Manriquez's influences include South American arts, deranged art, art of children and naive artists. It takes a trained artist to synthesize these diverse, peculiar sources and derive personal images through them.

Neo-expressionism is represented in the faculty show. Ed Wong has produced very powerful, chaotic images using intense, deliberate strokes. There is no intention of serenity or harmony. He employs strong color contrasts and a thoughtful use of linear movement, which directs the viewer's eyes over the entire composition.

There is a subtle reference to an earlier expressionist, the tormented Norwegian, Edvard Munch. His "Screamer" is a historic symbol of the expressionist approach.



WIRED—
Sporting a cast-off baseball facemask, this Dion Manriquez creation has influences from South American divinity statuary. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

"Citizen Kane" to be first among showings by Foreign Film Society

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Let there be film... The Foreign Film Society has published its schedule of films for the 1985-86 season. The eight-film program covers a wide spectrum of productions, years and nations.

The program represents eight different nations, seven languages and spans 45 years of cinematic history. According to Robb Wilson, faculty advisor for the Film Society, "these films have probably won every major film award in the world."

The oldest film on the schedule is the only American offering, Citizen Kane. This film was chosen because of its masterpiece status, claimed by many critics to be the greatest American film.

This landmark epic was produced, directed and co-written by Orson Welles, his first film. Welles also starred in the lead role of Charles Foster Kane, monster/magnate of the publishing industry.

The emotionally charged story concerns Kane's childhood, his meteoric rise to the zenith of wealth and influence and isolation of his ultimate grandeur. Few films have achieved the psychological penetration or quality of cinematic devices equal to this tour de force.

The next film is another classic, The Seventh Seal. This 1957 Cannes Film Festival winner is from the Swedish film genius, Ingmar Bergman.

Bergman's scenario and direction result in a half-realistic, half-legendary tale of the Middle Ages. The metaphor-filled story portrays Bengt Ekerot as Death, the Black Death of plague, decimating the population of Europe.

Returning from the Crusades, the Knight, (Antonius Block), is confronted by Death. The knight asks for a chance to live and proposes a chess match. The knight views the collapse of society while leading a family troupe of traveling players to safety. At the same time, Death is taking his own prisoners.

The strengths of the film are in the combination of mysticism, realism and poetic effects, brought out with remarkable skill by photographer Gunnar Fischer, under the direction of master filmmaker Bergman.

The third film of this fall semester schedule is a product of the spectacular mind of Werner Herzog. A 1982 release, Fitzcarraldo is a grand adventure filmed on location in the remotest reaches of the Peruvian mountains.

Five years in the production, Fitzcarraldo dramatically portrays the obsession of Brian Sweeney Fitzgerald to build an opera house in the wild, desolate rain forests of South America. In this hall 1200 miles from the coast, this fanatic dreamer plans to invite the legendary opera singer Caruso to perform.

To achieve his mad dream, Fitzcarraldo must drag a 320-ton riverboat upstream and, finally, over a mountain using only pulleys and manpower.

There is no other filmmaker in the world like Werner Herzog. His magnificent visions produce equally stunning films. His collaborations with the seemingly demented actor Klaus Kinski are the perfect mixture of mad artistic genius.

The film's scenic splendors are beautiful and hyperdramatic. The marvel of this film is the fact that Herzog actually did drag and photograph the full-scale riverboat through the mountains of Peru, not miniatures or special optical effects. When Fitzcarraldo's hallucination of the riverboat in the trees appears on the screen, there really is half of a 600,000 pound riverboat in the trees.

The final film of the fall semester is the French Lacombe, Lucien. The film considers the eternal theme of innocence and guilt, yet never describes the conflict in those terms.

Lacombe, Lucien, a 1974, Twentieth Century-Fox release, bears the strong, personal touch of Louis Malle. Malle directed, produced and wrote the screenplay. This combination of roles provided the rare possibility of total supervision and coherency. Malle was able to prepare the script, control the film and its production.

Lucien's tale gave Malle the perfect metaphor to address the complex theme within the disturbing mixture of subtlety and urgency.

The story revolves around a young Frenchman whose need for acceptance leads him to the French Resistance. He is rejected for his lack of commitment and, for the same need of acceptance, joins the German Gestapo. Eventually, he meets a young Jewish

English department members involved in literary projects

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

The members of UW-Stout's English Department are currently working on a wide range of literary projects.

"There's a lot of action taking place here," said English professor Erik Thurin. Thurin, primarily a scholarly writer, is involved in writing literary criticism of authors such as Walt Whitman, Ralph Waldo Emerson and Willa Cather.

Although he enjoys working on large projects of this nature, he stresses the variety of work that is taking place among his peers in the department. Works such as poetry, fiction, playwriting and various forms of literary criticism.

Susan Beckham, another department member, writes primarily about the culture of the southern United States. She has just completed her dissertation on this topic entitled, "Southern Post Office Mural."

Beckham is originally from the South, although she has lived in the North for over 20 years.

She has published articles on this subject including an article on southern souvenirs that was published in "Prospects."

Recently, Beckham was notified that another of her articles was accepted for publication. In this article, she compares Elvis Presley to Jesus Christ.

She has also published an article on the signifigance of southern porches in the Encyclopedia of Southern Culture. This article stresses that porches in the Old South were more than just architecture; they were an important part of southern ritual and tradition.

The English department also contains published poets. Robert Schuler has had seven collections of his poems published. His work has also appeared in numerous literary publications.

His poetry deals with nature and his experiences in the natural world. There is also an element of spirituality in his work.

Poetry critic Ralph J. Mills describes Schuler's poetry as "Energy, density, compression; air and light and movement: music. . . arrestingly beautiful poems which are shot through with intense radiance of perception and feeling."

Schuler said that he needs to write to sort out his feelings and impressions.

"It keeps me in touch with the world," Schuler said. He explained that his art is an attempt to understand and establish contact with the powers of the universe.

Schuler is currently working on a novel and his latest poetry will appear in forthcoming issues of "Northeast," "Wisconsin Academy Review" and "Spoon River Quarterly."

Warren Lang, an instructor of literature and Eastern Philosophy, is also very involved with poetry.

Lang is especially interested in lyricism in poetry. He works to develop a musical, emotional quality in his poems through the use of rhythm and imagery. Lang said that he is extremely fascinated with English romantic poets such as Keats and Shelley.

Lang's poetry has been published in various literary magazines. He is currently working on his poetic style in what he describes as a "very concentrated manner."

English professor Virginia Wolf is a critic of children's literature for professional educational journals. She writes mainly about novels for children and adolescents, but occasionally critiques picture books as well.

Wolf is particularly interested in the series of novels by Laura Ingalls Wilder. Her articles on this subject include "The Symbolic Center: Little House in the Big Woods" and "The Magic Circle of Laura Ingalls Wilder," both published in educational journals.

Wolf also authored an article dealing with her own child's involvement with the series. This piece entitled "The Little House Books: A Personal Story," was published in "Touchstones of Children's Literature."

She is also interested in science fiction books for children and recently edited a section for a publication in that area.

Wolf is currently writing a novel entitled "Myth in the Children's Novel." She soon hopes to take a fellowship leave through the Institute for Research in the Humanities to work on further research and writing.

Another member of the department involved in literary criticism is Susan Thurin. Her work consists of Victorian novel criticism.

Her interest in this field originated when she was a graduate student studying the 18th and 19th century novel.

Thurin is particularly interested in the connection between Victorian novels and contemporary women's feminism.

She explained that the problems of women in the Victorian age, such as limited educational and professional opportunities, are also expressed by today's feminists.

John Cougar Mellencamp Scarecrow

Your adolescent dreams are gone, John Cougar Mellencamp is shaping ideals with the release of his newest down home LP entitled "SCARECROW".

In depth, the LP takes a long look at the U.S. and all she has taught us. From the melody "Justice and Independence" Mellencamp labels his family Independence, Justice and Nation. Then he blends in his original style of a 60's beat creating a lush feeling of patronage.

A great deal of concentration to this release has aided listeners to clearly understand the music as well as the lyrics.

The hit single "Lonely Ol' Night" is a classic example of how "Scarecrow" has brought out the fact that Mellencamp loves his hometown in southern Indiana. He goes on to say: "No, I cannot forget where it is that I come from, I cannot forget the people who love me, Yeah I can be myself here in this small town, and people let me be what I want to be."

Adding a different flair, Ricky Lee Jones assisted with vocals in the tune "Between a Laugh and a Tear." Also a brief appearance by a Mellencamp relative named Laura Mellencamp takes the lead vocal in the song "Grandma's Theme."

Summing up the latest release, Mellencamp and his band have formed the unity between rock and the U.S.A. which seems to still be a popular trend in music today.

The Power Station - self titled

The Power Station is a joke! or at least it was to the group members who joined just for kicks. What started out as a one-time jam has got members on a whirlwind of tours.

With John and Andy Taylor of Duran Duran and Robert Palmer along with Tony Thompson, The Power Station's new release has some hot prospects.

Opening up side A is the hit "Some Like it Hot." This bang and bash beat is unique to the foursome and continues throughout the LP.

As The Power Station progressed in the media through such gigs as the Live Aid concert and their own tour, not much notoriety has been brought to the music other than the opening cut and the remake of the tune "Bang a Gong (Get it on)."

Is this to say that it was not worth making the news? Well, The Power Station has their act together and with a commitment from the band, we will see more of them in the future.

REO-Wheels Are Turnin'

Burnout over the summer is what seemed to happen to the latest LP "Wheels Are Turnin'" by REO.

From the word go REO has definitely done an excellent job with this album, considering their tunes in the past have all seemed to blend together in the same lackluster sound.

REO has devised a way to keep their sound yet hopscotch through different beats from their original rock and roll to love ballads then to tunes that remind me not to take life for granted. From the tune "Live Every Moment," the feeling for life is abounding in the lyrics:

"Live every moment — love every day 'cus before you know it your precious time slips away."

Other than centering most of the selections around love or love-gone-bad, REO has managed to produce a LP of variety and quality.

Foreign

girl and begins, too late, to understand the virtues of loyalty and honor.

The second semester foreign film series begins with Throne of Blood. Originally titled Castle of the Spider's Web, this Japanese thriller is based on Shakespeare's Macbeth.

This film is also directed, written and produced by one man, Akira Kurosawa, one of Japanese film's pioneer creators.

Throne of Blood is set in 16th century Japan during the Sengoku civil wars. As with Kurosawa's other period films, he goes beyond the simple boundaries of this film style. Combining the Western literary tradition and the Noh theatre with the dynamic action of the wild American western film genre, Kurosawa creates powerfully driven scenes.

Frenzy, violence and the catastrophic doom culled from Macbeth are the outstanding traits of this film. The impact is unforgettable.

The Japanese settings are also dramatic. The film is shot around a magnificent castle built on the side of Mount Fuji.

The next offering is The Long Good Friday. Claimed as the best ganster movie since The Godfather, this English film is superbly crafted and propelled by Barrie Keeffe's daring script.

Ganster Harold Shand, played by Bob Hoskin, is a three-piece suit criminal kingpin of London trying to solidify a deal with the Mafia. One long day of terror throws his empire to the brink of diaster, and Shand with it.

The Gospel According to St. Matthew is acclaimed for its profound spirituality, and provocative investigation into the nature of Christ as a social activist.

This is an Italian, neo-realist production using the villages and hillsides of southern Italy to transpose the contradictory message discovered through the legend that has surrounded the story of Christ.

Notably simple and profound, in keeping with the initial basis of the Christian theme, the film is highly moving and believable is its depiction of the over-wrought tale.

The final offering is the The World of Apu. This film is from India and was released in 1959. Screenplay and director is Satyajit Ray, based on the novel Aparajito of Bibhuti Banerji.

The film is the third part of Ray's trilogy, dealing with Apu's manhood. Apu is forced to leave school because of a lack of funds. He tries to write an autobiographical novel. By a twist of Indian custom, he marries a beautiful girl named Aparna, whom he barely knows.

They live happily for one year, until the woman dies in childbirth. The death drives Apu to reject the son he never meets, and throws his life into a shambles. Eventually, he returns to a hesitant reunion with his son and discovers the beginning of the life cycle, and with it, his own reason to live.

The World of Apu is marked by artistically arranged filmimg and a spiritual vitality rarely found in modern film.

Foreign Film Society Offerings:

Stout gridders trounce Grand Valley 23-7

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

It was a hot afternoon last Saturday when the UW-Stout Blue Devils beat the Grand Valley gridders 23-7.

With the temperature in the 90's, the battle ahead was just that more difficult. The game began with Stout kicking to Grand Valley. Todd Miles kicked a 60-yarder to the Lakers' Louis Scarpino who made a great runback of 42 yards.

The first set of downs by Grand Valley looked like they would be forced to punt, but on third down and seven Stout was called for holding and that gave the Lakers a first down. During the next set of downs, the Blue Devils forced the Lakers to punt.

The Blue Devils tried running the ball, but only made nine yards and Ron Lindburg punted for 36 yards on their first possession. After an eight-yard pass from Chris Panzl to Dan Green, Grand Valley ran the ball for seven plays down to the Stout 13-yard line. Here a penalty backed the Lakers up five yards. Then Panzl passed for three yards to Scarpino and a penalty went against Stout for five more yards. Now the Lakers were on the Stout ten. Dan Newton carried it in for the Lakers only score. The point after was good.

After the kick Stout was on their own 30-yard line and after a run and two incomplete passes later, they were forced to punt. Lindburg punted, but a 15-yard penalty against Grand Valley put Stout near center field.

A pass from Glenn Majszak to Scott Stauffacher for eleven yards put Stout on the Lakers 42-yard line. A six yard run by Chuck Carr and two three-yard runs by Majszak gave Stout another first down to end the first quarter.

To start the second quarter Majszak was sacked twice in three plays forcing Stout to punt. The Lakers started on their own 24-yard line. Panzl then completed an eleven-yard pass to Green. A run for a loss of one yard and two pass attemps later Steve Sandin intercepted the ball on the Stout 48-yard line.

This turnover led to Stout's first score. Majszak got things started by completing an eight-yarder to Carr. The Blue Devils ran the ball from the 35-yard line to the eight-yard line where Carr ran it in. Miles was good on the point after to tie the score.

The ball was kicked to Grand Valley and they could not do anything with it and punted to Stout. The Blue Devils moved the ball from their 31-yard line to Grand Valley's 16-yard line. Miles attempted a 33 yard-kick and missed.

Grand Valley moved the ball from their 20-yard line to Stout's 29-yard line and Jim Ostrowski attemped a 46-yard field goal. This kick failed, ending the first half tied 7-7.

The second half would be Stout's. Receiving the ball on their twelve, the offense stalled and Lindberg punted the ball. Grand Valley fumbled the punt and Stout recovered on Grand Valley's 18-yard line. Stout got caught holding the next play after a four-yard run putting the Blue Devils on the 24-yard line. An incomplete pass and a quarterback sack put them back to the 35-yard line. Lindberg punted the ball out of bounds at the 10-yard line.

The Lakers ran the next four times for 14 yards. The next two plays were incomplete passes by quarterback Guy Schuler forcing Grand Valley to punt. The punt was blocked by Scott Romenesko and Stout received the ball on the nine-yard line. This set up a 20-yard field goal by Todd Miles.

After the kickoff the Lakers could not do anything and were forced to punt. Stout got the ball back on their own 34 and ran four plays for 32 yards. The biggest play was a 30-yard run by Tom Cliver that ended the third quarter.

Stout got down to the Lakers 30 and tried for a field goal, but the 47-yard attempt was missed by Miles. The Lakers took over, but two plays later fumbled and Sandin recovered for Stout. Lindberg tried to take the Blue Devils down field, but Stout was stopped and Miles tried unsuccessfully on a 32-yard kick.

The Lakers went from their 20-yard line to Stout's 12-yard line. This was set up by a 30-yard run by Schuler. Ostrowski attempted a 30-yard field goal, but missed. The ball changed hands three times before Kyle Gunderson put the icing on the cake with a 70-yard touchdown run. The point after was missed. This gave the game's final score—Stout 23, Grand Valley 7.

After the game quarterback Glen Majszak said, "The offensive line did a great job and was a big part of winning the game." Coach Bob Kamish was also happy with the performance of the young offensive line. The key to future success will depend on the line to get better as the season progresses.

The Blue Devils will be at Moorhead, Minn. this Saturday to take on the 13th-ranked NAIA Division I Moorhead State Dragons.

Lendl, Mandlikova win US Open Titles -Czechoslovakia made a clean sweep of the US Open Tennis Championships last weekend when Ivan Lendl easily beat top-seeded player John McEnroe 7-6, 6-3 and 6-4 for the men's crown while Hana Mandlikova took the women's crown by edging Martina Navratilova 7-6, 1-6 and 7-6.

Lendl became the first non-American since 1977 to win the men's singles championship while the Czechoslovak double also marked the first time since 1973 that foreigners have swept both singles crowns.

Harris Runs into Retirement-Franco Harris, unsigned and unwanted despite 13 seasons as one of pro football's top running backs, is finally becoming resigned to retirement.

Harris was hoping to sign with another NFL team after the Pittsburgh Steelers let him go after 12 seasons. Harris was hoping to surpass all-time leading football rusher Jimmy Brown this season.

$40 Million Young Released-Quarterback Steve Young was released by the Los Angeles Express of the United States Football League Monday in prepartion for his signing with Tampa Bay of the NFL.

Young, a former Brigham Young All-American, signed a reported $40 million contract with the Express before his rookie season.

Intramural Update-"The Gobbs" outlasted everyone else in the one-pitch softball tournament held last Saturday in the extreme heat.

WHY ONLY OLD STYLE CAN BE CALLED AMERICA'S BEST-BREWED PREMIUM BEER?

We add to that water, barley malt and select domestic and imported hops.

And then we put these ingredients through an Old World brewing process known as Kraeusening, which results in natural carbonation, plus extra smoothness and flavor.

Only Old Style offers all this. Which is why we think it's not only the best-brewed premium beer in America, but the best-tasting.

Lady netters raise WSUC record to 2-1

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Not only was the weather sultry, but so was the UW-Stout women's tennis team, as they blistered both UW-River Falls and UW-Stevens Point Saturday to up their conference record to 2-1, bouncing back from Eau Claire's overwhelming victory over the Lady Blue Devils, Wednesday, Sept. 4.

Stout 8, River Falls 1

Their first opponent, River Falls, captured one lone match as they proved to be almost no contest for the women netters. All but one of the Stout singles matches required just two straight sets to down the Lady Falcons.

Coach Smith commented, "Tara Stahel and Kris Anderson played particularly well at second doubles." They downed their opponents 6-2, 6-2.

Also, Lynn Papenfuss, playing first singles, and Mary Malloy, in the second singles slot, gave up but 4 and 3 games respectively in their matches. The final score of the match, "Went the way it should have," Smith said.

Stout 6, Stevens Point 3

Stevens Point gave the Lady Blue Devils more competition, but not enough to break their winning ways. Malloy and Papenfuss, playing in the first and second singles slots, swept their matches without losing a single game. Malloy's serve was especially powerful. "It's the best serving I've done in a long time," Malloy said.

Malloy and Papenfuss also teamed up at first doubles and notched a convincing win 6-0, 6-3, to remain undefeated in the conference in doubles play.

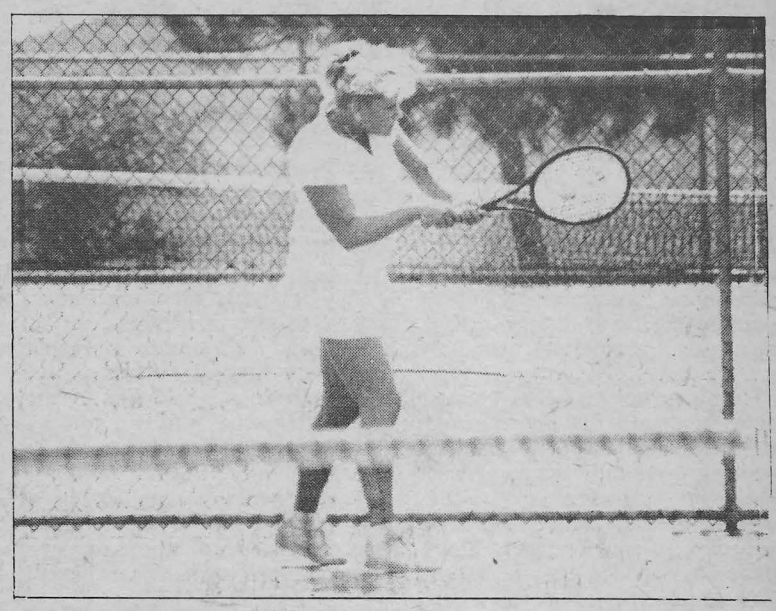
Other highlights of the match included Karen Blau's eighth singles match. She played a tough Stevens Point opponent and posted a 6-4, 6-4 win. Tara Stahel battled back from the heat and a losing first set, to overwhelm her challenger 4-6, 6-2, 6-3.

"Stevens Point is right there with us," Smith said, "and we beat them." He also said that the girls really held up well in the heat and humidity. Smith was also impressed with the play of the freshman, and said, "What they are missing in talent, they make up for in fight and pride."

Stout 1, Eau Claire 8

"We were crunched," Coach Bob Smith said of the Stout women's tennis team's 1-8 loss to Eau Claire last Wednesday Sept. 4. Eau Claire placed second in the conference last year, and have plagued the Lady Blue Devils early in the season in past years.

The lone win came from the first doubles team of Malloy and Papenfuss, who came from a losing first set to sweep the final sets, 5-7, 6-4, 7-6. Also, Kelly Wickman's fifth singles match went three sets, losing an extremely close tie-breaker 5-7 in the third set.



BACKHAND SMASH—

HOT SERVE—

Experienced ruggers lose to Appleton 23-4

Eric J. Erickson
Sports Reporter

Although the UW-Stout rugby club sports one of its most seasoned teams in several years, a more experienced Appleton city-side team handed Stout its first loss of the season, Saturday.

The Stout ruggers fell 23-4 to Appleton in a game that was marked by sweltering heat. "Because of the heat, eventually the game was declared unsafe by the referee...the heat was unbearable Saturday," John Wangen, Stout rugby club president, said. "They were a real experienced team, but the heat was probably the reason for our poor performance."

Jeff Hayes was the lone scorer for the Stout A-side team. The partial B-side Stout team lost to a partial Appleton B-side team in a much closer match. "The reason we lost so bad wasn't because we were so bad, they were just real good," Wangen said.

Most of the Appleton players had four or more years of experience, on the average. Unlike Stout's college-side club, which is made up of students, Appleton's team members are from Appleton and the surrounding area and have been playing rugby together for several years.

For a college club, Stout has a good deal of experience, too. The Stout team lost only a few key players from last year's team. Most notable losses were Tom Frederick and Tom Nelson. However, there are presently 28 members on the team.

"Fifteen players are on the field at any one time, so everyone gets a chance to play," Wangen said.

"We have quite a bit of experience at the forward positions. As a matter of fact, the whole squad has experience...that's why we should have a good club this year," Wangen said.

The Stout rugby team recently voted in a new executive committee. Wangen was voted president. Troy McCuskey was voted vice president, Eric Ruud treasurer and Louie Lieberg match secretary. Mike Krudwhig, the former president, is presently assuming the duties of player/coach.

Unlike most sports, which generally have one specific season, rugby is a sport for all seasons. The Stout ruggers have full schedules in both the spring and fall, as well as playing in tournaments in the summer and winter.

This summer the ruggers played in the Sawdust City (Eau Claire) tourney and the Lake Front Summerfest Tournament. "We had some excellent competition in the Lake Front tournament. This was held during Summerfest on the Summerfest grounds and we played the Milwaukee team that was the city-side state champions last year," Wangen said.

The Stout ruggers also played in a much smaller-scale New Auburn Tournament this summer.

"We gained a lot of experience this summer and it can only help us this fall," Wangen said.

The Stout rugby club will get a chance to see how experienced they really are this weekend as they take on an exceptionally strong UW-Stevens Point club Saturday at Stevens Point.

The Armchair Quarterback

Recruiting questioned

Tom Roth

What is the primary goal at Stout according to every faculty member? An education that will prepare the students for the future, right?

Well maybe that primary goal has taken a back seat in recent years as far as the athletic department is concerned. Sure every coach in the country is going to tell you their athletes are at college first for an education and secondly to actively participate in collegiate sports. But then why do you repeatedly hear rumors about athletes skipping classes and still passing and professors giving athletes a break while other students in those classes do not get any breaks?

Then comes the rumor about athletes always getting into trouble with the law and the evidence is always being swept under the carpet. But last weekend, unfortunately, those rumors became reality when two freshman basketball players at Stout were charged with first degree sexual assault along with another companion.

Sure, no one from the Stout athletic office will admit that two of these men had anything to do with the basketball team but it seems awful ironic that members of the basketball team have confessed that two of the three men charged in the assault case have been participating in the men's preseason basketball league, which is just for Stout basketball prospects. The Milwaukee Journal also reported last Tuesday that two of the players' lawyers confirmed that they were members of the Stout basketball team.

Without beating around the bush, the main issue is are we recruiting the right people at Stout for athletics that will equally benefit everyone in the classroom as well, or are these athletes just taking up spaces on class lists and keeping the law enforcement agencies in business?

Sure, there are other students on campus that cause trouble that people don't ever hear about but athletes are, no matter if they like it or not, in the public spotlight at all times. People look up to athletes no matter if they are high school players or professionals.

And because athletes attract attention like no other group on campus, the athletic department should take appropriate steps to make sure our prestigious university's positive image is never demoralized.

No coach can ever tell how his athlete is going to act, but the question that hovers is, are we recruiting athletes or students first? Winning is very important but not at the risk of the saftey and security of the whole student body population.

The Quarterback's Picks

Stout at Moorhead St.-Stout should have great momentum from last week's impressive victory over Grand Valley but Moorhead St. is out of Stout's class. Moorhead St. by 17.

Vikings at Tampa Bay-Bud's brought those old Vikings back and Tampa Bay choked last week to Chicago but the Vikings still have not proven they can win on the road. Tampa Bay by 7.

N.Y. Giants at Green Bay-As usual the Packers are off to another slow start and the Giants look sharp. Giants by 14.

Wichita St. at Minnesota-I think Lou Holtz is just inviting Wichita St. to the Metrodome for a tour. Gophers by 16.

Northern Illinois at Wisconsin-The Badgers should stomp Northern Illinois right into the ground. They should be lucky if Northern Illinois comes out of the locker room for the second half. Wisconsin by 24.

Pittsburgh at Ohio St.-This could be a close game with All-American Keith Byars out of the Buckeyes' lineup. Ohio St. by 7.

Maryland at Boston College - Maryland will be out for revenge after last week's loss and B.C. hasn't proven they're capable of knocking off the big boys yet. Maryland by 10.

Norte Dame at Michigan-Will Gary Faust save his job this year? It's tough to win in Ann Arbor. Michigan by 3.

SEPTEMBER 13 & 14

Ashley Cleveland signs with the passion of a soul that is fast becoming her trade mark. She can unleash a powerful rock 'n roll or blues song that will put your back up against the wall and have you dancin' on your chair or she can bring you to tears with her sensitivity and uncanny intuition for great lyrics. There are no synthetic emotions here! Her songs are stylishly consistent and she is rapidly losing her title as "one of the best kept secrets in the industry" as she garners fans and makes believers out of those who hear her play.

Get to the answers faster. With the TI-55-II.

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions – more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations – like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics – at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.

Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

Get to the answers faster. Let a TI-55-II show you how.

Pro bowler Pete Weber appears for Rec Center's Grand Opening

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

Professional bowler Pete Weber appeared in the Recreation Center last Thursday and Friday to help celebrate the new Memorial Student Center's grand opening.

Weber, a fifth-year veteran of the Professional Bowler Association, conducted bowling clinics, workshops and participated in "Bowl the Pro Hour" during his two-day stint on the UW-Stout campus.

According to Anne Buttke, Recreation Center Supervisor, AMF sponsored Weber's trip to Stout because the school had purchased a couple of new bowling lanes from the company.

"We wanted to get more people interested in bowling," Buttke commented about bringing in Weber. "I think we were lucky in getting Pete to come to Stout as he related well with the students and attracted a lot of interested onlookers."

Even though Weber is the second leading money winner on the tour this year at $139,000, he has still not reached the fame his dad Dick, who is one of the all-time great professional bowlers, had by the end of his professional career.

The younger Weber is definitely off to a great start as he was named Rookie of the Year by the PBA in 1980 during his first year on the tour.

"Being named Rookie of the Year and winning my first tournament (1982 Greater Hartford Open) have really been my two greatest highlights of my career," Weber commented. "And hopefully my next one will be winning the tournament of champions —Firestone Open."

At 23, Weber, recalls how his dad got him started bowling at the age of two. "My dad has really played a big part in my bowling career from the beginning," Weber said of his dad, who owns his own bowling alley in St. Louis.

Last year Weber made over $115,000 on tour and he has already topped that figure this year with six tournaments left to play in. Due to his successful year last season, Weber was named to the Bowling Magazine All-American team. Currently his average game score is at 213 and during his career he has accumulated nine perfect games.

Despite being a professional, Weber confessed, "I still get nervous whenever I am on television, but after the first couple of frames I settle down." Weber also told of his most embarrassing moment on tour when he dropped his ball on his ankle during his approach shot.

Not everything is so rosey on the tour, according to Weber. "All of the traveling is a lot of wear and tear on you. It takes two days before a tournament begins to get mentally and physically ready after traveling so much," Weber said. "I bowl in all of the tournaments except for the ones held in Buffalo, N.Y. and Baltimore, Md. because those two cities are just plain dirty."

Another side of professional bowlers that the average person doesn't see is the rigorous qualifying matches that take place during the week.

160 bowlers are allowed to enter each tournament and they all begin by bowling 18 games apiece and the top 24 then advance to match-play. Then on Saturday the field is cut to five and those five advance on to play before a television audience on Sunday.

"There is a lot of pressure involved in the qualifying process because everyone wants to bowl on television for the big bucks," Weber commented. "You're seeing more and more good young players every year and that's being proven by more players winning tournaments instead of just a few dominant players."

Weber contributes his success in his young career to being levelheaded. "You can't be thinking you're better than anyone else or you're going to get yourself into trouble," Weber said.

When it comes to giving advice to young bowlers, Weber says, "Have some fun first before taking the game serious and don't let your temper get the best of you."

Golfers take fourth in tournament; prepare for two weekend invitationals

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

UW-Stout golfer Eric Pierce received the honor of low-man in the first day's play at Glenwood Country Club during the Blue Devil Collegiate Invitational over the weekend.

Taking place over a two-day period, the second day of the Invitational was at Tanglewood Golf Course involving teams from UW-Stevens Point, UW-Eau Claire, UW-Parkside, UW-River Falls, UW-Platteville, St. Mary's and UW-Superior.

With his putting well on-form, Pierce achieved a score of 71 over 18 holes on Saturday, helping his team to fourth place overall by the end of the first day's play. Pierce, a senior in Business Administration, was playing with a two-handicap.

"I played well with good strokes and hit many of my shots on par," Pierce commented. He also eagled a par-5 hole.

Sunday's play at Tanglewood was delayed because of some early rainfall. Half of the players teed off at the first hole and the remainder at the ninth. Conditions changed slightly which caused problems for many of the players. Although still sunny and clear, there was now a stronger wind cutting across the course.

"The golf course played tougher than at Glenwood," Pierce stated, "as well as it being a lot more windy."

Many of the players' scores were also higher than on the previous day. Pierce recorded two triple-bogeys on the Tanglewood course which hiked his score up to 85.

Shawn Schellpfeffer, a junior in Psychology and playing on Pierce's team said, "I just didn't hit the ball good. I hit an 8-iron shot straight out of bounds on the first hole!" He managed to hit eight holes on par but other big scores along the course set him back. Schellpfeffer was playing with a four-handicap and finished with a total of 169 for the two days.

Stout originally had two teams competing at the invitational, Stout Blue and Stout White. With River Falls arriving with only four players, Coach Sten Pierce loaned them a player, Jim Nord, from the White Team. This now meant that the Whites could not go for a team score as they were down to four players and the best five scores would count for each team.

"Maybe they should pay Jim's tuition fees too," Pierce joked to the other coaches.

Overall, Pierce was quite pleased with his club's performance on their first outing. Finishing in fourth place at the end of the play, the Stout Blues had given a good account of themselves. Eventual winner was Stevens Point with Eau Claire second and Parkside in third place.

When asked about his freshmen players, Pierce remarked "We'll ink them in later in the season and give them a chance to prove themselves." Although the Stout White team was unable to complete a team, the players demonstrated some promise with reasonable scores.

Stevens Point also produced the first medalist for the competition, Joe Stadler, who was the low man for the two days with a total of 148 strokes. Pierce was fifth with a total of 156, which eased some of his disappointment on his second day's score.

Presenting the trophies and medals, Sten Pierce thanked all the coaches for their support and enthusiasm. He hoped that this standard of competition will be continued through the season.

He said, "Overall it's been a good weekend of golfing and I'm sure everyone involved has had a good time and enjoyed the competition."

This weekend they will be involved in two tournaments. Friday and Saturday mark the Stevens Point Invitational while the Blue Devils will participate in the Blugold Invitational at Eau Claire on Sunday and Monday.

Four inducted into Stout Hall of Fame

Danielle Anderson
Sports Reporter

The first home football game of every Stout season is a special one. Every year a number of outstanding alumni athletes are chosen and honored at the Hall of Fame game.

Last Saturday there were three Stout athletes honored. They were Dale Evans who graduated in 1973, John Widmar from the class of 1954 and Darby Worman, a 1940 alumni. A Menomonie man, Maurice Michelbook, received the university's Distinguished Athletic Service Award.

Evans, now an executive vice president of EVCO Plastics in DeForest, was a Stout wrestler lettering in 1970, 1971, 1972 and 1973. He also was a WSUC wrestling champion each of those years, making him the first four-time WSUC champion. In his wrestling career, Evans was named NAIA All-American twice, placing fourth in 1972 and third in 1973. He was chosen the conference's most valuable wrestler in 1972 and 1973. His overall record was 104 wins and only 15 losses, but to top things off, he won the 1972 Olympics district trials.

Evans was also a graduated assistant wrestling coach at UW-Madison from 1974 until 1976. He was the Wisconsin Wrestling

Maurice Michelbook

Federation state chairman and Freestyle Junior National team coach. Also, he has been the DeForest High School freestyle coach since 1973.

Widmar, who is best remembered as the defensive guard who scored a touchdown in a 53-0 game against Superior, was named to the all- conference team his sophomore year. His letter-winning seasons in football were 1950, 1951, 1952, and 1953, but he also lettered in basketball in 1953 and 1954 while being captain in 1954.

Widmar returned to Stout two years later for his master's degree and during that time, he was Stout's defensive line coach in football and an assistant coach in basketball. Widmar is now an instructor at Nicolet High School in Mequon, where he has been the football line coach for four years, and where he initiated a weight lifting program.

Worman was an all-around athlete at Stout. Besides football, he was a letterman for four years in basketball. He was all-conference center on the second team in 1935, and all-conference forward on the first team in 1936, 1939, and 1940. During Worman's junior and senior years, he served as a team captain.

Worman's third athletic pride was baseball where he lettered for four years. During each of those years he was starting pitcher for the team and if he wasn't pitching, he was in the outfield.

While he was at Stout, Worman was an assistant basketball coach for two years, and head baseball coach for one year. After graduation he went on to play on semi-pro baseball and basketball championship teams. Worman was a member of a professional baseball team, the Bears, located in Eau Claire, for two years.

Our last new member inducted to the Hall of Fame is Mr. Michelbook. Though he himself has never been an athlete, he is very well known to Stout athletic organizations and to the Menomonie community.

He is a season ticket holder for Stout football and basketball games, and he rarely misses an event.

Michelbook not only has served on the Stout Athletic Hall of Fame committee, but because of his dedication and his relationships with alumni athletes, he has also been a presenter of the awards at the games.

Because he has never been a noted athlete himself, it must be his natural instincts that helped him lead the Menomonie Eagles to the state championship in 1950. In this game, the Eagles defeated an Osceola team that was coached by the Minnesota Vikings' coach, Bud Grant. Michelbook coached his team from 1946-1955 when it was a member of the Dunn County baseball league.

Spikers' coach optimistic despite losses at River Falls tournament

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's volleyball team went on the road this past weekend to compete in its first tournament at River Falls.

The Spikers got off to a shakey start playing UW-River Falls with scores of 15-6 and 15-11. Karen Mickelson hit 66 percent of her shots, and had four kills which helped the team on their attack. Unfortunately, it was not enough to provide a team victory. The senior Mickelson said, "The match against River Falls was fun, but we felt nervous going into our first tournament. Things will turn around once we work and talk more together as a team."

Stout showed some improvement in its second game against Oshkosh with scores of 15-12 and 15-10 in favor of Oshkosh. They went on to lose the third game against Bethel by scores of 15-13 and 15-5.

Coach Lee, despite these losses, feels the team has a great degree of potential and will improve as they work more together. Lee said optimistically, "The team was very excited, and pretty confident for their stage in the game. They worked hard as a team, but mentally they needed to know what to be and what to do."

Help from Assistant Coach Sharon Lindow has allowed Coach Lee to focus in on any problems the team may have. "I really appreciate her help, as well as that of Student Coach, Judy Nelson. Judy helps with the actual strategic part of the game, and having played for Stout the past three years has given her valuable experience in district competition."

As for the future, Coach Lee feels her team needs to improve on their quickness and aggression and on being in the right positions at the right time. Leadership in the front row from Seniors Wendy Morrow and Karen Mickelson is one expectation of Lee.

"Freshman Shelia McNamara is also a bright spot," Lee noted. "She's a smart girl and a good, hard hitter. I see some real improvements from these girls, as well as from the rest of the team. They have a lot of potential."

The Lady Blue Devils, along with their optimistic coach, feel they shouldn't be disappointed by this past weekend, and are looking forward to their next tournament. Coach Lynda Lee said, "Quickness and transition between offense and defense are some of our strategies for future games. We now know what we have to work on in the bulk of the regular season, and have a better sense of direction."

Academic calendar revisions debated

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Many UW-Stout students have put their plans for a summer job on hold while awaiting the decision of the subcommittee on the calendar of educational activities concerning the revision of the '86 -'87 academic calendar year. The committee is aiming to make that decision no later than Nov. 1.

The eight member committee chaired by Judy Spain includes six teacher/faculty members and one Stout student. According to Spain the subcommittee is pressed for time because a proposal for the '87 -'88 calendar year is also due from the committee on Nov. 1.

Much work remains ahead for the subcommittee. "At this point we're talking concepts only," Spain said. "It's a real dilemma." Spain said they were open to suggestions.

The scheduling dilemma was created when an amendment was tacked onto this year's budget bill in the state legislature requiring all Wisconsin universities to start the school year after Labor Day. Although the budget bill passed, the newly required university opening date was given a line veto by Governor Anthony Earl. Governor Earl agreed with the Board of Regents that starting in '86 all state universities would agree to start the fall semester after Sept. 1.

Currently, there isn't enough time for the committee to consider as drastic a change in the calendar as a move to trimesters or the quarter system. Spain said that one of the biggest disadvantages of the quarter system is that, "It's much more expensive because you have to do everything (registering) an additional time."

> "At this point we're talking concepts only. It's a real dilemma."
> —Judy Spain, Committee Chairman

There isn't even enough time in the next six weeks for the calendar committee to establish a workable schedule where class periods could be extended to 60 minutes in length.

One option they're considering is to adopt a registration period prior to Sept. 1 that would qualify as educational activity. That system has been successfully used at UW-Madison. Spain said using that method would be, "Rather ironic since we've put in the necessary computer equipment to complete registration in one day." A potentially negative effect of the six-day registration method according to Spain is that faculty and staff would need to develop ways of making up the lost class days.

Another option is to have two shorter 15-week semesters. In this method students may be forced to take lighter credit loads due to the shortened length of the semester. The semester would be completed prior to Christmas but a four-week interim session would be required upon the students' return in order to meet the state's legal requirement for at least 34 weeks of instruction each year.

The third and apparently most unpopular option is for the fall semester to end after Christmas vacation. Spain realizes that few students would enjoy the prospect of spending Christmas vacation with the last four weeks of the semester, including final exams, hanging over them.

The impact the subcommittee's decision will have on the plans of both returning and prospective students remains to be seen.

Campus organizations scramble to start rape prevention program

Barb Caron
News Reporter

Due to the recent rape and assaults on this campus, many concerned individuals as well as organizations are meeting to discuss possible solutions to this issue.

At Inter Residence Hall Council (IRHC) this week many ideas came up in discussion. IRHC senator Peggy Coughlin said that "eight out of the nine resident halls are interested in implementing some kind of escort service." Another idea that came up at IRHC according to Coughlin was a hotline for students to call for an escort set up through campus security.

According to off campus senator Wes Stead, his fraternity Chi Lambda, "is very concerned for the safety of off-campus students." Chi Lambda would like to get all of the Greek organizations involved in forming an off-campus escort service. Stead's only concern is that the escort service be used specifically for that purpose and not as a "taxi service for off-campus students."

The Stout Student Association (SSA) has formed a Sexual Assault Prevention Committee (SAPC) to look into possible solutions for the safety of Stout students. The committee met Tuesday for the first time to formulate objectives and throw around ideas.

JoAnn Prange, SSA President, respectfully submitted her ideas on the subject. She would also like to see an escort service set up. It would involve applications to be submitted by volunteers. The applicants would be checked for police records and interviewed by a search and screen committee. The selected applicants would then receive an "I'm your personal escort" button and a valid ID. Applicants would also sign a code of ethics to follow while escorting.

According to Prange, "The advantage of this type of escort service is the fact that the escorts are where the women are. No woman is going to call for an escort, and wait to be picked up. We have to face reality. With this system, escorts could be utilized anywhere they are with a button, library, concert, meeting, speaker, party, or bars."

Prange would also like to see some sort of programming provided. This could involve a combination of awareness and self-defense. "This could be achieved by combining the expertise of Tracey Lea Landis and other interested parties such as the Martial Arts club."

Finally, Prange would like to see literature put out on this subject.

"We could use pamphlets in combination with the programming to educate women and men." Prange said. The pamphlets could include helpful hints, defintion of sexual assault, self-defense techniques, and information on escort services.

Committee chairperson Tracey Lea Landis would like to see "Safe Maps" distributed. These maps would point out the dangerous or troubled areas on campus where attacks could easily occur.

Landis stressed that "long term goals must be set in order for any possible solutions to work." "There must also be a networking of all organizations concerned with this issue so efforts won't be duplicated," Landis said.

"We need people to work on all of these areas in order to find the best solutions to this problem," Landis said.

Any interested individuals or organizations who would like to help, or offer ideas can leave a message for the SAPC in the SSA office.

World

Britain strikes back

London, England- Round three of the Anglo-Soviet "spy wars" heated up Monday with Britain ousting six more Soviets it accused of spying.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government said it was retaliating for the expulsion of 25 Britons from Moscow — which it termed "victimization of innocent people which the British government was not prepared to accept." The move could trigger more expulsions by the Soviets, experts say, and further sour relations, which appeared cordial when Thatcher met Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Dec 1984.

Young party members

Peking, China- The Chinese Communist Party approved the most sweeping change in its top ranks in nearly a decade in a move aimed at bringing younger party officials into senior leadership positions.

After a series of meetings at the Great Hall of the People, the party's Central Committee announced that 10 of the 25 members of the ruling Politburo had submitted their resignations.

Nation

Smoking costs

Washington, D.C.- Disease and lost productivity from smoking are costing the United States $65 billion a year — more than $2 for every pack of cigarettes consumed, according to a congressional study released Monday.

Focusing on the three major causes of disease attributed to smoking — cancer, heart disease and lung ailments — the congressional researchers said the habit added $22 billion a year to the nation's healthcare bill and cost $4.3 billion in lost productivity and wages.

U.S. in debt

Washington, D.C.- The U.S., its trade deficit soaring to record levels, has become a debtor nation for the first time since 1914, the Commerce Department reported.

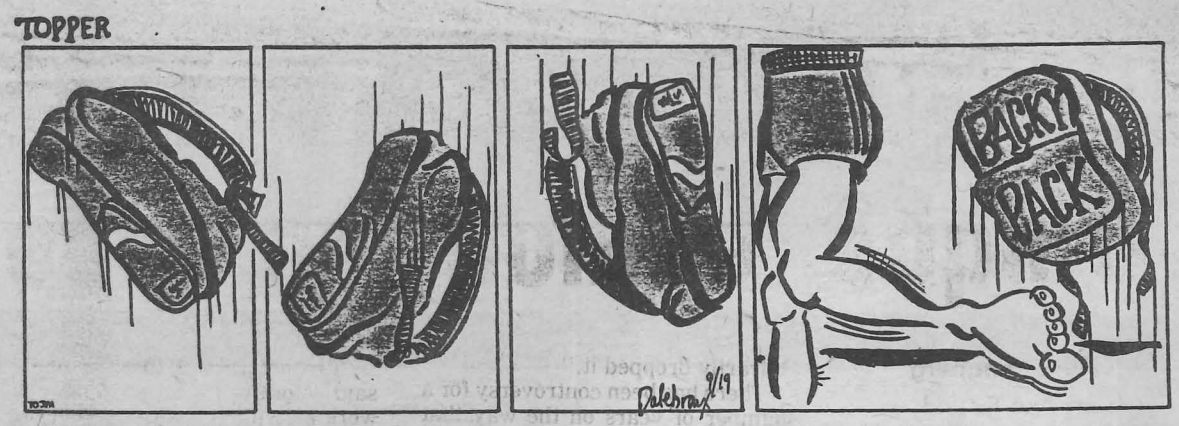
This means Americans now owe more to foreigners than foreigners owe to Americans. Economists say paying off those debts may require a lower standard of living.

State

Prison site debated

Madison- A State Supreme Court order may hasten a final decision about building a new state prison in Milwaukee by six to nine months, state lawyers say.

Robert W. Larsen, assistant attorney general, says he's very pleased that the court laid the ground work for a quicker resolution of legal challenges raised by the Milwaukee Brewers baseball club. The issue may now reach a final court decision early in 1986, rather than late next year.



Perspective

Big league "users"

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Major league baseball, the national pasttime, had its image further tarnished last week by an event perceived to be potentially more damaging than another strike.

Last week, in federal court in Pittsburgh, a minimum of 13 professional baseball players were named as habitual users of cocaine. Some critics have stated that this "drug connection" is the darkest cloud to hover over the sport since the "Black Sox" scandal when eight Chicago White Sox players admitted that they had been offered and agreed to take bribes from professional gamblers to fix the 1919 World Series.

The players were named in the trial of Curtis Strong, an alleged cocaine dealer who was formerly a clubhouse caterer for the Philadelphia Phillies. Although the prosecuting attorneys did their best to conceal the identities of the players, the progression of Strong's trial made it impossible and the players who testified were granted immunity from prosecution.

New York Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez testified that he had, at one time, use cocaine regularly. "I consider cocaine the devil on this earth."

He went on to say that he acquired an "insatiable desire for more" and used "massive" amounts in 1980 after separating from his wife.

Hernandez also revealed, in testimony, that he had played under the influence of the drug and was able to break from its grip in June 1983 just before being traded from the St. Louis Cardinals to the New York Mets.

After waking with a nose bleed one morning and finally realizing that drug use was causing detrimental weight loss, Hernandez came to the conclusion that all was not well. "I had the shakes and I wound up throwing a gram down the toilet."

One of the other players named in testimony was formerly a Houston Astro and is currently a Los Angeles Dodger, Enos Cabell. Cabell revealed that he began using cocaine in 1978 and peaked, in regard to personal consumption, in 1981. "That was the strike year and we weren't playing and I had nothing to do."

The prosecuting attorney in the Strong trial, Assistant U.S. Attorney James Ross, stated that "Major league baseball is not on trial here. Curtis Strong is."

Yet Strong's attorney, Adam Renfroe, believes that the players named in court were "nothing but junkies. Hero-criminals [who] sell drugs and are still selling drugs to baseball players around the league. [My client is a] scapegoat [for players who are] rich and powerful and have been given immunity so they do not have to worry about going to jail."

Baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth has put emphasis on treatment, as opposed to punishment, because his stated intent is to "get rid of drugs, not players."

Unique evaluation week implemented

Rich Langberg
News Editor

After an absence of nearly 20 years, UW-Stout has brought back evaluation week. The last four-year school in the University of Wisconsin system to implement such a week, the faculty and administration insist it is different because teachers aren't required to give a comprehensive final.

"The faculty can give a last unit exam or just have the students hand in their final project," said Stout Faculty Senate President Robert Moran. "A comprehensive final is not a necessity."

Vice-Chancellor Wes Face stresses this fact also. "The teacher doesn't have to sit the class down and give them a written exam."

Face said that former Stout President William Micheels ended evaluation week back in the 1960's. "President Micheels believed in continuous evaluation without the buildup to one big semester-ending test. The 'evaluation week' was meant to just organize the last week of classes, and Micheels arbitrarily dropped it."

There has been controversy for a number of years on the way that semesters have come to a close. The administration has tried in the past to force teachers to hold class right up to the very last day, but a majority of the students are usually long gone. The new plan is a way of dealing with this as well.

"People have been coming to Faculty Senate for three years looking for a better way to culminate the semester," Moran said. "The teachers are obliged to hold their class at the designated time under the new plan."

"This policy has been set up to prevent the bunching of exams on one day," Face said. "I guess the teacher could ask the registrar if they want to change, but I really don't think it will be possible."

Even with a computer that tries to fairly distribute tests over the week, students may still face the problem of having three or more tests on the same day, sometimes in a row. Other universities grant waivers so a student can take an exam at another time if this should happen. Does Stout have a mechanism for dealing with this?

"I'm not sure if there is one," said Moran. "The student can work individually with the teacher if they really want to change."

Face said, "There is no mechanism like that. When a student signs up for a class, they may pick a section because it has a certain evaluation period. If some students try to change the date and get the majority of the class behind them, the rest of the class may be forced to go along even though they desire the assigned time."

There are some disadvantages to the way that evaluation week is set up. Classes that only meet for a quarter are the most adversely affected. Courses that are held in the first and third quarters have no evaluation week, while courses that meet in the second and fourth quarters lose precious days. Will evaluation week lead to the end of the quarter system here at Stout?

"I don't know if that would be the end of it. It is a pretty complex situation," said Claudia Smith, an art professor who is chairing the committee that is evaluating evaluation week. "One thing we will be looking at is the impact on quarter classes, but I have no preconceptions on what our recommendations will be."

Smith's committee consists of 13 members including faculty, students and administration. Right now they are meeting every other week trying to come up with a method for evaluation.

"I anticipate a questionaire of some kind to be handed out to some group of people," Smith said. "We hope to come up with some preliminary recommendations early next year, but after only one semester, it may be difficult to come up with some definite conclusions."

There is one more problem that evaluation week presents, a problem that won't be felt until next school year. The Wisconsin Legislature will almost certainly pass a bill this session forcing the UW schools to start the fall semester after September 1.

"There is no one here that thinks that bill won't pass," Face said. "Because of that, if the semester runs from September 2 until December 23, that leaves us something like 78 weekdays for classes."

"Since we have to have 170 school days, that means the second semester will have to have almost 100 days," Face continued. "This poses the question of when evaluation week will be held."

Face also said that when UW-Madison tried a schedule that had many more days in one semester, it created "chaos." There is no doubt an alternative calendar will have to be drawn up, and there is a student-faculty committee working on it.

There is also little doubt that there will be some wrinkles to iron out since this is the first semester in so long that there has been an evaluation week. Hopefully students will realize this, and that the recommendations of Smith's committee will help future evaluation weeks be smooth and successful.

Committee seeks new solutions

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The Community/University Relations Committee meeting last week occured as the Executive Director of the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce, Duane Bauer gave a press release concerning his goal to work at achieving a mutually beneficial understanding in town/gown relations.

No matter whom you talk to in Menomonie, city residents or members of the UW-Stout community, there is an agreement that a misunderstanding exists about the separate purposes of the university community and Menomonie residents.

Bauer, a Community/University Relations Committee member, recognized the problem in town/gown relations and established his goals for solving it. "As much as some individuals from both segments would like to believe that we don't need each other to survive, I firmly believe that we do. Rather than watch this gap widen, I would like to start the process of the community and university working with each other, stopping this gap from widening any further."

Bauer thinks better communication between the university and area businessmen will help alleviate the problem. He sees a lot of doubts raised by Menomonie businessmen concerning the goals behind the new Student Center. "Some of our business people tend to look at it as unfair," Bauer said. Bauer continued, "I'd like better explanation from the university to the businesses concerning their plans."

Bill Siedlecki, assistant director of the new Student Center and chairman of the Community/University Relations Committee, says they have no plans to compete with area businesses. "We don't even advertise off-campus, much less try to market ourselves to that group. Our most important concern here is the campus and that the students like it."

Another misconception that Siedlecki addressed was the belief that the Student Center was paid for by state funds. "State law would not allow the use of state funds to support auxiliary services, he said."

> I would like to start the process of the community and university working with each other...
> —Duane Bauer

Committee member, Charles Buelow, director of university relations, hopes Menomonie will make the most of what the Student Center has to offer. "There are few communities this size having a facility with the capabilities of the new Student Center. If it (Menomonie) doesn't take advantage of it that's too bad. We are only limited by our imagination concerning what we can do with it." Speaking more directly about the added revenue potential for the community Buelow said, "Conferences will attract visitors to the community. They'll generate a lot of extra dollars to the community."

Buelow's statement about attracting conferences to the community can be seen as a partial answer to Bauer's goal to "Bring residents outside the Menomonie community here to do their shopping."

The question of some Menomonie business owners is, where will these dollars be going? Harvey Probst, the owner of the Parkside Supper Club and Motel said, "So many things at Stout hurt business. They take away business from in-town meetings and weddings because they can put them on cheaper."

Probst said he was willing to discuss possible resolutions to the problem with the university as he saw them, yet he was unsure much could be done to improve the situation. "It never hurts to talk," he said. "I know they aren't going to slow it down once they get the business in there."

Gary Buckley, a Stout graduate and owner of the Log Jam, wasn't concerned about the effect the new Student Center will have on his business. He thought the overall result would be beneficial to area restaurant business as competition becomes more intense and restaurants improve in order to maintain their share of the market.

Police Chief Dennis Beety, also a member of the Community/University Relations Committee and a Stout graduate, identified other things than the new Student Center which hurt town/gown relations. He recognized that Stout's student body has more than doubled in the past 20 years and yet the number of dormitories on campus hasn't grown at all. He sees the resultant increase in the number of students forced to live off-campus working to create friction between Menomonie residents and Stout students.

Asked to reveal the number of Stout students cited for noise ordinance violations last year and to compare that number to the total number of such citations issued, Chief Beety said, "The police department has neither an interest or reason to compile that type of data."

In case you're wondering the odds of your being cited for a noise ordinance violation, last year 327 complaints were investigated and 24 of those received citations.

There is almost a limitless number of issues affecting town/gown relations. The Community/University Relations Committee exists to encourage members of the university community and Menomonie residents to discuss the problems in town/gown relations constructively so a mutual understanding is achieved benefiting the community as a whole.

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

Dear Patty,
Landlord Tenant Rep,

Dear Patty, Landlord/Tenant Rep
The problems we are experiencing with our landlord are far from trivial. They are legal matters that need legal attention. Simply we want some advice without paying for it with an arm or a leg.

Signed, Keeping My Limbs

Feature

Dear Limb Keeper,
Its nice to hear you're standing on your own two feet (no pun intended) for legal rights as a tenant. I agree, it's hard to resolve these disputes when your knowledge and funds are at a minimum.

There are answers, and the resources are right under our noses. Here on campus we can contact Dr. Elaine Fitzgerald, an associate professor of business. She has helped many of us in the past with legal questions. UW-Stout also offers an attorney referral service. This allows the students to refer to a professional attorney at law.

These attorneys are selected on a rotating basis. The students would telephone ex. 1181 between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. The attorney offers advice to the student over the phone at no charge.

Other resources would be the legal investigators service out of Eau Claire. They can be reached at 1-715-839-3853. The consumer protection department is always an excellent resource. Contact them by writing 1727 Loring St., Altoona, WI 54720 or phoning 1-800-362-3020.

So there you have it in a nut shell. Take advantage of these great resources, soon you will see the light at the end of the tunnel, your spirits will lift and maybe, just maybe, an answer will arise!

Sincerely,
Patty Strassman LLT REP

Town/Gown committee strives for improved understanding

The University community and the City of Menomonie are inextricably linked, whether they like it or not. Yet barely a week goes by without one group claiming that they have been taken advantage of or wronged by the other. Although these two groups have functioned together for ninety-two years, their co-existence at times has been less than peaceful.

We believe that neither side is totally wrong nor totally right.

On the side of the community, a segment of Stout students conduct themselves in a manner which casts a wary eye on all of us. Inconsideration of our neighbors, vandalism, excessive noise and public urination are some of the frequent and unjustified acts some students insist on repeating year after year.

On the side of Stout students, many in the community unfairly blame them for all of the city's ills. Local residents are also responsible for shameless acts such as destroying flowers, breaking windows, disorderly conduct, immature operation of motor vehicles and a general lack of respect for others.

Although both groups have equally wronged, its quite obvious to us that they must also share many positive things. Each would be hard pressed to function without the other. And the fact that they do rely on each other is, we believe, beyond both question and debate.

The students benefit from a locale which offers a wide variety of goods and services that are geographically convenient to students.

The community benefits from a legion of consumers who bring enhanced prosperity to this locale. And our parents further advance the local economy when they venture to Northwestern Wisconsin.

But because the relationship is still tenuous, we are heartened by the efforts of the Community/University Relations Committee. The members of this body, which are drawn from the university and community, strive for constructive solutions to mutually recognized problems.

Because consensus is virtually assured, yet somewhat elusive at times, we urge those represented by these committee members to temper their differences and resist an escalation of past indiscretions.

Those striving to lessen our differences and further the understanding of two groups, which hold obviously different priorities, could be disheartened and less productive if they believe their constituents are mutually indifferent.

Crash and Burn

Unhuman offense creates shockwave

Matt Kalina

Stout is definitely radical this year. No, I'm not talking about dominating leftist activism or fervent reactionarism or even staunch passifism, although the former may very well be the case. What I'm talking about is the sheer outrageousness that has been running wild around campus since the beginning of the semester.

Where else can you see three people riding one motorcycle down the streets? This another Stout first. What I would like to know is if there is a legal limit for the number of cycle passengers?

The completely frenzied, unhinged, "where's Bozo," zany time has increased at a shotgun pace this year. I always held that Stout was just a little more off the wall than the average campus.

I agree with Chancellor Swanson 100 percent when he said in his opening address that this is a new Stout and that school spirit has changed for the better.

I think a widespread shift in the personality of the campus to a more flippant attitude can be healthy, as long as it is under some control and is held at bay.

It has begun to appear that many students have began to break the "I just want to get out of school and get a job mold." At least I hope so. I am tired of the wearisome and monotonous worship of Yuppification by many Stout students.

Yuppification is for the selfish bourgeoise perfectionists who really don't know what they want out of life but still seek a world dominated by material goods, hoping to someday reach a place in society that just does not exist.

Maybe a good cure for all of the Yuppies and for those planning to be one someday is to spend two years in the Peace Corps and observe how big the problems of the world like mass starvation and overpopulation can be instead of worrying about how many credit cards the Yup can collect. But maybe it's once a yuppie always a yuppie.

Just as Thomas Jefferson once said, "A little rebellion now and then is a good thing," I also genuinely believe that being a little rad is a good thing, but two weeks ago things got out of hand, as inhuman savageness reared its grotesque head.

It started out as the usual Thursday night. Traditionally, Thursday nights and parties are synonymous at Stout, and Thursday Sept. 5 was no exception. Face it. Most of the time Thursday nights are inflamed with partying in unbelievable magnitudes.

The local bars held onto large crowds late into the unusually searing muggy night. On campus, tunes echoed out into the streets from a dance at CKTO. People roamed the campus uncommonly late into the night. At two in the morning people still wandered the sidewalks and streets on-campus and off. For many it was too hot to sleep.

Something didn't seem quite right. Too many hoardes of people were stragglinging about with no particular place to go.

Something was ready to explode.

Emotions seem flared and pented-up from the onslaught of school and new preoccupations.

It felt like something grave was ready to happen.

Unfortunately something grave did happen.

A female student was allegedly raped by three men in Milnes Hall early that Friday morning.

Coupled with two other reported sexual assaults during that weekend, the campus was initially shocked and frightened. Then Stout got the state-wide attention it simply didn't want. Reports of the rape hit the papers, airwaves and television news in a matter of days.

There's no use in saying that something like this could have been prevented. If someone is strongly determined to commit a crime, there is no way to stop them.

However hopeless the situation may now seem, I regret to inform you that the disconsolation will linger on.

Chamber chief states priorities for next term

Prior to being appointed to the position of Executive Director of the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce, I have spent eighteen years in Menomonie selling insurance. Along with working my insurance business, I was also involved with the Chamber of Commerce in various ways, the last two and one-half years on the Board of Directors.

On beginning my new career on July 1, 1985, one of the first things I did was to write down the various problems that I thought the Menomonie area had with which the Chamber of Commerce could be instrumental in helping with the solution.

Guest

Duane Bauer

I have given myself three goals and did set these goals in priority, the first goal dealing with trying to unify the efforts of what I see as three geographical areas within the City of Menomonie. These three areas are the shopping area of North Meenomonie, downtown Menomonie and the Lammer's shopping area.

My third goal was to bring the outside area into a more involved and participating role of the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce.

This leaves my second goal right in the middle and I think that being in the middle is very fitting. I see two segments of our society, the community and the University. Like the three separate geographical areas of Menomonie. I also see these two segments of our society working as separate units rather than as a team complementing each other. As much as some individuals from both segments would like to believe that we don't need each other to survive, I firmly believe that we do. Rather than watch this gap between the segments widen, I would like to start the process of the community and the University working with each other, stopping this gap from widening any further. I would actually hope to start seeing this gap narrow and eventually form no gap at all, with two units working smoothly as a team.

How do I plan on starting this goal into motion? I feel that if we could understand each other more fully as to just what our roles are, it would make acceptance of the need for each other a lot easier. To understand, one needs knowledge and knowledge is available with communications. I feel the Chamber of Commerce can help with the communications end of this problem. Through the news media I have access of letting the public know what is happening. The help I need in accomplishing this is information as to what is going on within the community and the University. Keep me informed and involved as to what is happening and this will be a start, a beginning.

The three goals that I have set up for myself have given me a challenge that some people have said could not be met. I feel that if we begin to head in the direction of fulfilling these goals and continue in this same direction, perhaps that is success itself.

Roth questioned

This letter is directed at the sports department of the Stoutonia. Since Mr. Tom Roth has the title of Sports Editor, it seems appropriate to focus on him. In his column last week, Roth questioned if Stout coaches were recruiting the right people to attend our school. His argument was that two of the three men charged in the sexual assault case were freshmen basketball recruits. He also posed the question of athletes taking up spaces on class lists and keeping the law enforcement agencies in business.

Well, Mr. Roth, once again you have attacked Stout's athletic department from your one-sided point of view. Out of all the athletes recruited for all sports throughout all of the years at Stout, you single out two recruits and point your finger at the entire athletic department.

There are good people out there in athletics, Mr. Roth. Not all athletes are rapists and criminals. And I think if you did some research, you would find a very small percentage of athletes in trouble with the law. In fact, I think you would find a smaller percentage of criminals in athletics than in the general public.

As Sports Editor of a school paper in a college of this size, you should focus on the positive side of athletics. You should try to promote the athletic department at Stout rather than attack it. We can not ignore something as serious as a rape, but it doesn't have to be blamed on the athletic department.

Respectfully,

Canteen removed

Many students are disappointed with the removal of the vending machines from the canteen area in the library. The standard response by the library administration is that the new Student Center is better equipped to handle food service. I would like to respond to this position.

No one expects the library to be in the food service business although a canteen was built into the library from the start. A contract is made with a vendor, who is in the food service business, to service and maintain the machines. To say that the Student Center is better equipped for this service is false because the Student Center uses a vendor just as the library did.

It was pleasant to take a break and enjoy some refreshments while still in a study atmosphere; the Student Center is a meeting and gathering place.

The canteen was utilized almost all of the time. It seems to me the Student Center is being used an an excuse to withdraw from the students a convenient service without their needs being taken into consideration.

Sincerely yours,
Randy Kempf

Identity threat?

The picture that the Stoutonia published of two students alleged to have committed sexual assault has created dangerous cases of mistaken identity for black male students on Stout's campus. If you would have taken a survey you would have realized that many people cannot distinguish one black person from another. However, a survey would not have been necessary if you would have used the campus resources that are available to you. Just because you got permission to run the picture along with the article doesn't make it right. Does the Stoutonia put the publics right to know over the safety of its students?

CAMPUS SLANT/ Does antagonism exist between Stout students and townspeople?

Natalie Erb,
Senior,
Early Childhood Education

It's a positive situation until it comes to the bar situation. I don't think they (the townspeople) like that at all. They think we are here to party and cause damage and that's about it. We bring business to the community and they value that.

Rod Osterhaus,
Freshman,
Technology Education

The first week up here we had that community action picnic at Wilson Park and we got along pretty good. I haven't had any problems with my neighbors. A lot of people I meet in the stores are pretty nice. I haven't heard of any conflicts between the community and the campus.

Liz Kalleneach,
Sophomore,
Early Childhood Education

We do give them business. Going uptown to the bars sets off bad feelings. They think that people who don't live here really don't care what happens. They're obnoxious, and we just give it right back.

Todd Magolan,
Sophomore,
Industrial Technology

I don't really think it's that bad. There's a few cases where the townspeople don't like the students and the students don't like the townspeople, but other than that, they both go their own ways and ignore each other. They must think that we think we're better than they are.

Alana Weekes,
Sophomore,
Clinical Dietetics

The freshman students don't get along with the elderly people. The older students tend to be a bit more mature and understanding. Unless it's international students, most students tend to stay away (from the townspeople). The international students want to know what the people are like so they tend to be a bit more friendlier so they can mix with society. If all students would show some self respect I think they would be accepted.

Sexual assault litigation enters second week of legal proceedings

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

The three Stout students accused of sexually assaulting an 18-year-old woman appeared at a preliminary hearing Thursday, September 12, in the Dunn County Courthouse.

This hearing is to decide if the prosecuting attorney has enough evidence to require the defendant to enter a plea to charges against him. The three men; Joseph Woods, 19, of Minneapolis; Dennis Green, 19, of Peoria; and Gino Collins, 18, of Burlington, Wisconsin; appeared separately before Judge James Wendland in Dunn County Circuit Court.

Wendland refused motions to dismiss charges against Woods and Green. He ruled that remarks by witness Michael Weseli, 17, quoted in a criminal complaint were not false and mistated as proclaimed by defense lawyers Donald Fast and William Schembera. He also ruled that Green was legally arrested on the basis of warrant. He did not, however, rule on whether or not Woods was legally arrested on grounds of probable cause.

An amended complaint against Collins was dismissed by the judge on Thursday, but on Friday District Attorney Michael Furnstahl filed a new criminal complaint against Collins. Motions on the new criminal charges were to be held on Tuesday.

Collins was released Friday on a $10,000 bond and has voluntarily withdrawn from the university.

The prosecution stated the woman went to Milnes Hall with the three men believing there was going to be a party. Each allegedly sexually assaulted her while the others muffled her screams. Green stated however, that all had sexual intercourse with her, but that no one held her down. After the alleged assault, the victim was left lying in the hall crying outside of the room.

The three are charged with being parties to sexual assault and being parties to false imprisonment.

A 17-year-old witness to the alleged assault who did not report it and made no attempt to stop it will not be charged. According to Furnstahl there is no law that states you have to report a crime. He also said that the witness was not threatened by the suspects, and that he cooperated fully with the police.

South Hall attempts to establish escort service for student safety

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Growing concern for the safety of students on campus has inspired members of South Hall to attempt to re-establish an escort service. Maureen O'Heir, Carl Rehberger, Amy Totluss, Mary Kugel, Paul Kniez, and others, with the help of hall director Bob Christoffel and the group's advisor, Stuart Decelles, have undertaken this project.

A survey was sent to the members of South Hall. One portion of the survey contained a copy of the recent Milwaukee Journal article concerning the rape case at Stout. The second portion of the survey asked hall residents if they wanted an escort service, how often they would use it, what hours it should be available, and whether or not they would like to volunteer to help.

Persons interested in the group met for the first time September 4th. O'Heir said, "We tried to do this last year but this year we have had more response because of the rape." She said approximately 35-40 people showed up and that several persons expressed interest in being volunteer escorts. At the meeting an executive group of sixteen was formed. This group met on September 16th to organize the service.

According to O'Heir, the service will utilize male/female escort teams. Desk workers will take phone calls from those in need of an escort. They will then notify one of the escort teams on call. The team will then check out at the main desk, meet and escort the caller, and then check in at the desk.

O'Heir said that the hall planned to have three teams on call. Weeknight hours would be from 7-12 and would be extended until 2 a.m. on weekends. In the winter, service would begin an hour earlier. At the present time, the service is limited to South Hall residents. O'Heir said, "Before we can go campus-wide, the other halls need to set up their own escort services." The service is also limited to the campus area. "We may meet people at the edge of campus." said O'Heir concerning people returning from other areas.

> "The escort service is for both males and females. It's to prevent muggings, beatings and sexual assault—not just rape. —Maureen O'Heir"

Escorts will be residents of South Hall. O'Heir said, "We hope by having male/female escort teams we will eliminate any forseeable problems with the escorts." Carl Rehberger stressed, "The escort service is for both males and females. It's to prevent muggings, beatings, and sexual assault — not just rape."

Other groups are also taking interest in preventing assaults. On September 17 in the Crystal Ballroom, the SSA held a meeting for people interested in forming an escort service. On September 18, a sexual assault awareness seminar was held in CKTO.

Student opinions on the need for an escort service differ. Amy Thiel, a CKTO resident, said, "It (an escort service) would be good for the people who have night classes. It should be available for the people who want to use it." Wendi Hill opposed this and said, "I don't think we need one at this small of a school. You usually know somebody you can walk home with." Rehberger, a strong supporter of South Hall's escort service said, "People aren't going to be aware until something bad happens to them." O'Heir summed up the idea behind an escort service in a few short words: "Our program and others won't work unless people become aware. We want our program to work — we want people to be aware and we want people to be protected."

Student regent sought; SSA needs senators

Barb Caron
News Reporter

The ninth session of the 16th congress of the Stout Student Association (SSA) convened at 7 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center.

Business discussed included an open forum held by JoAnna Richards, United Council (UC) President. She is traveling around to promote UC among member UW campuses. UC is looking for a student to fill a Board of Regents position. The student must be a part-time student that would serve a two-year term on the board.

In the presidential report, JoAnn Prange discussed the Leadership Conference which will be held here at Stout on Saturday, Oct. 12. The conference is open to all organizations on campus. The registration fee is $7.50. Topics covered at the conference will be finance, programming and group dynamics. Also discussed was a possible Martin Luther King Jr. day, and an expansion of the United Way Penny Drive.

A motion was made and then passed to appoint Tracey Lea Landis as chairperson of the Sexual Assault Prevention committee formed by the Senate to look into making the campus a safer place to be.

Administrative Assistant Vic Sundvall informed the Senate that by next week a recommendation will be brought before Senate for appointment of the Minorities Affairs senator.

A motion was made to appoint Mark Nichols to one of the open off-campus senator positions. This motion passed. There are still two off-campus positions open.

Inter Resident Hall Committee (IRHC) Senator Peggy Coughlin informed the Senate that the IRHC Leadership Conference will be held Sept. 28 and 29.

Spectrum 28 producer displays many talents

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

Max Herbach displays a wide spectrum of talents in both his work and personal life.

Herbach, host and producer of WHWC-TV's local public affairs program "Spectrum 28," is ready to begin another season of work in public television.

Herbach, in consultation with a Channel 28 representative, is responsible for selecting the topics for each of the season's 36 programs.

"There will be a great deal of variety in this year's programming," Herbach said. "We plan to touch on several major issues."

The first show of the season, scheduled for Oct. 4, will be a live call-in program on legalized gambling in Wisconsin. Herbach explained that this should prove to be a very controversial discussion revolving around money and morals.

Other programs planned for this fall include an informative program on Halley's Comet, a discussion on AIDS and an interview with former British Prime Minister Lord Harold Wilson.

"Doing 'Spectrum 28' is exciting and different," Herbach said. "Each week I feel as though my lease on life has been renewed."

Herbach is also involved in the production of documentary specials for public television. His past documentaries have included programs on foreign refugees, alcoholism and programs that feature the talents of people within the show's viewing area.

Herbach says that he enjoys producing these specials because he is allowed to spend a greater amount of time and money on each program.

Herbach began his career in television by "pure accident." A former English professor, Herbach was acting in a play at Tainter Memorial Theater when a friend suggested that he audition to be the host of "Spectrum 28."

His new career took off from there. Now Herbach has almost totally abandon his teaching, except for giving occasional guest lectures as "one who knows a little about television."

When he's not busy at the studio, Herbach is able to devote time to his many other interests.

"My spare time is divided between playing tennis and piano," Herbach said. "Of course, I also like to spend a lot of time with my family," he added, proudly displaying the photographs on his cluttered desk.

Music is an important part of Herbach's life. Besides playing the piano, Herbach also plays the synthesizer and takes a strong interest in new technological advances in music. He hopes to someday equip his home with a stereo system that utilizes compact discs for "totally incredible sounds."

"I like to try new things all of the time," Herbach said. Currently, he is working on a variety of projects, many of which involve improving "Spectrum 28."

Herbach and the director of "Spectrum 28," Dick Dodge, are both involved in increasing student viewership of the program.

"Lots of students watch the show in the classroom as a supplement to class materials." Herbach explained. "We'd like to see viewership increase on a regular basis."

Herbach's plans to attract student viewers include promoting the program on the campus cable television channel. He would also like to show programs that are more student-oriented.

"It would be a lot of fun," Herbach said, "to shoot concerts live from the student center's Great Hall and intersperse the performances with interviews from the musicians."

He has done this at various other locations and says that "it's a great way to get a feel about what people are like."

Herbach would also like to do more work outside of the studio. However, he says that a lack of funding from the federal government greatly limits the amount of money allowed for travel.

With his life and desk so cluttered with personal and professional projects, one wonders how this man ever finds time to relax. However, Herbach doesn't appear too concerned. As the sign above his desk reads "If a cluttered desk is the sign of a cluttered mind, what does an empty desktop signify?"

Ron LaSalle and the LaSalle Twin Bullets upstage Bad Boy

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Mountains of equipment, miles of cords. Jacks, plugs, guitar picks and drumsticks.

Rock and roll fans got a double blast last Thursday from Contemporary Music Productions first concert of the year. Ron LaSalle and the Twin Bullet Band opened for headliners Bad Boy.

Review

This was the first heavy-duty shakedown of the Great Hall. To paraphrase that prime rocker, Chuck Berry, there was a whole lot of shakin goin on.

Concerts are like icebergs, what you see isn't all there is. The mass is behind and below. Rehearsal time, studio time, unpaid and overworked. Hours on the road, unpack and set up, check, repair, rock til you drop, pack, party if there's time and move on. Maybe you sleep, maybe not.

Bad Boy has a massive amount of sound equipment. It also has the highest paid tech crew in Wisconsin, according to Matt Oliva, Bad Boy guitar technician.

Bad Boy provided the sound system for the concert, which Oliva helped supervise. While LaSalle's Twin Bullet band kicked out a sound check, Oliva tuned guitars on a digital meter. He sprayed the necks and strings with silicone slicker.

"We were in the studio yesterday for about 12 hours," Oliva said. "The boys won't be here til about a half-hour before they go on."

LaSalle and the Twin Bullets jumped on a real hot version of the Door's classic "Roadhouse Blues" which dissolved into a funky Peter Gunn theme. There were solos all the way around to test levels. There were inside jokes and laughs.

Surrounded by monitors, drums and a fan, sat the Bullet's drummer. Cut-off T-shirt, and gray leather gloves, his blond hair blowing back in the wind from the fan; the man was driving. Driving rhythm, driving his 1963 pearl Jaguar in the breeze, driving to the Roadhouse Blues. "Keep your eyes on the road, your hands upon the wheel..."

Ron LaSalle, class A performer, crashed through the lyrics and put out some antics. The man has a good time.

An hour left before the concert, the band drifted backstage. They were quiet, drinking water, instant coffee; bits of shop talk and smoking.

Bassist Mike Farren has been with the band for three years. Before that, other bands, including Major Striker with Bullet saxophone player Garard Montague.

"Everybody in the band is from someplace different," Farren said. "It's the melting pot." When asked where he called home, he laughed. "Home? I haven't seen home since February. I know I used to live in Baltimore though," he said with a grin.

Matt McCauley plays keyboards. He talks with a Colorado accent from his Denver years. He's been playing for about 14 years. His musical influences — "For me, it was Keith Emerson. I started out on a Hammond."

Although he took lessons, he learned to play what he heard. "I learned what was around, remember "Ina Da Gadda Da Vida?" We laughed. The only hit from Iron Butterfly, 1968. "You need a quote, you'll want to quote me on this — the new Coke sucks," McCauley said. He meant it.

The band passed the time. They dressed, ate bits and pieces of the backstage fare. They talked shop. Producers and engineers, workers and slackers. They talked with Oliva about Milwaukee club acoustics.

When asked about the drinking age change and the effect on bar bands, the answer was the same, "It didn't help." "In most states, it's 21, so we're used to it."

"Worse yet, is the videos," Farren said. "That's the truth," McCauley agreed, "like in Denver, alot of good clubs went over to videos. That's a thing that is tough to fight."

Time passed. They dressed and sat around. For all the onstage energy of Ron LaSalle and the Twin Bullet Band, backstage they were pretty mellow.

Soon, there was the introduction and the door opened. "We're on now?" someone said in surprise. "I thought we had 15 minutes. I'm just not psychologically prepared," and there was laughter.

Montague, the sax player, couldn't find his sunglasses. "Those can't be my sunglasses, they're too cheap to be mine," he said, kidding Matt Oliva. "You mean I have to face them in all that glaring reality?" As he neared the stage door, he pretended to panic, "My hair, my hair, how does my hair look?"

Rarely does an unfamiliar band hit the Stout stage and capture an audience the way LaSalle and the Bullets did. They played Bob Seeger and the Silver Bullets'

Folk, rock and jazz will interplay at UW-Stout when Marienne Kreitlow and Dennis Pearne appear for the Pawn Live series sponsored by the Pawn Commission. They will perform September 19, 20, and 21.

This duo is strengthened by their distinct voice qualities and a variety of musical talents. Pearne is a guitarist, bassist, vocalist, song writer, engineer and producer.

Preview

Krietlow is said to be "an unassuming gem". She is a singer, song writer, flutist, pianist and guitarist. Each of the musicians work comfortably in a variety of genres, folk to jazz.

Albums are out on the Good Company Productions label by both of these artists. Krietlow's solo debut album "Wrapped Around the Sun" has been acclaimed as a sound that could not be beat.

Pearne was the founder and principal songwriter for the band, Rising Tide. This group's album was forceful with words, music and rhythm about contemporary and powerful issues.

Together these individuals blend their talents to create strikingly original material and interpretations of folk, pop and blues.

The Pawn series will finish the month of September with a classic Alfred Hitchcock film, Rear Window. This film will be presented at the Pawn September 26, 27, and 28 at 9:00 p.m..

"Rear Window is the kind of masterpiece they don't make any more. . . It is a genuine thrill to have the real McCoy back on the marque again," wrote Rex Reed of the New York Post. Starring in this thriller is James Stewart, Grace Kelly, Wendill Corey and Thelma Ritter.

October will bring comedy to the Pawn. Steve Marmel is a student at UW-Madison who has been performing for two years. He recently won a Star Search affiliated contest at the Palmer House, a Hilton Hotel in Chicago. There, this comedian beat 20 other performers in an eight week competition. He then performed at the Palmer House for two weeks and was featured during the Miss Chicago contest.

Like the average college student, Marmel is working his way through college and will perform at Stout October 3,4, and 5.

Lee Murdock is a gift to the world of traditional music who will perform at Stout October 24, 25, and 26. "This is what I build my performance on; breathing new life into the old songs and, by writing songs myself, adding to the ongoing process of folk music," said Murdock.

Critics have acclaimed this artist as "not just an entertainer . . . his philosphy of life is clear from his songs to the smile on his face." Murdock has a poetic songwriting style, an advanced technique and understanding of the guitar and a clear yet distinct singing style.

Another classic film will be featured at the Pawn October 1 and 2 at 9:00 p.m. Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band is "Bound to enthrall those who love nonstop music".

Michael Bird will be visiting Stout November 14, 15 and 16. Bird finds roots in music from Dan Fogelburg, Jim Croce and Harry Chapin. Showing a warm personality and an uncanny rapport with his audiences, Bird performs solo at piano or guitar.

The cold days of December 6 and 7 will be warmed by the music of the Graf Brothers. These brothers have an open lyric style which affords individual interpretations and instrumental arrangements that use unique chord voicing and polyrhythms to create the texture of their songs. Over the years, this duo has been influenced by James Taylor, Paul Simon and more recently Genesis, Pat Metheny and the Police.

Casablanca will finish the semester's Pawn Live series. This classic film will be shown December 12, 13, and 14 at 9:00 p.m. in the Pawn.

Pawn Live is a commission of the University Programming Board of the Stout Student Association. Meetings are held every Monday at 3:00p.m. in the Briarwood Room of the Memorial Student Center. Pawn performances are held on Thursdays in the Price Commons at 8:15 and 9:15 p.m. and Fridays and Saturdays in the Pawn at 9:15 and 10:15 p.m..

Stout offers free learning experience; retired students expand education

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

No credits, no grades - just the desire and satisfaction of acquiring knowledge and skills. Wouldn't this be the ideal state in which to learn? Three extraordinary UW-Stout students are doing just that as they explore classes in art and writing.

At Stout, citizens who are 62 years of age and older are able to attend classes for free. Credits are audited. The retired students are responsible for lab fees and other expenses related to their chosen courses.

Mildred Holden has been retired for a year and a half. This fall she began her first semester at Stout in order to study drawing.

"I'm not lacking in things to do, but I want to keep my mind busy. This class is making me much more observant," said Holden.

So far, she has been pleased with her drawing course. "This is the first time I've earnestly tried to draw," said Holden. Before this time she had been a habitual doodler and was involved in other creative endeavors such as cake decorating.

For 45 years this woman has been married. She and her husband, Roy, have raised a family. She was a cook for 14 years at the Myrtle Werth Medical Center. Now they drive to campus three times a week for her class. Holden said, "My husband has been very supportive. He is amused at my attempts."

This cheerful woman has not felt many signs of a generation gap between herself and her fellow students. She has found that the students offer her more respect than they do to one another. Three times a week she trudges up the steps of Applied Arts carrying her large portfolio. Holden said, "I get a kick out of how the kids get out of my way."

If her drawing class proves to be fruitful, she hopes to look into other courses offered at Stout. According to Holden, age and intelligence do not make a difference in school. Devoted time and interest are the keys to learning.

For Kay Barnard, education at Stout has been a continual affair. In 1941 she earned her Bachelor of Science Degree, and in 1967 her Masters Degree of Science of Home Economic Education. After her career as an educator, Barnard retired. Since 1982 she has continually taken classes in philosphy and art at Stout.

"The fun part is meeting the students and seeing their work. Contrary to what most people think of art students, they are hard-workers," said Barnard.

> I'm going to be a writer.
> —Howard Helgeson, 70-year-old student

Currently, Barnard is studying painting. She sells her art which pays for her materials. Before going to classes, this artist was not fully satisfied with her work. "Instructors are able to give impartial critiques which are useful and helpful," said Barnard.

After six years of service to church bizarres and five years to the Municipal Library Project of Menomonie, Barnard ran out of community activities. She decided to go back to school. According to her, it is "the perfect set up" and a pleasure to study when you want to learn.

In the areas of art and philosophy the students have been very accepting of Barnard. Only on occassion has she felt a gap of generations in terms of attitudes. What struck her most was that girls can now freely express what they want to be in the future.

This student's future will involve more courses in art a maybe a few classes in the social sciences. Barnard's family knows she will do what she wants. Not only is she involved with the Stout community, but she and her husband, Dr. David P. Barnard, Dean of Learning Resources, have had two of their three children graduate from this university.

"I'm going to be a writer." This is the positive attitude of Howard Helgeson, another of these "ideal type" students.

This semester is his first at Stout and he is taking a creative writing course. For Helgeson, this class has opened up new schools of thought. He said, " I've thought up things I've never thought before."

So far, this 70 year old student has written what he calls "kid's stuff". These stories are about imaginary subjects such as "the book that sneezed".

Helgeson has taken courses at other universities. At Stout he believes it is different. Robert Schuler, his instructor, has been an "ego booster" and an outstanding teacher. One thing that impressed this student is that the instructor gave the class his home phone number. Helgeson said "How many places do you get that? The teacher is really concerned. That is important."

Along with writing, Helgeson has begun other hobbies and activities. He bicycles to class. He said, "I bought a bike and it has been a new life for me." He has also purchased a sewing machine in order to do his own mending and alterations.

Helgeson's goal in his writing course is to be able to write down a group of words and make a story out of it. According to his past, many stories may be written about his adventures. He has served in the military and has held careers in the credit, insurance and real estate businesses.

Wouldn't it be nice to go to college and not have the expense? According to these special students, it is pleasurable learning experience.

Tempting tomato tips

Linda Konkol

Although the tomato was once viewed as a weed, an ornamental plant, a poisonous fruit, and an aphrodisiac ("the love apple"), it eventually overcame its bad reputation and made it to the American dinner table. In fact, tomato products--spaghetti sauce, chili, and catsup--are practically the cornerstone of American cooking.

Fresh tomatoes are in their prime now. If you haven't gotten the surplus from you parent's garden, a good place to buy tomatoes inexpensively is the farmers' market. If you can drag yourself out of bed before noon on Saturdays, you'll find farmers selling tomatoes and other produce in the parking lot across from the Administration building.

Tomatoes, which need ripening should not be placed on a windowsill, contrary to what your grandmother probably told you. Exposure to direct sunlight softens tomatoes and prevents them from ripening evenly.

To ripen, leave tomatoes stem end up, in any place where they'll be out of direct sunlight. Placing tomatoes in a paper or plastic bag will speed up ripening a bit.

When tomatoes are fully ripe, they should be stored, uncovered, in the refrigerator. However, serve tomatoes at room temperature for best flavor.

Tomatoes get high marks for nutrition. An average tomato has only 35 calories and is a source of vitamin A, vitamin C, and minerals. Unlike green vegetables, they lose little of their nutritional content in cooking.

When you've tired of eating tomatoes fresh and whole and sliced in salads and sandwiches, try pan-frying or broiling them.

Cooked tomatoes blend well with other vegetables, as in this Skillet Vegetables recipe. The recipe uses another vegetable which is now in abundance, zucchini. You may substitute whatever vegetables you have on hand for the zucchini, such as mushrooms, eggplant, and green pepper.

Skillet Vegetables

1 Tbsp. vegetable oil
1/2 cup sliced celery
2 Tbsp. chopped onion
2 large tomatoes, chopped (about 2 cups)
2 medium zucchini, cut into 1/2-inch thick slices (about 2 cups)
1/4 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper

In a medium-sized skillet, heat oil over moderately high heat. Add celery and onion and cook 3 to 4 minutes, stirring frequently, until soft but not brown. Stir in remaining ingredients and cover. Reduce heat to moderately low and simmer 10 to 12 minutes, until vegetables are tender. Makes 4 servings.

MICROWAVE INSTRUCTIONS: Omit oil and put 1 1/2 Tbsp. butter in a 1 1/2 quart casserole. Add celery and onions. Cover with plastic wrap; turn back one corner to allow steam to escape. Cook 3 minutes on high power. Stir in remaining ingredients. Cook 5 to 7 minutes on high, stirring about halfway through cooking time.

Concert

tunes through one long set. It was pure rock and roll. People danced, jumped, they sang. They beat Bob Seeger at his own game.

The term warm-up band is a bit understated. Ron LaSalle is a great front man, and his band agreed. He loves his job and he infects the audience with that same groove and good-time. "They tell me this is the first show in this brand new joint...Well I tell ya, let's bring down the roof on this place." A whole lotta shakin.

Their music was tight and immediate. Montague's sax got a workout. His licks brought hoots of satisfaction from the crowd. The guitar solos were old-fashioned rock and roll, no pyrotechnics, no jive gyrations. Two feet on the ground and nothing but tasteful riffs, clean and fast.

Their backup vocals were sparse and accurate, instruments did most of the moving, lead by LaSalle and his good gutsy voice. McCauley leaned on his keys, swerving around the tight curves. Farren's bass moved like pistons in a big V-8. The drummer drove his white Jaguar in the wind.

"Horizontal Bop" really got the audience bopping. "Makin Thunderbirds," "Old-Time Rock and Roll," "Get Outta Denver," and "Rock and Roll Never Forgets," were Seeger hits done to a sizzling perfection.

LaSalle and the Twin Bullets tore through the Great Hall with a double encore, including Seeger's "Katmandu." Cheers.

After a short break, the 1500 plus audience greeted headline act Bad Boy. It was like night and day. Bad Boy is definitely a heavy metal band. Loud and driving. They banged out that sound. Tight, refined vocals, enormous bass and screaming guitars.

They must be doing something right. They've been in business for almost eight years. They're working on album number five with the engineer from Cheap Trick in Pierce Arrow Studios in Illinois.

So why did the audience leave? At the end of the show there were less than 200 people. Metal bands don't have the mass appeal that pedigree rock and roll bands have. Most metal is undanceable, and not as musically varied.

With the exception of "Lucille" and an encore of "Gloria," Bad Boy played originals. They can write their own form-fit tunes. No doubt about their skills as rockers, they can cut hair at 20 feet with their guitar prowess. It might be the 110 decibels.

They can sing with clean, tight precision. Xeno's leads on vocals were everything you could ask for. John Marcelli's steady work on his beautiful mid-60's Fender Precision bass was righteous metal bottom. Steve Grimm is a compound talent, sure and sharp on guitar and vocals.

It might be that monotonous metal music structure; it might be the over-stated extremes and self-aggrandizement but the audience reaction was genuine and it speaks for itself. Metal fans are devoted and they should be. Do what you like. But it seems that old saying is true:

Rock and roll is here to stay.

Assembly builds unity

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

"Great" This was obviously the overall theme of the 1985 UW-Stout School of Home Economics Convocation.

Monday evening students gathered in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center to meet faculty, staff and learn more about professional organizations and activities. On stage a large sign made from a photograph of Stout students in the form of the word "great" greeted the people in attendance.

Patty Jilek, Chairperson of the Dean's Student Advisory Committee introduced the event by defining the word "convocation" as an "academic assembly".

Members of the Dean's Student Advisory Committee were introduced and future activities were announced. A scholarship workshop will be held October 1 and World Food Day events will take place on campus October 16.

Students were also formally introduced to their department administrators, program directors and faculty. Dean of the School, J. Anthony Samenfink presented what he refered to as his "annual homily."

In this annual address the Dean stressed the basic rules of success. He said, "Be polite. Don't promise what you can't deliver. Be committed. Be a complexist." He encouraged those in attendance to introduce themselves to faculty members, to inquire about organizations and to make a contact beyond a "hello" with fellow students.

At the 18 booths in the hall, leaders of organizations explained their group's purpose to interested students.

Dressed in black trousers, white shirts and black bow ties, the members of the International Food Service Executive Association not only explained, but gave the crowd a taste of their club's activities.

Pat Cosgrove was one such member carrying a silver tray above his head. According to Cosgrove, the majority of their members enroll at Convocation. He said, "I think it is great that the people have an opportunity to get to know the clubs. It gives them something to do, to get involved with school, especially the school of Home Economics."

Spread out in the Great Hall, Convocation took on a new atmosphere this year. Debbie Simmons, chairperson of the Apparel, Textile, Design Association (ATDA) commented, "I think the surroundings are really impressive, because it seems more professional, and that is what it should be."

New students and new faculty were able to see the expanse of organizations available. Dr. Annette Fraser, Progam Director of Clothing Textiles and Design said, "I am really impressed with the number of student groups. Where I came from, which is also a state university, there were not as many organizations."

As booths were disassembling and organizations were leaving with lists of prosepctive members, Dean Samenfink commented upon the event. "Since we started Convocation, we've made it an annual event. A community kind of feeling is what we are trying to build."

What's Happening

Citizen Kane

The first offering by the Foreign Film Society is Citizen Kane. This masterpiece, claimed by many critics to be the greatest American film, was produced, directed, and co-written by Orson Welles. Welles also starred in the lead role of Charles Foster Kane.

The story is filled with charged emotion, and it concerns Kane's childhood, his rise to wealth and the influence and isolation of his ultimate goal. Few films have achieved the psychological penetration or quality of cinematic devices equal to this tour de force.

The film will be shown on September 19 & 20 in room 321 of Applied Arts at 7 and 9 p.m. All Foreign Film Society offerings are free, and the public is invited.

Pants Pattern Workshop

UW-Stout's department of apparel, textiles and design will be offering four workshops for the general public this fall.

A "Pants Pattern Workshop" will be held from 6-10 p.m., September 20 and from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., September 21 at the west campus of the Milwaukee Area Technical College. Instructor for the course will be Donna Albrecht, a professor in the department. The cost is $30.

Bach to Basics

Rediscover the Baroque in the first of a three concert series of Bach to Basics. Lyra, a period instrument orchestra, will feature suites by Bach and Telemann, concertos by Corelli and Handel, and Pachelbel's Canon.

Sponsored by Mabel Tainter Memorial Theatre, the first of the three concerts will be Sunday, September 22 at 3 p.m. The cost for the entire series will $12.50 for students and $20 for other individuals. For a single concert the cost will be $5 for students and $10 for others. Student I.D. will be required.

University Speakers Series

Halley /hal-ee/, a 16th century astronomer known for his study of comets. Note pronunciation.

Haley /hay-lee/, a 20th century rock-star backed by his band the Comets.

The University Speakers Series presents Dr. Mark Littman, a science communicator for NASA's Space Telescope Science Institute. Dr. Littman will be presenting a slide show on Halley's Comet on September 19 in the Great Hall, Memorial Student Center, at 8 p.m. Free.

Coach impressed with runners' opener

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

UW-Stevens Point Pointer Invitational set the stage as the season opener for UW-Stout's men and women's cross country teams.

The men's team had some fine performances as they finished in fifth place out of nine schools. Stevens Point was first with 36 points, Michigan Tech was second with 55, Oshkosh third with 101, Eau Claire fourth with 105, Stout fifth with 125, Platteville sixth with 126, Northern Michigan seventh with 234, Ripon eighth with 345 and Green Bay ninth with 347.

Arnie Schraeder of Stevens Point led the way with a time of 23:50. Schraeder was followed by teammate Don Reiter. Stout's Matt Christenson was third with 24:25.

"I felt really good, which gave me a lot of confidence and proved to me that I'm ready to race upfront," Christenson said.

According to Stout Head Coach Lou Klitzke, this was Christenson's finest race as a Blue Devil. Klitzke was also impressed with Todd Zuerlein's 16 place finish with a time of 25:23.

"Both Matt and Todd did a good job of pacing themselves, no one passed either one of them, they ran steady, smart races," Klitzke said.

Other finishers for Stout were Bob Hackley in 22 place, Ben Haney 34, Eric Bretl 50, Gary Poppe 57, Ed Wojdlya 82, Dave Polishinski 89, Tim Stordahl 93 and Jerry Reif 106.

Christenson felt the rest of his teammates really proved themselves as part of the team as they filled the necessary gaps in the scoring positions.

Klitzke is confident to see upcoming performances from returning runners Hackley, Haney and Bretl. Klitzke also sees freshman Poppe as a "gutsy" runner and as having potential to do well.

In the women's race, it was Stevens Point leading the way with a team score of 30. Oshkosh followed with 45, and Stout was third with 88. Rounding out the field were Northern Michigan with 109, Platteville 204, and Ripon 221.

Stout's women were led by senior captain Sheila Geere and transfer Sue Meyer, who finished ninth and tenth respectively.

"I think I went out too slow, but with this being our first meet of the season I wasn't real sure," Geere said.

Meyer, returning after a two-year absence, kept pace with Geere throughout the race. "I was scared because I haven't competed for two years, but overall I felt real good," Meyer said.

Finishing third for Stout and 14 overall was junior Ann Meyer. Klitzke said Meyer ran a comfortable race and nearly matched her personal record.

The fourth runner for Stout to finish was freshman Liz Lund in 18, followed by Leslie Drall 37, Kris Klokow 41 and Karen Schubert 47.

"Pressure is on for a 5th runner with the women's team. We need strong 5th, 6th and 7th runners," Klitzke said.

Overall Klitzke was pleased with the results of both men's and women's teams, "We learned what we have to do to finish in the top half of the conference and go to NAIA nationals."

This weekend both teams will be at UW-Parkside for the Mid-America Cross Country Championships. "This will be an intense meet and I expect the very best from each runner," Klitzke said.

SPORTS BEAT

Howe can't break cocaine habit-Newly acquired Minnesota Twins pitcher Steve Howe told Twins officials last Monday that his weekend disappearance from the team involved a relapse with cocaine.

Howe, whose major league career started in 1980, has been treated three times for chemical dependency and has acknowledged a previous addiction to cocaine. Howe's future in baseball has not been determined yet.

Marijuana fine for Vikes' Newton-Minnesota Viking rookie nose tackle Tim Newton will be fined $50 for possessing a small amount of marijuana outside a south Minneapolis bar on Sept. 5.

The Vikings took no disciplinary action against Newton, who has played in their first two games.

Suicide takes life of Cowboy-Oklahoma State University freshman James W. Clark was found dead in his dormitory room last Monday by a teammate. The death was ruled a suicide by the county medical examiner. Clark was believed to die of suffocation by hanging himself.

Four TD's in eight minutes leads Montana St. 86-0-Montana State quarterback Kelly Bradley from Zumbrota, Minn. passed for four first-quarter touchdowns to lead Montana State to a 86-0 victory over Eastern Oregon.

"They were pretty bad," Bradley commented after the game. "It was like us playing playing a high school team." Montana State lead 73-0 at halftime.

Coming Events: Cross Country Run-Entries due Monday and run begins at 5 p.m. on Tuesday.
One-on-One Basketball entries are due Thurday at 5 p.m.

Rebounding from loss to Roonies women netters defeat G.B. team

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's tennis team was trampled by UW-La Crosse Tuesday, Sept. 10, but rallied back Friday to post a shutout against UW-Green Bay.

Stout also traveled to Oshkosh Saturday and participated in a multi-college doubles tournament, earning a seventh place finish.

Stout 0 La Crosse 9

"Awesome," is the word Stout's number one singles player Mary Malloy used to describe the La Crosse women's tennis team. They dominated Stout's lineup completely, posting a 9-0 shutout. "They were great," Stout Head Coach Bob Smith said. "La Crosse is the strongest team in the conference."

Stout 9 Green Bay 0

The women netters were immensely successful against Green Bay by posting their own shutout. At first singles, Malloy whipped her opponent 6-1,6-3. Although Lynn Papenfuss usually plays in the second singles slot, she resigned play due to persistent stomach pains. Jean Feyen filled the vacant spot nicely, for she trounced her Green Bay opponent 6-0,6-1.

In fact, all of the singles players had little trouble posting wins. All singles matches required only 2 straight sets proving the overwhelming depth throughout the lineup.

Doubles action repeated much of the same dominance. Malloy and Papenfuss notched another victory, beating Green Bay's number one doubles team 6-0, 6-0, to remain undefeated in conference play. Also, at second doubles, Feyen and Mary Pokwinski encountered few obstacles in defeating their challengers 6-3,6-2. Kris Anderson and Karen Blau, playing at third doubles, won a tough first set (7-5) and beat their opponents in the second set (6-2) to complete the sweep.

Coach Smith commented that all of the team looked good considering the absence of one of the team's key players, Papenfuss. After this victory, the Stout women netters raised their record to 3-2 in conference play.

Oshkosh Doubles Tournament

The Stout women netters traveled to Oshkosh Saturday to participate in the Oshkosh Doubles Tournament, placing seventh out

The Stout lineup was juggled due to the loss of Papenfuss to illness. (Since then, she has been diagnosed as having a slight case of mono, and will resume play when fit.)

Consequently, Malloy and Amy Carey were paired, and were crunched by Oshkosh, and then by Whitewater. "We had never played together," Malloy stated, "it was hard to adjust."

Unfortunately the other doubles teams were equally confused, for the only familiar team in the lineup was the second doubles team of Jean Feyen and Mary Pokwinski. The fourth doubles team of Tracy Kellerman and Karen Blau posted the only win of the day, as they beat Milwaukee in three sets, 6-1, 2-6, 6-4.

Smith was pleased with the play of the team considering the new pairings that had to be formed when Papenfuss was pulled from the lineup.

Marquette placed first in the tournament, with La Crosse and Whitewater earning second and third place.

Friday the team will play Oshkosh, and Saturday they will challenge Whitewater, continuing season play.

The Armchair Quarterback

Shout for Stout

Tom Roth

Hey, Stout students, what are you doing Saturday night around 7:30 p.m.? Just sitting around playing cards or sipping on one of those stale beers from last night's party I bet.

Well get up off that tush of yours and come on over to Nelson Field and help cheer on your fellow Blue Devil football players against Superior.

You didn't know Stout had a football team? Well, its about time to take notice and come out and see Stout's young football team knock heads with the Yellowjackets of Superior.

In recent years attendance has been lacking at football games. So why not show your Blue Devil spirit and show up at Saturday night's game that's sure to be thrilling. Sure, the gridders took a beating last weekend, but look at who they were playing — one of the top teams in NAIA football.

Right, your used to hearing about the Blue Devils always losing but how can you go wrong with attending the Superior game, a team that the Devils are almost a sure bet to crush. That's right, not just beat, but crush. Not very often does Stout's football team get a chance to beat a team into the ground, but the possibility will sure be there Saturday if Stout doesn't get too overconfident.

Anyway, a big crowd would just add to the sweetness of pounding Superior into the ground since last year when Stout played at Superior the fans were obnoxiously rude to Stout's football team in a controversial mared game that Stout ended up winning.

It sure doesn't mean too much to play at home if nobody shows up for the game. That's why everyone should help give our Blue Devils a home field advantage by showing our football team and everyone else around that Stout students do have pride in their school. Remember football players are just like you and me, they need support also. Not showing up for a Blue Devil football game to see your fellow classmates play is like you hosting a party and having noone show except for your landlord. Things are a lot more fun if we help support each other's causes.

Anyway, it gets pretty lonely sitting in the bleacher by myself. Well if you can hold off from heading uptown until about 10 p.m. then join me in the Blue Devil cheering section.

Oh, by the way, if you don't like football, how about those cute cheerleaders and pom pon girls running around. Oh Erv, I almost forgot to mention your tremendous band.

The Quarterback's Picks

UW-Superior at Stout-Stout took a beating last week but let's face it, Superior will be lucky to win another football game this year. The Blue Devils should be ready to dish out their own beating Saturday night. Stout by 21.

Chicago at Minnesota Vikings-That's two weeks in a row that the Vikings have fooled my expert predictions by unexpectedly winning, but the Bears should finally nip Bud's Vikes. Chicago by 3.

N.Y. Jets at Green Bay-The Jets showed what their offense could do last week in Buffalo, so they should outscore the Packers. It's too early in the season for the Packers to win two in a row. Jets by 7.

UNLV at Wisconsin-Another light weight for the Badgers this week. Wisconsin by 18.

Montana at Minnesota-The Gophers should get their second straight win this season. Gophers by 13.

Illinois at Nebraska-The Cornhuskers are still red-faced about their loss to Florida St. two weeks ago in Lincoln. There's no way Nebraska can lose two in a row at home. Nebraska by 17.

Missouri at Texas-After last week's embarassing loss to Northwestern, there's no way Missouri will bounce back against the Longhorns. Texas by 16.

Michigan St. at Notre Dame-Maybe Notre Dame coach Gary Faust is on his way out, but the Fighting Irish should have enough power to beat the Spartans. Notre Dame by 10.

Gridders mauled by Moorhead; Set sights on Parents Day bout

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout football squad folded to the Moorhead State Dragons 44-14 last Saturday. The gridders knew they had a tough battle, but Moorhead's bigger and more experienced Dragons were too much for the Blue Devils.

Stout's Head Coach Bob Kamish said the players were not as emotional as they could have been.

The Dragons are a NAIA Division I team and that meant the gridders would have had to play an almost flawless game to win. Assistant Coach Steve Terry said that they would have needed a "perfect game" to win and that the Dragons are a high caliber team.

In the first quarter of the game Moorhead St. got the first score with a touchdown. The second quarter Moorhead took over as they scored three more touchdowns to take a commanding half-time lead of 28-0 over Stout.

Quarterback Glenn Majszak did not have a good day. Majszak only completed nine of 19 passes and was intercepted four times. During the third quarter the Blue Devils produced two touchdowns. One came on a kick return of 87 yards by sophomore Chuck Carr. The Dragons came back with 13 points to stop any attempts at a comeback for Stout. Moorhead St. scored on a field goal in the fourth quarter for the final score of the game.

One of the brighter spots of the game was the kick returning of Carr. Carr, now with his touchdown return, averages over 30 yards per return. He also had 50 yards rushing against Moorhead, and now averages 5.4 yards per carry. Carr was named the offensive player of the week.

The defensive player of the week was Scott Romenesko. Romenesko, a junior, had four solo tackles and 12 assists.

After this loss the Blue Devils, 1-1, are looking to get back into the Wisconsin State University Conference this Saturday when they host the UW-Superior Yellowjackets.

The big factor in this game will be momentum, as the Yellowjackets snapped a 21-game losing streak when they beat Mayville State at home. The goal for the Stout Blue Devils will be to get the ball in the end zone. Against Moorhead St., Stout had the ball three times within the 10-yard line and did not come away with any points.

Assistant Coach Steve Terry said the defense will have to watch the Yellowjackets passing game close. The Superior team has a good quarterback and some fine receivers.

The Blue Devils' Majszak said the team is working out harder than last week and feels this will help in a victory over Superior.

This Saturday will be "Parents Day" for the Blue Devils at Nelson Field beginning at 7:30 p.m. The home field advantage is always appreciated by any team, but with some good weather the game should attract a big crowd.

New addition to coaching minor focuses on unique needs of youth

Danielle Anderson
Sports Reporter

Many UW-Stout students do not realize that our school has a coaching minor. It is recommended for students who are in education, but not restricted to them.

To get a coaching minor, 22 credits are required in classes relating to coaching. The selection of courses to be taken is minimal, but luckily there is a new two-credit class being offered in the spring called Coaching Young Athletes for students interested in coaching.

The class is, at this point, still a proposal. So far it has gone through and passed both the Department of Physical Education and Athletics, and the School of Liberal Studies. The last step is to have it go through the University Curriculum Committee. That is scheduled for today.

As the new course proposal stands, the idea of the class is to make future coaches aware of how to handle youth sports because they are so different from varsity and collegiate level programs.

It is estimated that 12-15 million young people are active in some sort of organized sport, whether it be in their community or at their schools. Parents freely put their children in the hands of coaches, most of which are not even qualified for the position.

To help alleviate this problem, Coaching Young Athletes has many objectives for the class. The student will be able to do the following: 1) write his philosophy of coaching in youth programs, 2) use sport psychology principles of communication, reinforcement and motivation within youth sports programs and 3) develop training and nutrition programs for young athletes. To meet these goals, and others, the outline consists of developing a coaching philosophy, sport psychology, sport pedagogy, sport physiology, sports medicine, legal aspects of supervision, and parent orientation programs.

If Coaching Young Children is passed by the University Curriculum Committee, there will be no prerequisites for it. The class, instructed by Gymnastics Coach John Zuerlein, will consist of 30 students and they will be taught by lecture and discussion.

Coaching Young Athletes will be available next semester, whether the proposal is passed or not. If the class continues after that, it will be scheduled at night, on weekends and/or for a week or two in the summer. The reason for that is it will then be available for people who have full-time day jobs.

When Zuerlein was asked why he thinks this course would be a good one, he replied, "People who coach youth sports and recreational programs are volunteers who do not have much, if any, training. We are trying to get them to understand the differences between kids and adults. If coaches have a better understanding of the physiological and psychological differences, they will be able to adjust their programs. The coaches are sincere in their efforts, but they need to know how to do their jobs without killing the kids' interest in sports."

Spikers show improvement, confidence

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

An optimistic attitude paid off for the UW-Stout Lady Devil spikers as they completed a successful week of dual and tournament competition. After losing three games at UW-River Falls, the women's volleyball team regrouped and united, determined to win their next battle.

The Blue Devils traveled first to UW-Superior on Wednesday, September 11, where they won the first of a three-game match against UW-Superior by a score of 15-12, and lost the succeeding games 12-15 and 13-15. Northland College edged them out in the second round of action with scores of 6-15 and 7-15.

"Their morale was high going into the Superior game, but it was very low after the losses," Head Coach Lynda Lee said. "It was also hard for me, and I knew something had to happen in the upcoming tournament to turn the team around."

Their turning point happened in the Winona State Tournament on Saturday. The team felt hungry despite their losses, and all the team members were up for the tournament. Their scores reflected their determination, and although they lost to Winona State in the first round 2-15 and 12-15, they charged back, taking St. Mary's 15-8 and 15-6. Their confidence in themselves, and as a team, swelled in the third round where they closed out St. Theresa's 15-11 and 15-5. This placed the Lady Devils in the championship round where they once again faced Winona State. They faced tough competition, and Winona won 2-15 and 11-15, but not without a good fight by the Lady Devils.

—Barb Carlson

Coach Lee felt the second-place win at Winona State was the turning point they were looking for in the season, and luckily it happened early enough to provide an encouraging outlook in future matches. Coach Lee said proudly, "They did everything I taught them; Everything came together and they had control, especially in the St. Mary's and St. Theresa games." Lee said, "My main goal from the previous losses was to teach my team to do one thing: run a solid offense with high outside sets and long approaches—pound on them."

Some key players that helped implement that strategy were senior Mary Church, and junior Barb Carlson. "Church played better in the weekend tournament than she has all year," Lee praised. "She was very effective at blocking their hitters and spiking through the holes. This was the kind of aggression we needed to get our team going."

One reason for Church's outstanding performance may have been her personal motivation as she entered the tournament. "I was really motivated as an individual to help the team win," Church said. "I feel, as does the rest of the team, that it is up to each one of us to do our best. We each have to do well or we're just a missing link. We all have to connect and work hard individually and as a team to be victorious."

Church's teammate, Barb Carlson, also worked well in her new position as a middle hitter to make quick and competent decisions for the team. Carlson said she felt the team worked well together in the weekend tournament because it was a controlled game and they could bring the offense together. "The team respects the coach and we find she helps us a lot emotionally by pulling us up for these games," Carlson remarked. "I feel we will do a lot better in the future. Right now we're a building team with a lot of potential. The whole team working with Lynda shows great possibilities."

Reflecting back on the past weekend of competition, Coach Lee feels the lady spikers now know where they are going and how to do it. "The weekend competition has made me feel more confident as a coach because I see my techniques and methods are sound, and that they can work," Lee noted. "It's given me a boost and made me feel close to the team." Coach Lee's philosophy on coaching, seeing herself as an actual member of the team instead of separating herself as a self-appointed "dictator," has brought the team closer together and has made it more effective as a unit.

Soccer Club scores easy win; Outstanding performances given

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

UW-Stout's Soccer Club romped to an easy 9-1 victory over Rice Lake last Friday evening.

With solid performances from Kevin Sheehan and Steve Abrahamson in midfield, the Stout team overpowered a lacklustre performance from the Rice Lake team in what turned out to be a very one-sided game.

The game kicked off at 5:00 p.m. and within two minutes Stout was a goal up. A misunderstanding in the Rice Lake penalty area by two defenders led to a handball decision by the referee. The penalty kick was struck home by Sheehan. From that moment on, Rice Lake was constantly under pressure, with close shots from Stout's Abrahamson and Shaun Cordy.

By half-time the scoreline stood at 3-1 in favor of the Stout team. The only goal from Rice Lake came on a lofted ball from outside the Stout 18-yard line which took the off-guard goalkeeper by surprise.

During the earlier part of the second half, Rice Lake came back with more aggressive play but this was countered with some cool play by the Stout team.

Another early goal was conceded by the Rice Lake goalkeeper when with no pressure on him at all, he threw the ball into his own net.

Stout made several substitutions throughout in order to give everyone a fair workout. Coach Dan Nelson took the field for two periods during which he scored two goals and had a tremendous full volley shot rebound from the crossbar.

Another outstanding player for the Stout team was their only girl player, Marcie Gammer. With her delicate ball control, Gammer made superb incisive runs down the right wing. She was rewarded for her efforts midway through the second half when she hit the ball between the goalkeeper's legs to put the score up to 6-1.

Late in the game some of the Rice Lake players became desperate in their challenges but this was soon dispelled by the capable referees.

Standing on the sideline, Club President Dan Stoffregen said, "At least the game has not been delayed by too many unnecessary calls."

As the game progressed into its final stages, it was more like shooting practice for the Stout team as they hammered in three more goals to leave the score at 9-1 on the final whistle.

Reflecting on the game, Stoffregen said, "This is not the caliber of team we usually play, but we had fun. I think the most excitement we had was on the way to the game when we were almost hit by a hay baler."

Overall, the game was a good workout for the Stout Soccer club who has been training regularly for three weeks. Training is at Galloway Park, Monday through Thursday between 4-6 p.m.

Speaking before the game, Stoffregen said that they were still hoping to get a girl's soccer team going.

"We had a lot of girls show up for the initial meeting, enough players to form a team, but only two or three show up for practice," Stoffregen said.

Player Gammer said, "I think that when the girls show up for practice in small numbers and have to play against the boys they get disheartened."

Club Secretary Frank Lohrer suggests that any girls who are seriously interested should contact him at X-3609 so that a convenient time for girl's training could be organized.

The Stout team has two games scheduled for this weekend. On Saturday they play at River Falls while on Sunday the game is at Eau Claire. Both games kick-off at 1:00 p.m. and any spectators would be welcome.

Underage drinkers force closing of bar

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

On April 18, 1985 the patrons of The Tap, 512 Crescent St., had their ID's checked by the city police. Two underaged persons were discovered and had been sold alcohol. According to state statute, the bar could be fined up to $500.00, the bartender having sold the alcohol could be fined up to $500.00 and after being convicted, the establishment may have its license suspended. Menomonie's city council suspended The Tap's liquor license from August 12-18.

At the city council meeting on April 3 Alderman J. Richard Emmert suggested a suspension from August 19-26. Since UW Stout students returned to school August 19 and classes started August 23, Jay Schroeder, Stout student and member of the city council, offered an amendment that the suspension be from August 12-18 instead.

According to Schroeder, a license suspension had resulted in the past and consistency was important. However, he did not feel that an August 19-26 suspension date was fair. He felt that the amendment brought the sides of the council together and the amendment and main motion was passed unanimously.

Mike Wagner, owner of The Tap, felt that the penalty was much too harsh. Wagner never had a license suspension in the seven years that he has owned The Tap. Wagner estimated that he lost at least $4500 in business because of the suspension. He also believes he has lost repeat business since new and returning students enjoyed themselves at other bars and will tend to return to those places this year.

Wagner had wanted the suspension to be retroactive to August 1 as he had kept his business closed

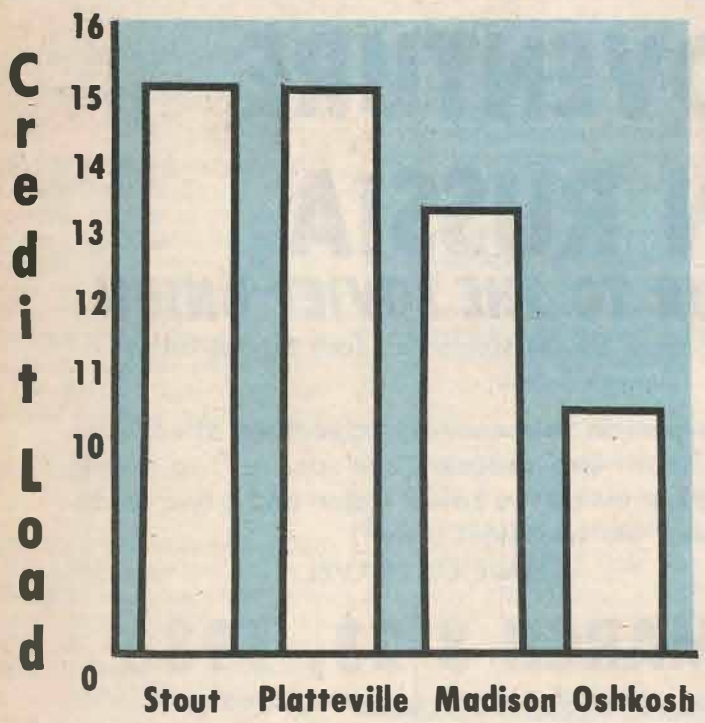
'85 Enrollment Analysis

4 yr. undergrad



Is the Stout four-year undergrad following the way of the dinosaur?

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Is the four-year undergraduate a dying breed at UW-Stout? In the face of student opinion and statistics, the answer appears to be yes.

At Stout, most students questioned seemed to feel they would complete their undergraduate work in a four to five year time period. There are many factors involved when considering the average length of time spent completing an undergraduate degree.

One major consideration is the credit load students take. According to a 1984 enrollment analysis, the average credit load of a Stout student (including both part and full time students) was 15.06 credits. This ranged from a juniors average of 15.81 to a seniors' 14.89. This credit load has remained relatively unchanged since 1979, when the average credit load was a 15.8.

Stout students, including both part and full time, appear to take a heavier credit load than students in other University of Wisconsin schools. According to the 1984-85 UW System Student Statistics, Stout students carried an average of 15.06 credits per semester. Second to this was UW-Platteville with 15.04. Madison students averaged 13.3 and Oshkosh students came in with the low of 10.4. Perhaps Stout isn't the easy way out.

Since most majors require about 130 credits to graduate, students would have to take 16 or more credits a semester to graduate in the traditional four years. According to Joan Hughes, the director of student records, "It would take a student an average of 8.4 semesters to graduate if they were taking 15.06 credits per semester." She said, "Somewhere along the line they will have to add a summer, another semester, or carry more credits."

Many students have opted to take a lighter credit load and stay longer. Mary Erickson, an Early Childhood freshman said, "I want to take an easier credit load so I can get better grades in my classes." She predicted that she will be here for five years. Mary Pinsula, a Dietetics major said, "I consider my major to be somewhat difficult, so instead of rushing through it, I'd rather take my time and do it right."

Transferring from another school is another case which may increase the length of stay. Wendi Hill, a transfer from Mankato State said, "I lost most of my credits when I transferred." Some students, especially those transferring within the system feel this considerably less. One student, who transferred from UW-Milwuakee said, "I transferred after one semester and Stout accepted all of my credits."

Switching majors can also affect the length of stay. Hughes said, "There is still quite a large amount of switching majors being done. Since many courses have prerequisites, the time spent in completing one's major can be considerably increased."

A recent Wisconsin State Journal article stated that one reason UW-Madison has a declining number as four year graduates is due to the inability to get into needed classes and increasing enrollment. According to student opinion, that did not seem to be a problem here. Hill

NATO explosions

Limberg, West Germany- A predawn explosion disabled a NATO motor fuel pipeline Monday but caused no injuries. Officials blamed black terrorists for the attacks.

The flow of fuel through the pipeline was temporarily interrupted by the explosion, which left a seven-foot wide crater in the ground. The pipeline, which cuts across the country, carried fuel to NATO military installations.

Numbers increasing

Mexico City, Mexico- Mexico's federal health department said at least 11,000 people were injured by the earthquakes, which smashed the heart of the 18 million populated city. The number of people left homeless was estimated at 300,000.

Nation

Trade wars

Washington D.C.- President Ronald Reagan announced a series of trade actions on Monday, including a $300 million export subsidy program and stepped-up retaliatory measures against unfair trade practices by other nations.

Reagan's moves were designed to cut the U.S. trade deficit while heading off pressure from Congress for limits on imports. "We do not want a trade war with other nations and I will not stand by and watch American businessmen fail because of unfair trading practices abroad," Reagan said.

High Hispanic scores

New York, New York- Hispanic students led the strongest gain in average Scholastic Aptitude Test scores by more than two decades this year, a surge hailed by some educators as evidence that reform is taking hold in public schools.

State

Cigarettes up in smoke

Madison- An increase in Wisconsin's tax on cigarettes is likely to go up in smoke even before it is scheduled to start, according to the State Revenue Department. The state tax is scheduled to increase by eight cents a pack next Tuesday under an "iffy" provision of the 1985-87 state budget.

The big if is Congress. If the House and Senate take no action, the federal cigarette tax will drop by eight cents a pack next Tuesday, and Wisconsin's tax immediately will increase by the same amount. But if Congress decides to maintain the federal tax at the current 16 cents a pack, Wisconsin's tax will stay where it is: 25 cents a pack.

Perspective

God's "power brokers"

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

W. A. Criswell believes that "children's education is becoming increasingly secular and worldly and sometimes even anti-God."

Tim Lahaye believes that "a humanist holds a low view of human life. Since he presumes man evolved and is an animal, he can live like one. No humanist is qualified to hold any governmental office."

Pat Robertson believes that "the Bible...is a workable guidebook for politics, business, families and all the affairs of mankind."

Jerry Falwell believes that "if you train people to do spiritual combat, they have to take enormous punishment from society. But people out there also identify with someone who comes under fire and can take it."

These four gentleman, who are quoted from the September 2, 1985 issue of Time magazine, are key players in the growing influence of the religious right.

By far the most visible, vocal and well known, Jerry Falwell has increased his influence to the point where he now has access to President Reagan, influential members of Congress and numerous world leaders. In addition, the television show "Jerry Falwell Live"is transmitted to 34 million homes every Sunday evening via Ted Turner's WTBS cable television network.

Pat Robertson is a close second to Falwell in relation to potential cable viewers. In addition to being the host of the widely aired "700 Club", he is also the head of the nation's fourth largest cable television network, the Christian Broadcasting Network (CBN).

But Falwell has not been content with powerful acquaintances and potentially impressionable viewers. Over the course of the past fourteen years he has been instrumental in the development of a Fundamentalist Christian college, Liberty University. Located in Lynchburg, Virginia the university's 6500 students study and are housed on a sprawling 4400 acre campus.

And if this weren't enough, Falwell travels approximately 8000 miles a week to speak against homosexuality, abortion and pornography.

Tim Lahaye's wife Beverly heads a group called Concerned Women for America, the largest group spear-heading the counterfeminist movement. Their membership of 500,000 is more than the combined memberships of the National Organization for Women (NOW), the League of Women Voters and the National Women's Political Caucus. The group frequently targets legislators with letters opposing abortion and gay rights, and supporting school prayer.

Concerned Women for America has eclipsed the Eagle Forum, a like-minded womens organization headed by Phyllis Schlafly, a Roman Catholic and well known opponent of the now defunct Equal Rights Amendment.

Cook committed to counseling students

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

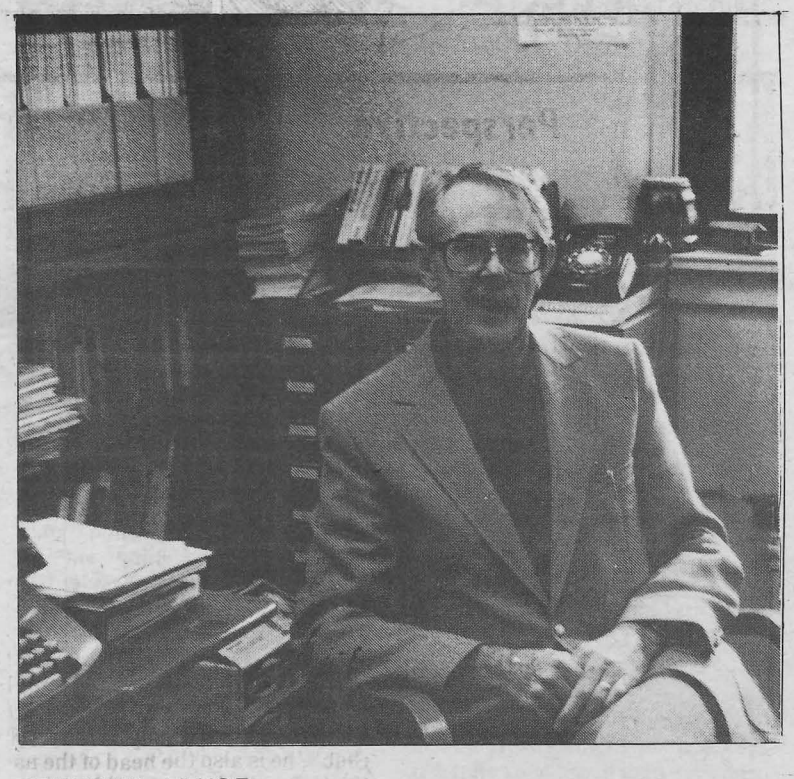
"We start with the assumption that abuse is widespread in the university community and is known to interfere with the educational process of students and the job performance of faculty and staff."

These words are taken from the Report of the University of Wisconsin System Advisory Committee on Alcohol Education, co-authored by Dr. David Cook, program advisor for the alcohol/drug abuse master's degree program at Univeristy of Wisconsin-Stout.

Cook was joined by student and faculty representatives from each school in the UW system for seven all-day work sessions between October, 1984 and May, 1985.

These work sessions, requested by former UW System President Robert M. O'Neil, were to address the problem of alcohol abuse in the univeristy community. Cook and his fellow committee members accomplished this by drafting seven recommendations (see sidebar).

Cook is well-equipped to serve on such a committee: he has both a master's degree and a doctorate in counseling, he chaired the Counselor Education Department in Boston's Northeastern University from 1959 to 1975, and he has been a professor in Stout's Psychology and Counseling Services Department for the last 10 years.



CURBING ABUSE—
Dr. David Cook, head of the UW-Stout Counseling for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program was a co-author of a report detailing ways to deal with alcohol abuse in the UW System. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

> There is no excuse for someone to drink enough to impair himself and then get behind the wheel.
> —David Cook

Besides his AODA advisor responsibilities, Cook supervises graduate students in Marriage and Family Therapy, serves on the university's alcohol advisory committee, and is attempting to get a grant to study battering couples. He has already completed some research on battering men.

Cook has also developed a scale to measure the feeling of shame. He believes that shame is closely associated with violence and alcohol useage; in fact, he has created a new course called, "Shame, Addiction, and Substance Abuse."

Cook's interest in psychology and counseling is shared by family members: his wife is a family therapist, his oldest daughter is earning a Ph.D in pyschology at the Univeristy of Michigan, and another daughter is studying social work at UW- Eau Claire.

Self-described as "from a family of teetotalers," Cook nevertheless has personal knowledge of chemical dependency. A relative going through a period of alcohol and drug abuse gave Cook an abiding respect for any individual who can go through this experience and turn his life around into a happy and productive one.

Cook also respects every individual's rights and freedoms, but thinks raising the drinking age "Is a good thing. First, you have to face reality; the federal government wants the country to move toward a standardized drinking age of 21. Even if you are personally against it, you have to look at that reality. The bottom line is that statistics indicate a significant connection with traffic deaths and the age group under 21; and any federal, state, or local government needs to be concerned about the health and safety of its citizens."

Concerning drunk driving laws, Cook says, "I'm definitely in favor of stricter drunk driving laws. Jail and immediate license suspension for first offense, stiffer fines, whatever. There is no excuse for someone to drink enough to impair himself and then get behind the wheel. We have not generated enough concern, and the pressure needs to be kept on."

Cook himself is concerned that too many people may drink to have fun. "I can understand why people with serious problems would drink to get drunk, but why would a healthy, happy person say, 'I'm going to get drunk and fun?' Perhaps to get attention or approval. If so, that person is basically insecure. I don't think it is either funny or fun."

Cook would like to see this same concern from the highest level of each campus. On Stout's campus, he pointed to SUDS (Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly), Adult Children of Alcoholics, Concerned Persons, and chemical dependency assessments performed by Ann Ramage, Pinckney Hall and Judy Tomesh. Cook states, "I feel we have the potential at Stout to have the best program. We have enough talented people to be a real leader in this area."

Dr. David Cook is among those talented people, according to coworkers and students: "Stimulating," "An idea challenger," "Sticks to his guns," were a few of the adjectives used to describe him. Perhaps, however, the simplest and best was "Committed."

Committee recommends policies to deal with alcohol abuse throughout the UW system

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

The following recommendations are taken from the Report of the University of Wisconsin System Advisory Committee on Alcohol Education. The committee was formed by former UW President Robert O'Neil, who directed the committee to come up with ways of dealing with alcohol abuse within the UW System. The report was presented to O'Neil on May 1, 1985.

RECOMMENDATION 1

That the Board of Regents adopt the following statement:

The abuse of alcohol on the campuses of the university system is a matter of significant concern because it interferes with education of students and the job performance of faculty and staff. The most effective ways to deal with issues of alcohol abuse in the university community are educational and supportive in nature, designed to effect attitudinal and behavioral change.

RECOMMENDATION 2

That Administrative Code UWS 18.06(13) be changed to read: (13) ALCOHOL BEVERAGES. (a) The use or possession of alcohol beverages (fermented malt beverages and intoxicating liquors containing 0.5% or more by volume) is prohibited on all university premises, except as permitted by the chief administrative officer, subject to statutory age restrictions. The chief administrative officer may generally permit the use or possession of alcohol beverages by promulgating institutional regulations as provided under sec. UWS 18.09, or in specific instances by written permission. (b) No person may procure, sell, dispense or give away alcohol beverages to any person contrary to the provisions of ch. 125, Stats.

> ...continual examination of the relationship that exists between the University and the alcohol beverage industry.
> —Report on Alcohol Education

RECOMMENDATION 3

The committee recommends that the president of the university system request the chancellors and the executive dean of the centers to initiate a review of all policies and procedures relating to alcohol education, early intervention, referral, and/or treatment services for the student population.

RECOMMENDATION 4

The committee recommends that the president of the university system request the chancellors and the executive dean of the centers to review their institutions' complicance with the executive order regarding employee assistance for faculty and staff and to issued a clear statement of intent to all concerned. It is further recommended that system administration take the lead in identifying and coordinating the training necessary to implement the executive order through the use of university and state resources. Provision should be made for a clearly identified and easily accessible employee assistance program coordinator. On the four-year campuses at least one F.T.E. should be assigned for the coordination of the employee assistance and the alcohol education programs referred to in Recommendation 3. For the two-year centers at least one F.T.E. should be designated to serve all 13 campuses in both capacities.

RECOMMENDATION 5

The committee recommends that the Board of Regents endorse the Guidelines for Alcohol Beverage Marketing on College/University Campuses, developed by the Inter-Association Task Force on Alcohol, and urge the chancellors and the executive dean of the centers to use or even to strengthen them as a basis for developing campus policy. It is further recommended that campuses review such policies annually for the purpose of continual examination of the relationship that exists between the university and the alcohol beverage industry.

RECOMMENDATION 6

The committee recommends that system administration provide on-going information sharing among all our institutions and sponsor an annual workshop focusing on state-of-the-art alcohol education information for all system service providers, interested students, faculty, staff, and appropriate administrative officers. It is further recommended that these efforts be the responsibility of the office of the associate vice president for university personnel relations in consultation with a systemwide steering committee and that periodic visits by this office be made to each campus of the system.

Although some of the recommendations in this report will not require additional funding, others will need new resources. The committee, therefore, urges the Board of Regents to seek state funding at an appropriate level through a systemwide Decision Item Narrative for the 1987-89 biennium. The committee has identified the need for one F.T.E. position for each of the 15 units of the system as a minimum to serve the needs of students, faculty, and staff.

Present Blue Devil symbolic of Stout's fighting spirit

Symbols have come to represent different things to different people. To many, the bald eagle represents the freedom and strength of America. But Benjamin Franklin believed that the turkey was a far better symbol to personify these United States.

During the turbulence of the 1960's many parents believed that long hair symbolized everything wrong with our country, yet young people used it as a way to communicate their new found independence as young adults.

One of the predominant symbols at this university is the symbol which characterizes intercollegiate athletics, the Blue Devil. Although some athletic symbols state a specific characteristic about the region the team hails from, much like the Milwaukee Brewers or Minnesota Twins, others promote the aggressive spirit of the team.

Because this university has not been designated as the birthplace of the anti-Christ, we must assume that Blue Devil denotes aggressive spirit.

Yet some individuals and organized groups on campus would like to replace Blue Devil with a name more agreeable to their own liking and are making inquiries as to the procedure for making such a change possible.

Although we sympathize with those who may be offended by a school symbol which is the antithesis of their own religious convictions, we do not believe that Blue Devil has caused anyone to delve into the occult.

Choosing a new symbol would not only be a waste of money by rendering reams of already purchased athletic department stationary and similar items useless, it would more importantly disturb a recognized constant in Stout history.

The Bottom Line

"Trivial Pursuit"

Rich Brueckner

There is nothing more enjoyable than a game of Trivial Pursuit for drinks, I always say. In fact, my feeling for the game has inspired me to cook up my own questions. The answers were a little harder to create.

STOUT TRIVIA

Why does the Pawn's water fountain dispense only luke-warm fluid? A: Maybe so people won't use it—that way they can sell more inflationary pop.

Why wasn't I even offered a refund last year at the old Student Center when, upon finding a staple in my fishburger, complained to the manager? A: I was told that those things happen. I guess that if I don't like it I should go somewhere where the food is fit for human consumption.

If the library is "the most helpful place on campus", why did they take the Coke machines out of the canteen forcing studying students to go somewhere else to get the caffeine they need to stay awake? A: A jaunt across the road won't bother anyone when its 20 below zero, now will it?

In these days of rising energy costs, why are the bathroom sinks in the Student Center only equipped with hot water faucets? A: Since no one drinks warm water in the Pawn-they have to use it for something!

Since tuition keeps going up, why doesn't Stout cash in on the three million dollars that gets dropped in the bars on Homecoming Weekend by setting up a beer tent adjacent to a soft drink tent with the revenue it produces channeled back to the students and alumni who make Homecoming possible? A: It makes too much common and economic sense for the administration to understand it.

Why does the new Student Center have signs on the wall written in lettering smaller than the fine print of a loan application? A: Some un-named bigwig in the administration building has some kind of sign fetish, ie. none of the office doors on the third floor even have numbers on them.

Why isn't there a television in the cafeteria? A: They put it in the Rec Center so bowlers wouldn't be bored between frames.

Why do veterans have to pay their tuition before they can receive their government check that is waiting for them to pay the tuition? A: Evidently the policy is meant to encourage students to write bad checks, which keeps the banks happy because then they have something to complain about.

Why does the new bookstore have the stock of a Sears & Roebuck but the square footage of a Flavour House? A: The idea is to show marketing students how not to display merchandise for easy viewing and sales.

Why are there no inter-campus phones in the Student Center? A: Someone is too busy watching reruns of Bullwinkle to bother with it at this time, besides, if someone complains they can always blame it on the screwed-up phone company.

Why do my friends at ITS Maintenance continue to receive more and more computer equipment every day, yet they have received major cuts in the state payroll with which they pay students to keep all the hardware in good repair? A: The state has adopted an R and R maintenance policy-REMOVE AND REPLACE.

Does the financial aid office really lose as many forms as I hear people complaining about? A: I sincerely doubt it, but the fact that I mention it here will enable me to find out for sure next semester.

Why is there no student health service for summer school students? A: Due to the fact that the summer enrollment is so small, the commission they get for selling birth control devices wouldn't even pay for a nurse to do her nails.

Chairman of neighborhood group cites reasoning behind local laws

The fall of 1980 proved to be a major turning-point for the city of Menomonie. The East-Central Neighborhood Association (ECNA) was organized by concerned citizens (including students) to deal with regulations pertaining to loud noises of any nature, parking, housing, vandalism, littering, condition of lawns, control of pets and the removal of ice and snow from sidewalks.

Many other issues would be and were resolved to some extent with the full cooperation of city and county officials since that time. Over the past five years, forums have been held for candidates for school board and city council. Our monthly programs, until this past year, have featured members of the city council, city manager, chief of police, city attorney, county sheriff, county recreation park director, county nurse and many other community leaders. Our positive-action organization was established to become more informed about all community activities.

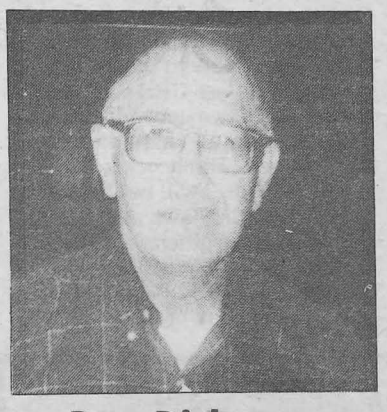
One of our major neighborhood problems has been the control of noisy booze parties. It is not that we hate noise, but we would rather have it quiet. After many years, the neighborhoods of Menomonie are fed-up and are fighting back. In the past, many of the loud parties would continue on at any location, from before midnight until all hours of the following morning, any day of the week.

These loud parties often were accompanied by urination on neighbor's trees, houses and lawns. This has also brought about littering, vandalism, parking across sidewalks and loud profane language at all hours of the night which disturbs the comfort, quiet or repose of persons therein or in the vicinity.



Don Dickmann

The city noise ordinance is not vague, nonsense or blatently unconstitutional. The city of Eau Claire, with three neighborhood associations, has enacted similar ordinances. The noise ordinance does not give the city police too much discretion. If it really did, I would suspect that there would be even more citations issued to persons that have little or no respect for other person's privacy.

The city council does not consist of absent minds. The noise ordinance is clearly defined. Members of the city council are elected by and respond to the wishes of all citizens of Menomonie. The city council does not legislate against students of the University. However, if the shoe fits, put it on.

I would agree that any noise is a nuisance. One person's music may be another person's headache. But to clarify some points concerning the race track lobby, the auto races are held usually only on Friday evenings at a specific location, only during the summer months with an 11 p.m. curfew. A binding contract between Dunn County and the Red Cedar Racing Association calls for a $100 fine per each 15 minutes for any race that continues on beyond 11 p.m. This past year Dunn County received well over $12,000 in revenue from the racing association.

Members of the racing association, in cooperation with the County Recreation Park Committee, are always concerned with how to reduce noise rather than increase the level of noise in the neighborhood.

Most of us who live here do so by choice. After all most of us came here long after UW-Stout was established. We like Menomonie. We want it to be a pleasant place for students as well.

Many of us live next door to off-campus students. Many of us teach and work at Stout. Most of the students are hard-working, courteous, respectful of neighbor's rights and willing to learn at Stout. But we will not tolerate the activities of the spoilers. That is why our ECNA supports the city council and the city police force.

Letters to the editor

Stout community friend

Dear Editor:

I am writing to you as an alumni of Stout. On Monday, September 9, a very dear friend of mine passed away. This friend I met at Stout six years ago while I was a volunteer for Kinship. My friend was 77 years old and was loved by everyone who knew him at Stout and in Menomonie.

In the 40 or so years he had lived in Menomonie, he literally helped thousands of young people. One of those young people was me. Many times when I would visit this man, old friends of his would stop by to see him and thank him for all the good times he made for so many.

By now many will know I am speaking of Phil Johnson, a basketball booster, a Kiwanian, a Kinship board member and most of all a friend. Phil helped me as he helped many and in return I would do anything in return for him.

Phil is gone now and because of my career and new location I was unable to bid this fine man, who taught me many things, a just good-bye. Phil, you have touched many of us in Menomonie and at Stout and have done some wonderful things. Good-bye.

Academic athletes

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the article in "The Armchair Quarterback" column from the Thursday, September 12, 1985 edition, written by Tom Roth. Specifically, the second half of paragraph 2, which states: "But then why do you repeatedly hear rumors about athletes who get a break while other students in those classes do not get any breaks?"

I would like to take issue with that statement. First of all, I don't feel you should be printing rumors. Many departments do not grade on attendance. We feel that if students miss classes their grades will suffer. We have some statistics on low grades vs. attendance that support this concept.

You imply that athletes pass classes because they are athletes. This is not the policy in the Biology Department, nor is it in most other departments. If an athlete, or a non-athlete earns an A grade, he or she will get an A. Likewise, if they earn an F, they will get an F. For you to insinuate otherwise questions the professionalism and the integrity of the entire Stout faculty. (Your statement says "Professors", not some professors.)

We have been impressed with the integrity of our athletic department on this issue. We have never had a coach call us and ask us to pass a student in a class because that student is an athlete. They will call to check on their progress, but they don't ask for grades.

If you have evidence that athletes are getting a break in a class, it should be brought to the attention of the instructor and department administrator. If you don't have that evidence, you owe that Stout faculty an apology!
George H. Nelson, Chairperson
Department of Biology

CAMPUS SLANT/ Does antagonism exist between townspeople and Stout students?

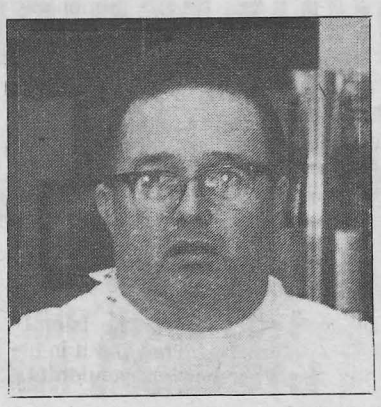
Bayard Ward

It's a big campus for a small town. There are a few problems with the students with vandalism. We can't keep our fence up. Students would do karate kicks on it. We fixed it three times this year.



Larry Quilling

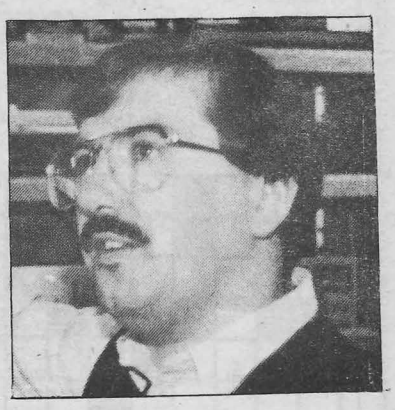
Relations are generally okay between the city and Stout. I'd like to see the homecoming parade right down on Main Street and Broadway this year. It would be nice to see the city close down the public triangle where there could be bands and beer tents. I would like to see the city open up.

Jim Gausmann

The town and the University have a symbiotic relationship. It would be hard for one to survive without the other.

Gerry Trask

There is not too much trouble other than Homecoming, and that's only once a year. If it wasn't for the University, business wouldn't do as well because there are approximately 7500 students.



Russ Nelson

You put 7500 students in this size town and the town becomes congested compared to what it used to be. For some people it is just like their little quiet community. Relations have improved over the last five years.

Kumar to head Minority Affairs

Stout Student Association President JoAnn Prange called the 10th session of the 16th Congress to order at 7 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center.

Under her report Prange informed the senate of a conference to be held on Oct. 17 and 18 at UW-Whitewater concerning alcohol related issues. Prange wants two delegates from senate to attend.

Administrative Assistant Vic Sundvall informed the senate that he has recieved two applications for the three open off-campus senate positions.

Newly appointed Vice President of Legislative Affairs (VPLA) Chuck Keller told the senate that at United Council (UC) last weekend he met with John Wilson, VPLA director. They discussed ideas for recruitment of students to work on legislative affairs and UC. Keller will be informing students on what UC is and what it does for students. He will also inform students on how they can get involved in UC, and on current legislative issues.

Mike Zelinski, Vice President of Academic Affairs (VPAA) informed senate that he along with other University of Wisconsin VPAA will be conducting a survey on financial aids to find out what students know, and what their problems and concerns are. This survey will take place in January.

Vice President of Financial Affairs Tom Schwalbach told the senate that reallocation hearings will be held Tues. Oct. 1st, and Wed. Oct. 2nd in the Prairie room in the Student Center.

United Council Director Dave Kester gave senate a rundown on what went on at UC last weekend. They discussed grant development for UC and fundraising ideas. They also discussed computer networking for all campuses.

Under Kester's report a motion was made to appoint Andrew Kumar to the vacant Minority Affairs positon. This motion passed.

Landlord Tennant Representative Patty Strassman wants the senate to inform students on the NSP Weatherization Program. This program allows students to get grants or loans to weatherize your house. NSP will come to your place or residence and take an energy inspection. If you qualify it is possible to get up to $300.00 to weatherize your home. Strassman will also be conducting a survey to find out how many students are aware of the Landlord Tennant service available to them.

Sands McAlees UPB senator told the senate of two upcoming events. This Thursday, Friday and Saturday Alfred Hitchcock's thriller "Rear Window" will be shown free of charge in the Pawn at 9 p.m. The band Booze Brothers will be performing in the Great Hall on Nov. 14. Tickets are $2.00 in advance, and $3.00 the day of the show.

MENOMONIE TRIVIA

Why is there a law in town that prohibits bars from having dice cups? A: The city council is sick and tired of people trying to explain to them the rules of such complicated games as Mexican whenever they go out on a jag.

Why does the police department scold you if you park your car on you're own lawn? A: They can't check to see if your grass has been cut in accordance with city law if your car is covering it.

What will the city council do when yours truly files nomination papers in December? A: They will undoubtedly laugh at me as much as I do at them.

How many letters to the editor will this column generate? A: I am going for the record since even people who criticize me will be thinking about the issues brought up instead of just resting on their laurels.

WORLD TRIVIA

Why do the countries of Iran and Iraq spend all their resources trying to blow each other away? A: They forgot why, all they know is that whatever it was really pissed them off!

Why does channel 11 feel obligated to run newscasts at 10:00 that run seven to 15 minutes longer than the half hour that EVERY OTHER NEWS PROGRAM IN THE COUNTRY finds adequate? A: So they can have amateurish human interest "extras" to make me angry while I wait for M*A*S*H to start.

Well, thats all for now folks. Go ahead and let me have it. If I get just one letter of support I'll be satisfied that this column did more than just ruffle some feathers. I subscribe to the "Big Chill" philosophy—"blank 'em if they can't take a joke!"

Dear Patty, Landlord Tenant Rep.

When my 3 roommates and myself found an apartment last spring our landlord only had us print our names on a sheet for home address information when we officially signed the lease. My question to you is: Is our lease legal and binding?

Signed, Confused Quad

Feature

Dear Confused Quad,
Types of Rental Agreements,

Whenever a tenant rents an apartment, he or she enters into a rental agreement with the landlord. The rental agreement can be a written lease for a specific period of time on it can be an oral month to month agreement.

The lease is a contract to transfer possesion of real estate for a definite period of time, or "term".

The lease can be written or oral (Wis. S. 704.01 (1)). An oral lease is just as valid as a written one, but you should be able to prove its existence in court if necessary in order to uphold the lease. There must be clear and convincing proof of the oral agreement to win in court. For this reason, it is a good idea to have a witness to any oral agreements negotiated between you and your landlord.

Your situation may fall into the category of question. What you might consider doing is taking your lease and your roomates (whose names are printed on the lease) to an attorney for professional consultation or visit Professor Fitzgerald here on compus. Either of these two could guide you to a successful solution.

Patty Strassman LLT Rep.

President Reagan meets with students

Rich Langberg
News Editor

Write your Congressman! Write the President! How many times have you heard that and thought that it wouldn't do any good? How about a face-to-face interview? That is what three college students were able to do last week at the White House.

In a 37 minute interview, three college representatives of the College Radio Network grilled President Reagan on a variety of subjects. They were Nellie Fernandez, University of Miami, Stephen Sanders, Indiana University and Jean Whalen of John Carroll University. Here are some of the questions that the students asked the President and his responses.

...we certainly have no plans whatsoever for ever landing military forces in Latin America.

—President Reagan

Q: Mr. President, many students fear that we will become involved in a war outside our borders. Although you cannot tell us under what specific circumstances we would have a military intervention in Nicaragua, what can you say that would address the students' fears?

The President: I would like to address those fears by telling them that we certainly have no plans whatsoever for ever landing military forces in Latin America. As a matter of fact, all our friends down there have told us, and repeatedly, they don't want our forces there to help them, although they want our help in training, in providing weapons they need and do not have at the present for themselves. But the memories of the big colossus of the north and that early gunboat dipolmacy era are still so much in their minds that just politically they don't want it, and we agree with them.

Q: Mr. President, I'd like to know what you see as the value of a liberal arts education in today's fast-moving, increasingly high-tech society.

The President: Well, I have one myself, and I've been trying to to figure out how it has set me back. No, I'll tell you, I believe in it very much. I think it is the basis. And I deplore the tendency in some places - in some institutions - to go directly toward training for a trade or profession or something and ignoring the liberal arts. I think it is the foundation of education, a good, round liberal arts training.

And I think that in many great companies and institutions that many of them say that, rather than having someone that has tried to train themselves specifically for that line - whatever line of work they're hiring them to do, they believe in the broad, liberal arts education. Many employers will tell you that they believe they can do the training in their particular line of work or company themselves that needs to be done. But they would like a well-rounded, educated individual.

Q: Mr. President, we realize that we have to maintain a tough bargaining stance with the Soviet Union, but the picture that has been painted by your administration seems pretty bleak. What are your realistic and specific goals for the summit meeting?

The President: I believe that the two superpowers hold so much of the fate of the world in their hands -that we have to recognize that. Now if the Soviet Union, in all of its talk that we represent a threat to them, that we are the agressor and so forth - if there is any element of real belief in that, if it isn't just propaganda, and they really belive that, then I would like to talk a little bit - well, or give them the facts to try and show them by deed, not word, that we are not an aggressor.

So I - the only thing - I think, for example, arms control and arms limitation - I don't think about that so much as a thing to take up in the summit as to eliminate the things that are preventing arms control.

IS BONZO HOME?—
Three college students were recently given the chance to ask President Reagan questions on issues ranging from war to the upcoming Summit to the value of a liberal arts education.

Undergrad

said, "I have never had any problem getting the courses I've needed. If someone has a problem they can always go to the teacher." Increasing enrollment does not appear to be a problem at Stout this year since graduate enrollment has only increased by 103 students and undergraduate enrollment has actually decreased.

Hughes noted that Stouts' cooperative education and field experience programs increased the amount of time, but "that the educational experience was well worth it." She also said, "Internships and practicums affect the length of stay, but these are student made choices."

There are, of course, some four year undergraduates out there and they are willing to tell you how to do it. Brenda Polanski, a junior who plans to graduate in May of 1987 says, "I planned to graduate in four years and I've taken 16 or more credits a semester." She advised students to plan out their schedules and be willing to take more than 15 credits at a time.

Kelly Theder, a senior who will graduate in May said it helped her that she knew what she wanted to do and never switched majors. When asked how she managed it all, she simply said, "Pain, perserverance, and organization."

Examination of detox procedure has eye-opening consequences

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

If you asked any student about the cause for someone's going to detox, the usual response may take several forms. The person was shit-faced, smashed, plowed, gonzo, driving the bus, three sheets to the wind, bombed, crazy, feeling no pain, had checked out, and on and on.

The true cause is that the individual has passed beyond these stages and is actually determined to be incapacitated by either campus police or Menomonie Police.

The Program Coordinator for the hospital unit of the Dunn County Health Center (DCHC), Roger Uecker outlined possible causes for taking someone to detox. "They are looking mainly for physical indicators that the person is unable to care for himself, down in the street, that's not uncommon, unable to climb the steps to the dorm. At that point the officer will bring him in."

Uecker said it wasn't unusual for new students at the university who go out partying for the first time to wind up at detox. "It is not uncommon, especially for this time of the school year for a student to be picked up who is relatively new, does not know where his residence is, does not know who he went out drinking with, might not know the community he's in, does not know his general surroundings or where he is located."

Uecker stressed that alcohol abuse is no respector of a persons gender. Women are as vulnerable to it as men are.

Robert Hoage, supervisor of campus police agreed with Uecker's assessment of reasons for taking someone to DCHC. "If someone gets to the point where they're really incapacitated, then we call an ambulance."

Hoage remembers one case in which a student went into cardiac arrest resulting from their high blood alcohol level. Hoage hopes that students realize that Protective Services only has the students' best interests at heart. "We're really concerned about these people. We're not just going out there to give them a citation. After all they are an important part of our community and as such we're concerned about their well-being."

Hoage said that Campus Police appreciated the cooperation they have received in the past from the Menomonie Police Department (MPD) when working with intoxicated and possibly incapacitated students on-campus. "Chief Beety wants to have his people work with us on-campus, and we want them to work with us as a team."

The biggest aid to Protective Services in analyzing the condition of students who appear intoxicated and possibly incapacitated is the Alco-Sensor II intoximeter. The Alco-Sensor II is a breath screening device designed to give blood alcohol levels accurate to within .01 of one percent of the actual level.

The Alco-Sensor II is so sensitive that there have been times they have tested the air in a room where much drinking has occurred and they've received a reading from that test. As a result, Hoage warns that students needn't be concerned if their friend is removed from the room for a breath test. "In the future, we'll have to remove individuals from the room in order to have control of the situation."

Hoage defines the experience of going to detox as, "A really dramatic experience. Once they go through this they never forget it." He's concerned by his assessment of the situation to this point that, "We're having more problems here this year than we've had in the past."

The detoxification program at DCHC is up to 72 hours in length but in the past four years the average stay was just over two days. The normal amount of time for a person to sleep off the effects is eight hours. If after that time the person can remember what occurred and is up and able to contact someone who will assist them getting home, then they will be released. Before the patient goes home, Uecker says "We try to provide some intervention working through the Dunn County Association so they get information about what other services are available for alcohol misuse and abuse."

In the event that that you're brought into DCHC by a law enforcement officer, the rate will be $130 per day. "It can be an expensive night out on the town for someone who goes out partying and ends up being brought in." The major improvement according to Uecker is that, "It's being seen as a medical emergency where ten years ago it was pretty much seen as a legal problem with people picked up and taken to jail and allowed to sleep it off." The biggest difference according to Uecker is their ability to give these people the need referral to counselling.

In rapid succession, once a person is brought into detox, the policeman fills out a contact sheet informing DCHC of the essential circumstances surrounding the occurrence. Next, a member of the nursing staff tries to get background medical information from the patient. A check of your vital signs is completed. Nurses work to determine the type of medical services you might need. Uecker says, "The great majority of people who are brought in for detoxification are seen by our medical director within that first day of admission."

One of Uecker's main concerns is how deceptively alcohol alters a persons perceptions. "A lot of inhibitions will go out the window. Sober, you might see a hazardous situation and kind of stay away from it. Get a couple three drinks in you and you'll say, ah, it's not that bad, I can do it."

In conclusion, Uecker said he could not judge the current drinking trend at Stout because he was only in the position to judge the most severe cases. The most positive aspect to him at this time is that Stout Security and the DCHC are working so well together to fulfill the needs of the Stout community.

Activities sobered by new drinking age

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Since the spring of 1984 when the 19 year-old drinking age was first enforced, the serving of alcoholic beverages in the Student Center was severely limited in the attempt to comply with the law.

Reviewing the change in drinking activity allowed at the Student Center, Student Center Director Bob Johnson said, "Before the 19 year-old drinking age went into effect we used to serve at all the concerts. That's not the case now. Whenever we have a concert, if that organization requests alcoholic beverage service, it has to be in a separate room where we can control people and can check ID's."

The Contemporary Music Productions (CMP) chairperson, Christa Sanicola says she was apprehensive at first about their having concerts without the serving of alcohol. She was encouraged though by the large turn out for the Bad Boy show. "It showed that we as CMP can pull in a good crowd without the alcohol." She noted that less than 10 percent of the respondents to a survey CMP circulated after the concert commented on the lack of beer at the show.

Sanicola says, "We would still like to be able to serve alcohol to people of legal age." She believed it significant that, "We're the only dry university in the the whole UW System. At UWM they not only serve beer but they have wet bars where they serve mixed drinks at concerts."

Concerning possible solutions to the problem, Sanicola says many students have asked her, "'Why not sell the show to people 19 and above?' But I like to feel that CMP is for everyone and it would be unfair excluding those who are under 19."

Sanicola is considering having concerts start as late as 9:30 pm., having only one band perform one show. The idea is to improve attendence by allowing those who are old enough to drink to go up town and quench their thirst prior to attending the concert.

Another solution which Sanicola says wouldn't cost much would be the giving out of plastic wrist bands to students who are of age. These bands would be much like those given out to hospital patients and would allow beverage servers to easily distinguish between students who are of age and those who aren't. According to Sanicola, these bands would cost approximately three cents each and could be easily purchased en masse. These bands should make the enforcement of the drinking age law manageable.

Student Center Director, Bob Johnson understands how severely the new drinking age impinges on the overall goals of CMP concerning on-campus concerts. "People want to drink where the music is. Of course, the law is very specific in terms of who can drink where. So, since the 19 year-old drinking age has gone into effect we have served very little alcohol."

Johnson sees a fairly all-encompassing transition occurring in student lifestyles. "There's more than just a difference in activities. I think we're seeing a change in attitudes by the students." Johnson thinks that with the enrollment of each new freshman class more and more members of the class respect the 19-year-old drinking law as it becomes an accepted tradition.

Johnson stressed that the Student Center complies with state laws concerning alcohol and was revised the spring of '84. "The policy was established and exists to make sure that the university is in compliance with the letter and the spirit of the law. And also that the policy promote responsible use of alcoholic beverages."

Student Activities Advisor, Lucy Nicolai says the student activities staff has been successful in that, "We are trying to provide alternative programming whether it be a video dance, a live concert, a Pawn performance, a movie, and I noticed that our attendence has been increased." Other important factors in the increased attendence at activities may well be the new Student Center and an acceptance of alternatives to alcoholic entertainment.

The overall impression is that the change in life at Stout as a result of the 19 year-old drinking law has been a change in student expectations and attitudes resulting in under age students exploring the possible alternatives.

Fines

until August 5 waiting to appear before the council. The Tap had been closed all summer and was scheduled to open on August 1.

"The underaged persons shouldn't have been in here in the first place," states Wagner. "They violated the law and my losses have been substantial. It's like a bad dream." Wagner is seriously considering a lawsuit against the two people in the bar for negligence. Wagner feels that the minor's penalty is very minimal at maybe $25 or $50 and that the underaged person should be fined at least $200.00,with their parents helping pay since they are under 18. He feels that this would make parents aware that the responsibility lies with them as well as with the tavern owners.

Wagner now employs police officers to check ID's at the door in full uniform. He feels this deters underaged persons from attempting access on the premises.

Wagner feels that there are other problems affecting bar owners that should be taken care of. The main one is house parties. Some parties, according to Wagner, clear $350.00 after all expenses. These houses do not have a license to dispense alcoholic beverages and some party sponsors are not checking ID's. These parties are not promoting responsible drinking. They can often easily afford a noise violation or a liquor law violation with the amount of money they have raised.

There are almost 1500 new students that are underaged this year. Recently, the Flame Lounge has been charged with serving alcohol to an underaged person, according to Wagner. This problem is going to be difficult to overcome. Cooperation is necessary between the community, police, bar owners, and especially underaged students who should realize that it is their own responsibility to stay out of the bars until they have turned the legal drinking age of 19.

Inventors Week

Gov. Anthony Earl has proclaimed the week of Oct. 13-19 as Inventors Recognition week in conjunction with UW-Stout's annual inventor's conference, which meets for two days here on campus beginning Oct. 18.

Earl said that the sponsors of the conference, UW-Stout and the Midwest Inventors Group, "are encouraging the further development of inventive processes of interest to all mankind." The proclamation states that "the inventive process is vital to the continued technical growth of Wisconsin; and the individual inventor is most important in this process."

Childhood Conference

"Children: The POINT of Our Committment" is the theme of the 31st annual Early Childhood Conference to be held in Stevens Point at the Holiday Inn on Oct. 11 and 12. It is sponsored by the Wisconsin Early Childhood Association.

Workshops will be held in all areas of Early Childhood Education including infant/toddler and after school programming, child abuse, men in early childhood, music, storytelling and many others. The keynote presenter will be Ella Jenkins, nationally famous singer and composer of children's music. More information is available from WECA in Madison at 608-238-7338.

T and A Films

UW-Stout's Office of Continuing Education is sponsoring a series of "travel and adventure" films beginning late this fall. All the presentations will be shown in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Opening the series on Oct. 24 will be James Forshee with his film Exploring Norway. On Dec. 12, Lee and Lily Cavanaugh will show their film, Bangkok to Bali. The two films in the second semester will be Mysterious Mayaland by Romain Wilmelmsen on Jan. 23 and Willis Butler will conclude the series with his film Ireland Rediscovered.

Tickets are available through the Office of Continuing Education in the Administration Building. Season tickets are $12 for adults and $8 for students. There is also a special "patrons" season ticket for $25, with which the person may attend a "meet the artist" coffee after each presentation.

H and R in Europe

With stops in Amsterdam, Paris, Brussels and London, UW-Stout is offering a tour titled "Hotel and Restaurant In Europe" Dec. 28 -Jan. 12. Departing form Chicago, the cost for the tour will be $1,570.

This study tour will focus on the hospitality industry, with the students being given the chance to have discussions with industry executives while visiting various hotels and restaurants. Participants will earn 10 credits through continuing education and may also acquire academic credit through independent study. The instructor for the tour will be Leland Nicholls, administrator and professor in the department of Habitational Resources.

Enrollment Data In

According to statistics released last Thursday, UW-Stout will have it's largest enrollment ever this fall. There are 7,705 students in attendance this semester, compared with 7,385 last year. The previous high was the 1982-83 academic year when the enrollment was 7,596. Most of the growth is attributed to an increased number of continuing students.

Student Regent Bill

The Wisconsin Legislature will be convening on September 23, and the bill about whether or not to a place a student on the Wisconsin Board of Regents is again up for passage. In the last floor session, the Senate attached an amendment requiring that two students be placed on the Board, but it was voted down by a 56-40 margin.

The Senate now has two choices. It can either rescind from it's previous position or try and sustain it. Senate Majority leader Tim Cullen believes that the bill with the amendment can garner enough votes early in the session to pass.

Cullen feels that a vote for the two representatives is a vote for campuses like Stout to be represented. It is feared that if there is only one student on the board, that person would most likely come fron either UW-Madison or Milwaukee, with the smaller campuses being left out.

United Way Booth

Each Tuesday and Thursday in the Student Center from 9:30 to 11:00 am during the month of October, the United Way will have an information booth so that students will be able to learn more about the United Way programs that serve Dunn County. Education Division chairman Ted Wiehe will be on hand to answer questions and printed material will also be available.

UW Prof to Keep Grant

Despite a petition signed by 80 faculty, graduate students and staff, UW-Madison Space, Science and Engineering Director Verner Suomi has said he will not return a $50,000 government grant for research that may be used in President Reagan's "Star Wars" defense intiative.

Senior scientist David Martin presented the petition to Suomi, saying the contract implied that the research will be used for military purposes. Suomi said that only a small part of the grant was being paid for by the military, and that "I don't want to make a better weapon. No way."

The drive to get scientists to reject money for "Star Wars" research started at Cornell University in New York and the University of Illinois. Scientists have argued that the research would be a waste of time because the program is thought to be scientifically impossible.

Forensic Club persuasive in their goal

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

"Everything from interpretation to persuasive speaking" is the way forensics head coach Mike Nicolai described the 10 different categories forensic meets are divided into. Nicolai, in his tenth year as head coach has seen an increase in participation in recent years. "We sort of plateaued," stated Nicolai, "but now we're on an upward trend as far as participation goes." He sees people being able to free up their weekends more as a reason for the increase.

Stout has a relatively new team this year with only three or four active members returning. These returning members offer experience and information to new, novice speakers.

One of the returners is club president Paul Peltier. It is his job to head up club meetings, help to organize activities and to get the varsity members interacting with novice members.

According to Nicolai, an active member throughout the year puts in between 12-20 hours a week, including weekend competitions. It is possible to be active without competing in any of the meets. In fact Nicolai discourages people from going to every meet because he feels they should take time to experience other activities on campus.

One of the biggest problems the team faces is that they are off-campus a lot of the time so they don't receive a lot of the exposure that other organizations do. "It would be like having a football team that played all of its games away frome home," said Nicolai.

Stout does host an annual tournament on campus. With over 500 entries and between 250-350 people involved, this tournament is "one of the largest in the midwest." Teams come from as far away as Texas to compete. This tournament will be held December 6th and 7th.

"We are looking for lots of new members for the team," said Nicolai. "Experience is not necessary. All you need is enthusiasm to join us."

SSA members represent Stout at monthly United Council meeting

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Six members of the Stout Student Association (SSA) traveled to Steven's Point this past weekend, Sept. 20-21, to represent Stout at the monthly United Council (UC) meeting. UC is an organization that represents most of the University of Wisconsin system schools by uniting seperate student governments into one body. This unification is what gives UC its power. UC is funded by a 50 cent charge added to every member student's tuition.

The six; President JoAnn Prange, Vice President of Academic Affairs Mike Zelinski, Womans Affairs Representative Tracy Lea Landis, UC Director David Kester, Vice president of Legislative Affairs Charles Keller, and acting Minorities Affairs Representive Andrew Kumar, divided into their respective committees on Friday night to discuss issues concerning their areas. If certain issues deemed necessary, motions were proposed from these committees. Committees also set goals and plans of action for the next month and well into the near future.

Saturday meetings concentrated mainly on discussing, in general assembly, issues that came out of committee. Some resolutions passed by assembly include UC opposition of Assembly Bill 413. This bill deals with the Post Labor Day start for university schools, and who has the authority to set university calenders. Reasons for opposing this bill include the question of what to do about examination periods at the end of the first sememster and that a late start means a late finish in the spring. This will hurt graduates looking for a job.

UC also passed a resolution in favor of Senate Bill 312. This bill dictates the placement of two students on the Wisconsin Higher Education Aids Board. The two students would be divided, one from an UW system school, and one from a Wisconsin private school. UC was in favor of this because it would mean increased student voice in government.

Also on Saturday, members of the Pro-Peace movement spoke to faim support for the "Great Peace March." This march, currently in the organizational phase, claims to be the "beginning of the end for nuclear weapons." The plan is for 5000 people to leave Los Angeles on March 1, 1986 and walk 15 miles a day for 255 days equaling 3,235 miles, ending up in Washington D.C.

The main speaker at assembly was Wisconsin State Senate Majority Leader Tim Cullen. Cullen reported on the current status of the "student regent bill." This bill was first introduced by Rep. Clarenbach and Rep. Shoemaker and called for placing a student on the board of regents. This student must be of at least half-time status, and in good acedemic standing. Cullen amended this bill to call for two students, one from Madison or Milwaukee, and another from a cluster school. A cluster school is an university system school other than Madison or Milwaukee. Cullen justified this amendment by stating it guarentees representation for cluster schools.

"I would like all Stout students to take part in UC," stated acting Minorities Affairs representive Andrew Kumar. "It is definitely an excellent experience to meet so many people from the campuses and to work with them."

Arts

Artist exhibits emotion and experience

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

You might know her as the helpful clerk at the Campus Art Store, Nancy Blum. What you may not know is that Blum is a Stout graduate in art, an MFA from Louisianna State University and a first-class "basement" artist.

This female "Clark Kent" works four days a week at the art store to "support her habit," as her husband calls it. She is married to Doug Cumming, a member of the Stout art faculty.

Blum first attended U.W. Eau Claire because they had a Master's of Fine Arts degree. She stayed there for two years and finished her fundamental courses. She decided to transfer to Stout, after a disappointing sculpture class.

"There was no instruction at all. No personal contact. The only classes I got anything out of were [fundamentals of design] classes. At that point I was really feeling Eau Claire was conservative." She transferred to Stout at the recommendation of friends.

While here she had classes with Charles Wimmer, Cumming, Todd Boppel, Robb Wilson, John Perri, Orazio Fumagali, and Ron Verdon. Her contact with Verdon in an art metals class provided her with a particularly strong sense of direction. She credits Verdon with inciting her originality and creativity. "Ron was such a good teacher. He really brought out my ideas."

One trait about Nancy Blum that is hard not to notice is her strong bent toward the value of ideas and incorporating experience into her artwork. Her work has a strong emotional impact. She intends it to be so.

"I think anybody can pick up technique, but I think it is harder to work with ideas... to dig deeper into the really personal and then find continuity with what they are doing with other things. What kind of books do you read? What ideas go in your head?"

"That kind of continuity is really important because alot of kids don't realize that you just don't walk into art and just create. You have got to have some ideas, you have got to be thinking."

Blum stressed taking a variety of courses and integrating those varied ideas into your thought process. "It has to do with experience."

One of Blum's accomplishments while at Stout was the reestabishment of an English student- exchange program. Working with two classmates, Stacey Green and David Leister, this group helped arrange an exchange with Middlesex Polytechnic in London. "It's a very good school and I would recommend it to anybody," Blum said.

Her eight months in London helped solidify her intentions toward art and the possibilty of graduate school. Her English mates suggested the Royal College. Blum decided not to attend the Royal College because the degree would not be equivalent to a master's, which would have meant completing a master's in the States. She settled on LSU because of the assistantship she was offered.

While taking graduate courses in ceramics at LSU, Blum also worked as a monitor in metals and ceramics, which is similar to work-study, though the monitors have graduate skills in the area. Eventually, she did work both as a metals, and a fundamental design teaching assistant.

Besides working on her art, Blum is very interested in teaching on the college level. Her ceramics and sculpture background and her MFA qualify her for a position.

The artist facet of Nancy Blum's life is the shining side at the moment. She was recently accepted into the annual juried show at the Edna Carlson Gallery at U.W. Stevens Point. She is writing a proposal for the WARM Gallery in Minneapolis. Further, she is preparing for a seminar at UW-River Falls later in September.

"The idea of what I do is to use clay as a skeletal form, from there it just starts to come alive," Blum said. At the moment, she was working on a ceramic piece which may defy verbal description.

"In fact, I hated this piece when it came out of the kiln, but I said... Just keep working on it... keep camouflaging it' and now I'm starting to really like it."

The piece is a ceramic "finger" or modified column shape made of a low-fire whiteware. The decorative surface is the reason Blum likes it.

Through countless small pinholes, Blum ran strands of nylon filament, and at the base of each were small beads and little snatches of hair, her hair. Around each pinhole were funky pastel polka-dots of glaze and snips of colored lace.

The piece has a softness, a slight hairiness like a caterpillar. It has a very pronounced texture and color scheme. At a distance, it is the form and not the surface that is the strong feature.

She glazes and fires her pieces in her own electric kiln in her basement studio. "This little kiln really kicks out the heat, and it heats up the basement and the house, which is nice in the winter."

On the piece she was creating, she had to complete a second, nearly identical piece, which will slip part-way inside the first cast, then the pair will fit down inside a large plexiglass tube. You can't say, however, that Blum's work is going down the tubes.

BLUM BLOSSUMS —
Nancy Blum, (Pronounced bloom) describes her latest piece. Beads, hair, lace, and nylon filament are the composite texture of her unique, emotional piece. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

She had been to have her hair cut and colored earlier in the day. "Look what I got..." she said, holding up a plastic bag full of hair. Different color hair. "I made them sweep the floor."

"My next piece is ... I'm just going crazy with hair, and it has to do with hair. It is a very personal statement. I like hair. It is very powerful."

The Cumming/Blum household has two views toward the commercial aspect of art. Cumming is more concerned about sales. About sales, Blum said "I'm more afraid of it...I just think that if the work is good enough, it will just start moving. I don't want to sell 'myself' that much, I want 'it' to go."

Blum does what so many artists do, work a lighter job that pays enough to support the expenses of art. Their combined income puts the couple into a comfortable range that affords them time to complete their art.

One product line that Blum explored was her ceramic "weenie pins." These comical little pieces are based after the shape of the male reproductive organs. Occasionally, these organs are referred to as "weenies."

The "weenie pins" have not captured the wholesale heart of shop owners. "Most people do not see them as humorous; they see them as hardcore."

"They (shopowners) sound like they like them, then I say, How many would you like for your store? No...they say...I couldn't sell them in the store."

Blum's attitude is that the sexual liberation period has taken place and that visually, "What's wrong with penises?...It just became bizarre for me, because I got all these great responses, but then people said um..uh, I couldn't wear one of those."

The pins were an offshoot of her more common forms in her larger ceramic pieces, a form that resembles a phallic shape. "It doesn't always mean the same thing." Wasn't it Freud who said, "Sometimes a cigar is just a cigar."

Blum has worked with larger, installation-scale pieces. The piece at the Carlson Gallery is based on an environmental piece she had created earlier in her career. It is a large hanging piece involving a parachute canopy, a ceramic form and it has an internal lighting.

Blum is a talented and knowledgeable artist who has made the most of her education and life experiences. Her work will be seen later in October at Gallery 104 in Ray Hall, during the homecoming alumni show.

Astronomer's presentation educational; Halley's Comet expertly interpreted

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

Comets have played a fascinating part in history, according to astronomer and scientist Dr. Mark Littman.

Littman addressed a crowd of approximately 200 on the subject of Halley's Comet in his Speakers Series presentation on Sept. 19 at UW-Stout's student center.

"A comet is the nearest thing to nothing that something can be and still be something," Littman said. He described a comet as a "dirty snowball."

Comets are composed of ice, frozen gasses and rock particles. The nucleus is usually from one to five miles in diameter, Littman explained. When the sun vaporizes a comet, a gasseous shroud is formed. These gasses and particles then flow behind the comet creating its spectacular tail. The tail of Halley's Comet, which will appear this year, will be 30 to 50 million miles in length.

Comets have traditionally been viewed by societies as signs of coming disasters, such as wars, floods, famines or droughts. Throughout the ages, people have blamed their misfortunes on comets they may have seen prior to the catastrophes.

Littman illustrated this fact with several historical slides. As early as 1066, a comet was sewn into a tapestry that depicted a dire prophecy involving the death of King Harold.

However, the Chinese have always held a more scientific view of comets. For centuries they have been recording comet paths and positions. They were the first to discover that comets shine by reflected sunlight. In later years, it was discovered that fluorescent gasses also contribute to the glow of comets.

Meanwhile, more outrageous theories were being spread about comets in other parts of the world. Many believed that comets were the sins of mankind rising toward heaven. God would then strike down these sins with fire to warn the people to repent for their evils.

Until the late 1500's, it was believed that comets were in the earth's atmosphere, much like clouds. Then when more accurate measuring devices were invented, it was discovered that comets are located in space among the planets.

In the late 1600's, a young scientist named Halley left Oxford University to travel to Africa and devise a navigational star map for sailors.

Upon his return, he met with other prominent scientists of the time to discuss planet revolution.

"It was Halley who convinced Sir Iassac Newton to publish his Universal Gravitation Theory," Littman said.

Halley studied comets and gravity for nearly 20 years. He proved that comets follow the laws of gravity as they bend around the sun. While studying comet paths, Halley noticed that three comets had identical paths. He deduced that this was actually a single comet appearing in the earth's sky at regular intervals. Today this comet is known as "Halley's Comet."

It is believed that Halley's Comet has been appearing every 76 years since 240 BC. It was last seen in 1910. The comet caused quite a sensation that year. People were terrified that the comet would crash through the earth or emit poisonous gasses.

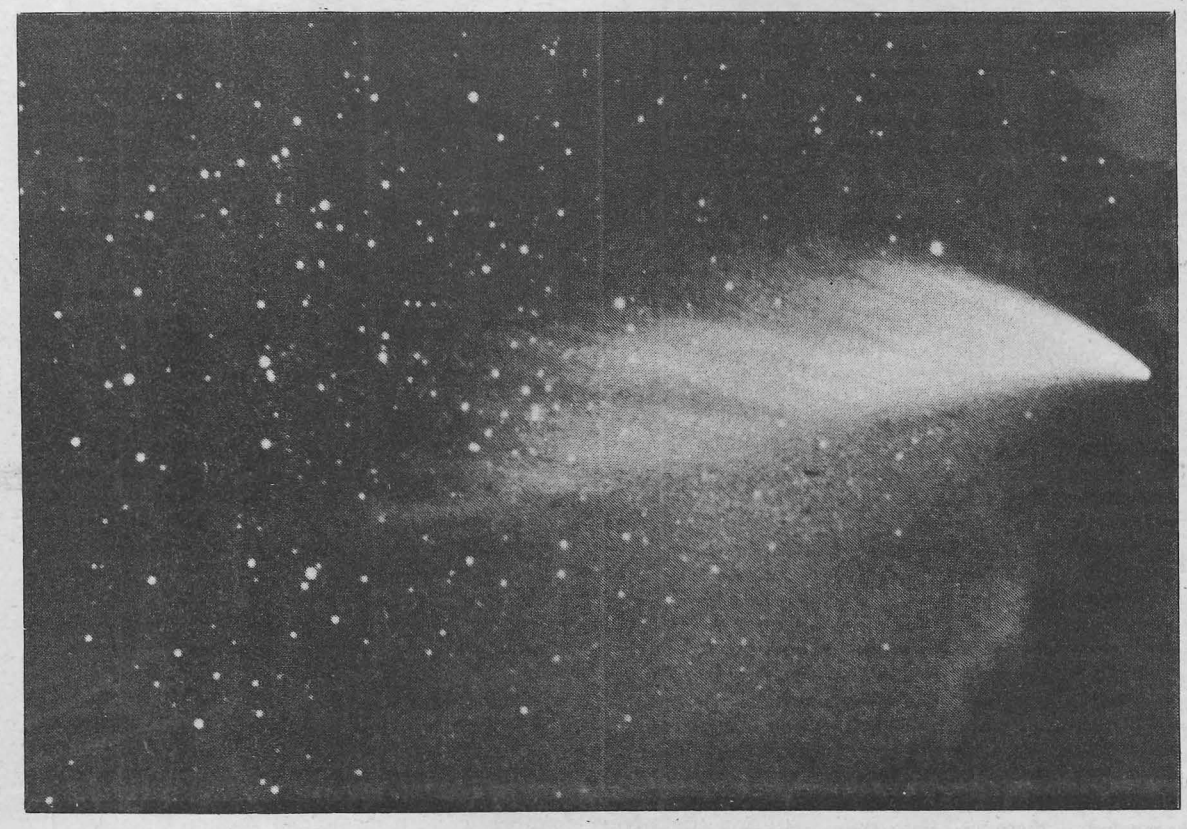
"According to legend, one man gathered several followers and kidnapped a woman to sacrifice to the comet," said Littman.

Salesmen went from door to door selling "comet pills" and gas masks for protection from the comet.

In 1985-86, the comet will be visible in various parts of the world from now until March. It won't appear to be as bright as it was in 1910 because it will be further away from the earth. City lights will also make the comet appear dimmer.

Several countries are eagerly awaiting the comet's visit. This will be the first time that color film can be used to photograph the comet. Japan, the USSR and the European Space Agency are using space probes to explore the comet.

Littman plans to begin viewing the comet with telescopic equipment in November, but added that it would be visible to the naked eye by December or January.



COMET'S A 'COMIN' — Coming soon for your viewing pleasure, Halley's Comet. This may be your only chance to view this "dirty snowball." The next visit will be around 2161.

'Til Tuesday travels to top

Dan Elmergreen

'TIL TUESDAY - Voices Carry

Stunning blonde and striking the right note entail a fraction of the success from the East Coast's up and coming bandster "TIL TUESDAY."

Although success emulated recently, Aimee Mann, the bands leading influence and song writer claims success was part of "The Master Plan."

This plan included the style, the beat and the start up. Attitudes expressed by Mann's ultra-tone vocals, as prescribed by real life instances add body to the rituals of music.

'TIL TUESDAY combines a "not trendy or Duran Duranish" look with a blessing of rock ballad revival.

It seems the central core of the LP sways in and out of real-life love adventures, while the beat radiates individuality.

Some of the bands top songs have gone to epic proportion in the video sect, while the LP is only at 43 on the Rolling Stone's top 50 list.

All in all, the band is frugal with attention and overflowing with talent, which should enable 'TIL TUESDAY to escalate on the music charts.

THE STYLE COUNCIL/ INTERNATIONALISTS

Tacky clothes and wierd hairdos, and they call themselves "The Style Council?"

This English trio declares "you will find a vast array of styles and ideas, attitudes and spirit."

This LP definitely fits their description to the key. From this key the council cries for justice, promotes revolt and encompasses all this propaganda with unadulterated variety of tone and beat.

This LP is not suggested for the meek, take it as it is and enjoy the flavor of originality from Englands own "Style Council".

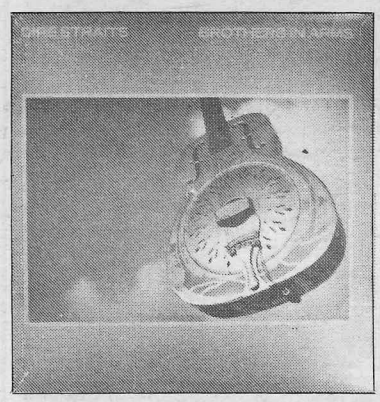
DIRE STRAITS - Brothers In Arms

Contradiction pours from their every work, but in the end the Knopfler style pulls through with top notch notes.

According to Rolling Stone magazine, Brothers In Arms is the number one selling LP in the nation, along with being a top British album and a top ten video.

This LP bearing the domineering effects to Mark Knopfler continues to bend the rules of pop beat and traditional Dire Straits rhythm.

With a brief appearance from



Sting, the most popular track "Money for Nothing" tells two contradictory stories of how MTV pop stars lack talent, but still get the fame! Dire Straits has unsurmounted talent and ability to mix popularity with their solid keyboard/bass style.

For any Dire Straits fan, this LP is a must, for those of you who want to look beyond MTV, it's a real treat.

Riders in the Sky

True praises for blue skies, tumblin' tumbleweeds and cool, cool water evolve from the trio, Riders in the Sky, as they bring to the Tainter stage the styles of such "Singin' Cowboys" as Gene Autry, Roy Rogers, Tex Whitley and Bob Norlan and the Sons of the Pioneers.

Beautiful melody and harmony reinforced by acoustic guitarwork, bass and fiddle, Riders in the Sky create seamless visions of wonder from right out of the cowboy movies of Hollywood in the 1930's and 40's.

To indicate that the Riders in the Sky show is one of nostalgia and vintage sells short their current humor in which they crack bunkhouse jokes with such energy and showmanship that even the heart of the coldest schoolmarm can be won. Their amazing ability to yodel in three-part harmony, sets the pace for music that is custom-made for sheer entertainment.

Riders in the Sky are a novelty act, but just as surely, they're part of a growing obsession with tradition. Until two years ago, Riders... were the newest members of the Grand Ole Opry. They are also very frequent guests on Austin City Limits.

Their sound, combined with dress of colorful western garb; stage decor of cacti, tumbleweeds, full moon and campfire, and props true to the finest memories of the wide-open range will appeal to every segment of an audience.

Held in the Mabel Tainter Memorial Theater, Riders in the Sky can be seen on Saturday, September 28 at 8 p.m. The charge will be $7.00 for adults and $5.50 for all children 12 or under.

Count Thread Embroidery Techniques Workshop

UW-Stout's department of apparel, textiles, and design is sponsoring four workshops for the general public this fall.

The second of these workshops, Count Thread Embroidery Techniques, will be held in the Home Economics building on Saturday, September 28. Instruction will be provided by Karen Schrage, an independent needlework teacher, artist and former needlework shop owner. The cost is $10.

Rear Window

Directed by Alfred Hitchcock, Rear Window is a masterpiece in its own with a four-star rating. Rex Reed of the New York Post said, " Rear Window' is the kind of masterpiece they don't make anymore...It is a genuine thrill to have the real McCoy back on the marquee again."

Rear Window boasts such stars as James Stewart, Grace Kelly, Wendell Corey, and Thelma Ritter.

Sponsored by the Pawn Commission, Rear Window, will be shown in the Pawn on September 26, 27, & 28. The movie starts at 9:00 p.m. on all three nights, and admission is free.

Concerts performed with flair and finesse

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Menomonie was the place. Eloquence was the mood. The voices of string, wind and percussion instruments entertained the ears of audiences on campus and at the Mabel Tainter Theater. Last week the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra and a Baroque Orchestra came to town.

Review

Three buses and a trailer transported the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra to Menomonie. They in turn transported the audience to a realm of great music.

Those filling the UW-Stout Johnson Fieldhouse enjoyed the journey last Wednesday evening. Although the atmosphere was hot and humid, the performance went on with much flair and finesse.

Brass and percussion envoked a powerful awakening with the opening piece -Fanfare for the Common Man. This tribute had the essence of an American spirit. Each section of the orchestra performed solo with excitement, then blended to a climax of thrilling sounds.

An outpouring of emotion was apparent through the arm and hand motions of the acclaimed conductor, Lukas Foss.

The musical selections performed included the works of Copland, Barber, Wieniawski and Beethoven. The fingers of the guest artist, Jerome Franke danced across his violin playing Weiniawski's Violin Concerto No. 2.

After completing the final piece, Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the orchestra received a standing ovation. Members of the audience and the orchestra were pleased and warmed by the evening's outpouring of beautiful sound.

"It is a young orchestra and it has a lot of spirit," said the assistant concertmaster and guest artist Jerome Franke. The Milwaukee Symphony was founded in 1956 and is now recognized as an orchestra with artistic maturity and technical mastery.

Franke found being the guest artist a delight and treat. Usually being in the first violin section, playing the guest role gave him the opportunity to stand up in front and show off.

After his performance Franke said, "I always feel a sense of elation if it went to my satisfaction, if I didn't let the elements stand in my way. In this case the elements were humidity, heat and a few mosquitos."

According to Franke, guest conductors are amazed at the willingness to cooperate among the members of the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra. They work very closely to make the music as one.

Dorothy Diggs said, "I think we have a good comradery feeling in the orchestra. There are a lot of younger people and people tend to do things together outside the orchestra."

Diggs enjoys doing her job. "I like the people. I look forward to seeing them. Over the years I have enjoyed playing the violin in an orchestra and so I feel lucky to have the job."

During intermission Diggs felt that the orchestra was warmed up although it was a shame it was so hot. Heat and moisture on the instruments will make the strings go flat and the wind instruments go sharp.

The Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra often plays for university audiences. Franke said, "University crowds tend to know what they want to hear and know what they like. They are very receptive towards this kind of music. So we enjoy it."

Lukas Foss said, "I always go to campuses. Actually that's my audience - my personal audience." Foss is one of the country's leading composers. He has been awarded and honored for his music and has appeared as guest conductor throughout the United States, South America and Europe.

During the spring of 1986 the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra will appear in Europe for the first time. Foss said, "It is fun to take the orchestra on its first trip."

The Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra is unique. According to Foss, "They get along. They speak to each other and therefore make music together." Foss does not consider music his career but his work—something he has always dreamed of as long as he can remember.

> It is a young orchestra and it has alot of spirit.
> —Jerome Franke, Asst. Concert Master Milwaukee Symphony

More as a composer than a conductor, Foss has made an imprint upon the music of today. "The world of new music—there is my passion to write it."

Presentation of the Symphony was sponsored by the Performing Arts Commission.

Sunday was the opening debut of the Lyra Concert Series at the Mabel Tainter Theater. The newly established Baroque orchestra, directed by Randy Bourne, Associate Music Director at Minnesota Public Radio, went "Bach to Basics."

The group brought new life to the music of Handel, Bach, Corelli, Telemann and other great composers. Baroque is a style that has the characteristics of the artisic expression of the 17th century.

Devoted to this style, the music was played upon period instruments. This orchestra brought listeners to the world of queens, kings and days of fairy tales.

Instruments were replicas of an earlier age. The cello was held between the legs rather than being balanced on the floor. The violins and viola were shaped differently without chin rests. Strings were not steel, but sheep gut.

After the concert Bourne was relieved, being that it was the first of a three part series at the Mabel Tainter. Bourne said, "This is our first outing. Lots of work went into getting the people together—six years."

Besides hunting for Baroque musicians, period instruments had to be collected. The harpsichord was made to replicate an authentic one now exhibited in the Smithsonian Institute.

La Lyra, composed by Georg Philip Telemann was played by the group. A lyra by the Latin translation is a small harp-like instrument. Conversely, the features of this piece was the sound which imitated a hurdy-gurdy or a lyra in Italian. This hurdy-gurdy was a hand-cranked string instrument used by street musicians to play simple tunes.

This Lyra Baroque orchestra is the only one of its kind in the upper midwest. Only a handful of these orchestras exist in the United States. November 16 and April 6 will be the dates of the next concerts in this Lyra Series.

Soccer Club has successful weekend

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

Victory in a thrilling penalty shoot-out in Eau Claire gave the Stout Soccer Club its second win in two days last Sunday.

After 90 minutes of soccer, the score between Stout and UW-Eau Claire was tied at 3-3. A further 20 minutes of overtime was played with no change in the score. The subsequent penalty shoot-out was won by the Stout team 3-2, its first victory over Eau Claire in four years.

On the previous day Stout had claimed a fine 5-2 win against UW-River Falls. Player Frank Lohrer managed to get on the score sheet, grabbing his first goal in a two-year career.

"I was really psyched for that one and I had a really good game," Lohrer said after the game.

Club President Dan Stoffregen was pleased with Saturday's game. "I was really impressed with the way the team played," Stoffregen said. "We've got some really talented players."

Sunday's game at Eau Claire was set to be the big one. The Eau Claire team has a tough reputation with its well-organized coaching. Stoffregen was really confident that the Stout team could shake them up.

"This is the one we really want!" Stoffregen emphasized before the game.

Stout started the game with powerful penetrations into Eau Claire's penalty area but the final shot was always off-target. Players Eric Saggerstrom and Kevin Sheehan put on some fine displays of ball control and passing in the Stout offense.

It was Eau Claire who scored first against the run of play with a disputed goal.

Goalkeeper Doug Hall was at the center of the controversy after a scramble in the penalty area finished with the ball in the back of the net.

"I was pushed to the ground as I went to the ball. I couldn't do anything about it," Hall claimed. Appeals to the referees were ignored.

This seemed to fire the Stout players up and with player/coach Dan Nelson leading the attack they applied more pressure. It was Nelson who equalized. His first shot being knocked out, he then fired in the rebound from 20 yards out.

> I was really impressed with the way the team played.
> —Dan Stoffregen, Club President

Early into the second half Stout took the lead. Steve Abrahamson made a superb solo run from mid-field and placed the ball beyond the goalkeeper's reach.

Stout kept the pressure on and countered any offensive breaks with some solid defensive play. Sweeper Tom Benson played well throughout the game, a daunting opponent to any offensive player, with his kamikaze headband.

Stoffregen said, "This is the best defense I've seen at Stout for years."

Eau Claire then evened the score once more with what was another controversial goal. Yet again appeals to the referees were ignored.

With only seven minutes of regulation time remaining, Eau Claire scored against a tiring Stout team to make it 3-2. Coach Nelson took the field again and in a climactic final two minutes scored his second goal. The Stout bench was in ecstasy. The game was now in overtime.

Nelson struck again in overtime but it was disallowed for a foul on the Eau Claire goalkeeper. Justice was served with Stout claiming victory in the penalty shoot-out.

"No matter what happens we can leave knowing the game was ours," Nelson said prior to the kicks being taken. Stoffregen was so disappointed with the referees' performances he thought they should be written up.

Not to take away his delight at having secured a victory, Stoffregen said, "I'm really pleased we won. After the way we played we deserved a victory. I have always wanted to beat Eau Claire so this is great."

This weekend the Stout team is taking part in the Octoberfest Tournament at La Crosse. The tournament runs for two days. starting on Saturday morning.

Runners compete against stiff competition at Midwest Collegiate CC Championships

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

Both the UW-Stout men's and women's cross country teams faced stiff competition over the weekend at the Midwest Collegiate Cross Country Championships at UW-Parkside.

In the women's division, UW-Madison won the meet followed by Big Eight rival Iowa State and the University of Iowa took third. Stout women placed 16 out of the 21 schools competing.

Analysis

Team captain Sheila Geere once again led the Stout women by finishing with a time of 19:13, a personal record for her 59 place finish out of a field of 200 runners.

Close behind Geere was Sue Meyer. Meyer returned to her former home course as she competed for Parkside her freshman and sophomore years be- fore transferring to Stout. Meyer finished two places behind Geere with a time of 19:18.

Finishing third for Stout was freshman Liz Lund. Lund's time of 20:04 and 97 place finish beat her personal record by 38 seconds. "Liz's transition to collegiate competition is progressing nicely," Coach Lou Klitzke said. Lund was voted runner of the week for her performance.

Ann Meyer, Stout's fourth runner, came in at a time of 20:23 for 126 place. Meyer had been nursing an injury coming into the race.

Rounding out the team was Leslie Drall at 23:17 (107), Kris Klokow at 23:54 (179) and Karen Schubert at 24:54 (182).

"I was impressed with the entire team's performance but most impressed with Liz Lund's 40 second decrease for a personal record," Captain Sheila Geere said.

The men's team had an off week according to Klitzke, except for Matt Christenson's 8th place finish. Christenson was beaten by only one other NAIA runner.

> I was impressed with the entire team's performance...
> —Shelia Geere, Team Captain

Stout placed 11th out of the 21 men's teams. Other Wisconsin schools competing included UW-Oshkosh taking third, UW-Eau Claire placing eight, UW-Milwaukee 13th, UW-Whitewater 14th and UW-Platteville 15th. Winning the meet was Hillsdale College followed by Indiana State in second place.

Christenson's time of 25:23 was a personal record for him for that course. "Matt's time was only four seconds faster than the next WSUC runner, Jamie Pollard of Oshkosh and at least one minute faster than he's run that course before," Klitzke said.

Stout's number two runner, Todd Zeurlien came in 59 with a time of 26:35. A much improved Eric Bretl ran 40 seconds faster than last week's race with a time of 26:53.

Ben Haney followed Bretl at 27:30, followed by Gary Poppe at 27:35, Mike Bennett at 28:20, Ed Wojdyla at 28:42, Dave Polishinski at 29:02 and Tim Stordahl at 30:11.

The men were without last week's number three runner Bob Hackley who was out due to an injury.

According to team captain Christenson, "Zeurlein had a pretty good race and Bretl is coming around." Christenson said the men's team is looking ahead to tough competiton at the La Crosse meet.

This week both teams travel to Whitewater for the Whitewater Invitational. According to Klitzke both teams are primarily competing in the invitational to see the course as it is the site of the conference meet.

Spikers display improvement in dual and tournament competition

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's volleyball team finished up with another successful week of dual and tournament action. Last Monday they traveled to Green Bay and won one out of two matches. They edged out Green Bay in a three-game match with scores of 7-15, 15-8, and 15-10. Their next opponent was UW-Platteville to which they lost in a two-game match 12-15 and 14-16.

Despite the Blue Devils' one loss to Platteville, the women were confident as they journeyed to UW-Whitewater where they played an intensely close match against the Warhawks, beating them with scores of 12-15, 15-13, and 15-12. The win was what they needed to give them a boost in morale as they played the second round against UW-Stevens Point. They couldn't hold the Pointers, and lost in a brutal match 6-15 and 0-15.

Having faced tough losses before, the Lady Devils stood firm and joined together to face a tough eight-team tournament at Oshkosh last Friday and Saturday.

The Stout spikers placed third after the two-day tournament, rallying over UW-River Falls and Platteville as they strived for the top place finish.

"These two wins were particularly important for us because we had lost to them earlier in the season, and beating them had a special significance to us all," Head Coach Lynda Lee said. "The whole team is responsive of what I ask. Their enthusiasm is consistent, and they take pride in themselves no matter what the outcome of previous games."

One player who shows just how much each member of the team counts is injured hitter Becky Horsman. Horsman refers to herself as the team's "unofficial cheerleader", and her support lends itself well to the team's success. Horsman claims, "The team had ups and downs in this past tournament, but it seems like we can now pull together quicker, and it's easier to keep going." This correlates with Coach Lee's belief that everyone has to help. "A good, strong bench is just as important as the girls out on the floor. It's all those little things put together that make for a solid team."

The Blue Devils have a conference record of 4-6, and a total win record of 8-12 compared to 0-11 at this same time last year. Lee said, "There's always room for improvement, and we're definitely going to get better. We're accelerating now."

The Lady Devils travel to Northfield, Minn. on Saturday to compete in the Carleton Tournament. When asked about the expected outcome of the tournament Lee said, "I expect to place in the top three."

Billy "Bar Brawl" Martin Bites the Dust-New York Yankee manager Billy Martin, 57, was involved in a hotel bar fight last weekend with Yankee pitcher Ed Whitson. Martin suffered a broken arm in the brawl and Whitson's condition was not known as he was ordered to fly home the next day from Baltimore, where the Yankees were playing.

Apparently Martin tried to settle a dispute Whitson was having with another person in the bar shortly after midnight when Whitson became enraged and threw a punch at Martin. After peace was restored Martin and Whitson went at it again in the hotel lobby and then the parking lot.

Yankee owner George Steinbrenner said he has hired a private investigator to look into the Martin-Whitson incidents.

Spinks Ends Holmes' Boxing Career-Michael Spinks made history by defeating heavyweight champion Larry Holmes in 15 rounds by a unanimous decision. Spinks' win marked the first time ever that a light heavyweight fighter had beaten a heavyweight champion.

Spinks, 28-0, sent Holmes into retirement with a 48-1 record. Holmes' defeat left him one victory shy of Rocky Marciano's record 49-0 mark.

Number One Drugstore, Pirate Clubhouse-Apparently prompted by the baseball drug trials in Pittsburgh, someone changed the wording on a city billboard showing an outline of the city's skyline with the wording on top: "The number one city has the number one drugstore." At the bottom of the billboard the words "The Pirate Clubhouse" were pasted over the name of a drug store chain. The drug trials involved the selling of cocaine to major league players.

Stout Searches for Swimmers-Despite the fact that the swimming season is a couple of months away, Head Swimming Coach John Miller is looking for competitive swimmers to improve his team. Last year's men's team placed fourth in the conference meet while the women took third. According to Miller, captain practices have already started and any interested swimmers should contact Miller or a captain immediately for more information.

Free sports admission?

Tom Roth

How would you like to attend all regularly scheduled sporting events free at Stout? That's right, absolutely free. What's the catch? Just one little small surcharge at the beginning of the year.

Oh, another charge on your already overwhelming bill. Well this surcharge would only cost you approximately 50 cents to one dollar extra a semester. This charge would also be refundable if you wish not to pay it, just like your 50 cents United Council Fee.

If you're an avid fan of Stout sports, your support of this proposal would definitely be a big money saver after adding up how much you would spend to go to the majority of the sporting events.

I bet you're saying to yourself right now, "I only go to one or two Stout games a year." But even if you only attend one game a semester you are getting more than your money's worth as student prices run one dollar for most games.

Would the athletic department complain? It doesn't seem very likely as Athletic Director Warren Bowlus would be in favor of a student sports pass. Not only would this guarantee funds for the athletic department year after year, but concession stand sales would most likely rise as well, which would help offset the rising costs of expensive equipment that needs replacing in the fieldhouse and for the athletes.

Still the most important part of the program would not be to raise money, but to promote school spirit.

Dean of Students, Sam Woods sees implementing free admission to sporting events as one less barrier that is holding back an increase in school spirit.

UW-Eau Claire and UW-La Crosse are just two schools in the WSUC who do not charge admission prices at the gate and subsequently these policies have shown larger student attendance than most other conference schools who do charge students at the gate.

Stout Basketball Coach Dwain Mintz recalls years ago when there was no charge for students and Johnson Fieldhouse was packed for basketball games. That was before the enrollment at Stout increased dramatically.

In times where college students are scraping for every dollar they can get, it would only be beneficial for the student body and administration to push for some kind of measure that would enable a larger percentage of the student body to attend sporting events at Stout for a more economical value.

This can be done only with your help, so start today by contacting your SSA Senators and Officers in effort to make the Stout community a better place to live for everyone.

Blugold Trivia

Sports Information Director Jeff Bjork is looking into the history of UW-Eau Claire's mascot name Blugold. Since the Blue Devils play the Blugolds next weekend in football, Bjork would like some help from the students in answering some mysterious questions about this strange thing called a Blugold.

1. WHAT REALLY IS A BLUGOLD?
2. WHAT DOES A BLUGOLD LOOK LIKE?
3. WHAT DOES A BLUGOLD EAT?
4. WHAT DOES A BLUGOLD REPRESENT?
5. HOW DO YOU DESTROY A BLUGOLD?

If you think you know or just have some wild guesses or a sketch of a Blugold give Bjork a call at x-2275 or drop a memo off in the Stoutonia office.

The Quarterback's Picks

Stout at UW-Oshkosh-Things are not looking so rosy these days in Blue Devil country after last week's embarrassing loss to UW-Superior. Oshkosh is also coming off a loss, but gave powerhouse UW-River Falls a good game. Oshkosh by 10.

Green Bay at St. Louis-The Packers woes should continue for another week in St. Louis. St. Louis by 13.

Minnesota Vikings at Buffalo-After a long rest the Vikings should be more than ready to trounce the winless Bills. Vikings by 14.

Oklahoma at Minnesota-The Gophers should get some of their own medicine this week in the Sooners' first game. Oklahoma by 21.

Wisconsin at Wyoming-Despite last week's scare against UNLV, the Badgers should edge Wyoming. Wisconsin by 7.

Maryland at Michigan-The Wolverines are looking good this year. Michigan by 10.

UCLA at Washington-The Huskies have not performed up to their capabilities this year, so you have to go with the Bruins. UCLA by 7.

Auburn at Tennessee-Bo Jackson should help Auburn run over the Volunteers. Auburn by 13.

Netters give impressive showing against tough WSUC opponents

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Playing what UW-Stout Coach Bob Smith called "their best tennis of the year," the Stout women's tennis team edged UW-Oshkosh last Friday 6-3, and Saturday performed well against a talented UW-Whitewater team although losing the match 8-1.

Stout 6, Oshkosh 3

The Stout women netters grabbed the close matches to successfully down an evenly matched Oshkosh team.

At second singles, back to form after a brief illness, Lynn Papenfuss defeated her opponent 6-4, 7-5. Also, in a close contest, Jean Feyen narrowly beat her challenger 6-4, 2-6 and 7-6. Additionally, Kelly Wickman and Tara Stahel notched three-set wins for the women netters.

In doubles action, the duo of Malloy and Papenfuss grabbed a three-set win 6-3, 4-6, 7-5, against a stubborn Oshkosh first doubles team. At second doubles, Feyen and Mary Pokwinski outplayed their challengers 7-5, 6-4.

"We won the close matches," Smith said, "and this was an important factor in scoring the win against a formidable Oshkosh team."

Stout 1, Whitewater 8

Before season play began, Coach Smith was asked the question, "Who will be the Stout women's tennis team's toughest opponent?" "Whitewater," Smith said, and he was right.

Last Saturday, the UW-Whitewater women's tennis team overpowered the Stout women netters 8-1. But the Lady Devils did not go down without a fight.

Mary Malloy, at first singles, lost a close one 6-3, 5-7 and 4-6. So did Lynn Papenfuss, losing to her opponent, 4-6, 6-7. Another three-setter was played by Jean Feyen, who was edged out 6-4, 2-6 and 5-7. Also, the three set jinx was felt by Tara Stahel who lost to her challenger 6-3, 4-6 and 1-6.

The doubles play was highlighted by the newly reinstated dynamic duo of Malloy and Papenfuss, who easily beat their opponents in straight sets 6-2, 6-4. The other Stout doubles teams gave worthy efforts, but came up short, buckling under the talented Whitewater pairings.

"We could have actually won the match had we won the close ones, as we did against Oshkosh," Coach Smith said. But, he was pleased with the team and stated, "The gals played beautifully."

The team posts a 4-3 conference record after the two matches. Additionally, on Parents' Day this weekend, they will host the Blue Devil Quadrangular.

Rain soaks gridders' scoreless effort

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout gridders dropped their conference opener to UW-Superior 16-0 as the Yellowjackets won their first conference game in three years.

According to Head Coach Bob Kamish, "There were too many turnovers and a lack of consistency to have a win."

The game started with Stout kicking to Superior. The Yellowjackets had good field position at their own 36-yard line. Superior moved the ball to the Stout 41. On a third-down-and-two, Superior's running back was stopped by the Stout defense for a loss of a yard and Superior was forced to punt the ball.

After the ball was punted out of bounds, the Blue Devils took over at their own 15-yard line. Stout started with quarterback Glen Majszak running for a three-yard gain. This was followed by a fumble and Superior recovered at Stout's 20-yard line.

The Yellowjacket's offense only moved the ball one yard in three downs to set up a 37-yard field goal for the first score of the game. The kickoff was received by Chuck Carr at the 10-yard line and he returned it 17 yards.

The Stout offense took over. On first down Carr ran for a gain of two. On the next down Majszak made a bad pitch that was recovered by Superior at the Stout 23-yard line.

Superior took the ball to the five-yard line before a 20-yard clipping penalty took them back to the 25-yard line. This set up a 42-yard field goal attempt, but the kick was short.

Stout's next drive started at their 25-yard line, but went nowhere. Rob Lindberg came in to punt and produced a 51-yard kick. Superior moved the ball from their 29-yard line to Stout's 38-yard line, before the Yellowjackets punted the ball out of bounds at Stout's 7-yard line.

Majszak ran on first down for 4 yards. Then he connected for his first pass to receiver Ron Wise. The next play Carr ran the ball for a gain of 19 yards. Majszak lost 10 yards in the next two plays and an incomplete pass ended the first quarter.

Opening the second quarter, Lindberg punted 33 yards and four plays later Superior punted back a 38-yard kick to put the ball on Stout's 42-yard line. The Blue Devil offense failed and Lindberg came into punt agian. This time the punt sailed 33 yards with no return.

The Yellowjackets ran the ball between quarterback Haugo and running back McClellan from their 17 to Stout's 20-yard line. From here Haugo connected on two passes to a Superior receiver to give the Yellowjackets a 10-0 lead as the point after was good.

The kickoff went to Chuck Carr again, this time at the 10-yard line and Carr returned it for 21 yards. Majszak brought the offense down to Superior's 28-yard line before the field goal unit came onto the field. The snap was fumbled as time ran out and no kick was attempted. This gave Superior a 10-0 halftime lead.

The second half turned into a punt exchange as neither offense could gain any yardage on the wet ground. Carr received the second half kickoff and returned it for 23 yards. A face mask penalty gave Stout great field position at Superior's 48. Unable to get a first down Lindberg was called on to punt.

The Yellowjackets moved the ball 17 yards to their 47-yard line. Here the Yellowjackets punted a 33-yarder and the Blue Devils returned it nine yards.

The last quarter saw the ball punted back and forth six times until Stout recovered a fumble at Superior's 46-yard line. Then, two plays later, Majszak threw an interception giving the ball back to Superior at their 46-yard line. This time the Yellowjackets ran the ball into the end zone for another six, but the point after was missed to put the final score at 16-0.

Stout's offense struggled through the entire contest. The best plays for Stout came on the kick returns where Carr did a consistently good job for the gridders. The defense was led by defensive Captain Keith Jurek with eight solo tackles and four assists. Scott Romenesko had seven solo tackles, three assists and three tipped passes.

The Blue Devils will have a difficult time with UW-Oshkosh this Saturday night in Oshkosh. The front line will have to open up some running room so Stout can gain more than the 51 total yards rushing they gained against Superior.

Stout will need to work on fundamentals and correcting mistakes made in the game against Superior if they are going to defeat the Titans.

Chlamydia cases worth taking seriously

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Syphilis, gonorrhea, herpes. Almost everyone knows these diseases are spread through intimate sexual contact. Ironically, the most widespread sexually transmitted disease (STD) today is a little-known bacterial disease.

This disease, chlamydia trachomatis, is a bacterium named for the Greek word "chlamys," to cloak. Nicknamed the silent disease, it has long been associated with being the cause of trachoma, an eye disease common in developing nations. It is almost always transmitted by sexual contact, but it is possible for a mother to pass it on to her child during childbirth. This can cause an eye infection called conjunctivitis and also pneumonia.

It is estimated that of 155,000 infants born to women with chlamydia each year, 75,000 develop conjunctivitis and 30,000 get pneumonia. Spontaneous abortion and stillbirth rates are much higher in women with chlamydia during pregnancy. Research indicates that individuals ages 15-24 run the greatest risk of contracting the disease, though it is possible for anyone to contract the disease.

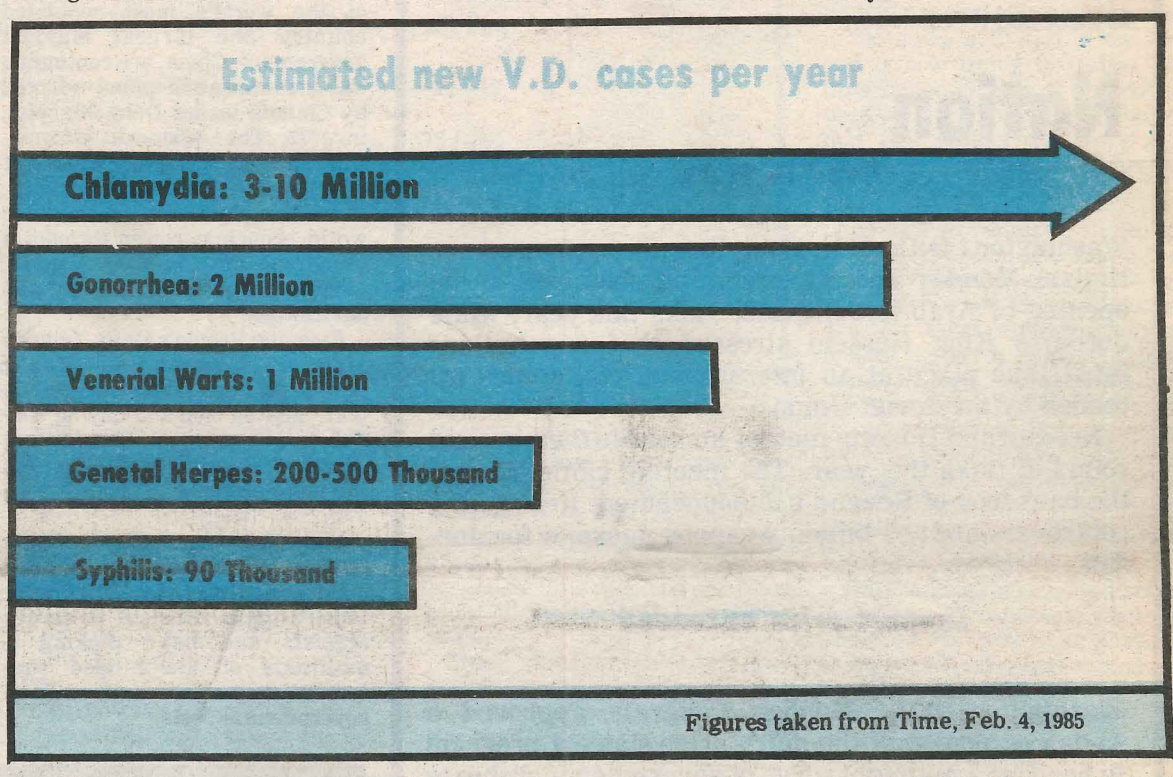
Symptoms of a chlamydia infection can include a discharge and or irritation or discomfort. Males may experience a mild burning sensation when urinating, and a thin, opaque discharge. If untreated, it can lead to epididymis, an inflamation of the testicles that can cause sterility. Each year chlamydia causes more than half the cases of epididymis in United States.

In females, symptoms include vaginal discharge and lower abdominal pain. However, they may have no sign of infection. Individuals without symptoms can be infected and, unknowingly, transmit it to a sexual partner. The consequences are more severe in females. The disease most often starts as an infection of the cervix. If untreated it can spread through the uterus to the fallopian tubes. This condition, known as salpingitis, may block the tubes with scar tissue, which can cause infertility and increase danger of tubal pregnancies.

According to Ann Langmack, R.N., from the Stout Student Health Center, chlamydia is treated by one of two antibiotics, tetracycline and erythromycin. Tetracycline can be taken by males, and by females who are not using an oral contraceptive. Erythromycin is prescribed for those on oral contraceptives because tetracycline may reduce the effectiveness of the pill. The cure is not permanent however. Langmack stresses that it is possible to recontract the disease again through sexual relations with an infected person or persons.

Detection of the disease requires a test that is not part of a standard checkup. Consideration should be given to a routine screening at the same time a Pap smear is done. It is recommended that sexually active females who are in the reproductive age group be screened once a year.

Though the problem may seem distant to Stout, last February, a sampling of the student population showed that 26 percent of the students were found positive for chlamydia.



Students learn time management skills

Imagine That!

If you would, imagine UW-Stout Marketing Education students, Menomonie High School Marketing students and Thunderbird Mall Merchants working together.

Imagine Stout students getting real-world pre-clinical teaching experiences.

Imagine the Stout and high school students opening a store for 10 days in the Thunderbird Mall on a zero-budget.

Imagine the students selling hundreds of dollars of merchandise just for the learning experience that they will gain.

Imagine these students working only to develop their marketing and retailing skills.

If you can imagine all of these factors, you now have the basic background of the Thunderbird Mall's Model Store-Imagine That!.

Imagine That is a marketing simulation which starts in the classroom and ends in a real-life marketing situation.

Marketing Education students enrolled in Project Method/Model Store Simulation at Stout begin this process by examining the various types of model stores used in the Marketing Education programs throughout the United States. The Stout students eventually decide which of these stores are the most successful and pinpoint the reasons for their success.

High school Marketing students are required to participate in one type of out-of-class instruction. Model Store is one of these alternatives.

These Stout students attend classes for five weeks receiving the fundamentals of Model Stores. At the end of the fifth week, these students are broken up into one of four groups: finance, personnel, promotion or sales. Which group these students work in is determined by their career interest and their retail work background.

After this basic introduction is complete, the Stout students travel to Menomonie High School to teach for three days. The Stout students now become teachers and their students are MHS juniors enrolled in Marketing Education. Each of the four groups send representatives to teach these juniors the basic skills they will need to perform duties in their work area.

> "It gives us a chance to experience being in a management position and opening a retail store"
> —Amy Swim, junior

Once the high school students have been instructed on store procedures and their basic responsibilities are explained, the next step is to continue instruction at the Model Store-Imagine That!.

Once at the Model Store, the Stout students, now called Stout managers, are responsible for making sure work deadlines are met and the entire process stays on track.

Since the majority of the Stout managers are upper-classmen and have had many of the marketing-related courses at Stout, it is their responsibility to teach the high school students how to do certain tasks, rather than to do the tasks themselves. For example, instead of a Stout manager building a display, he would teach the students how to build displays and let them build in-store displays with their newly acquired skills.

As the famous saying goes, "Give a man a fish and he will eat for a day. Teach a man to fish and he will eat for a lifetime."

The Model Store not only gives the high school students practical retail experience, it gives them a chance to practice the theories they have learned in their high school Marketing Education classes.

Stout students also benefit from the Model Store. Dean Tabor, instructor of the Model Store class at Stout said, "This is an excellent pre-clinical, hands-on student teaching experience for the Stout managers. The Model Store helps not only to learn in theory an alternative method of instruction in Marketing Education, but it also gives them a chance to apply while learning."

Amy Swim, a junior at Stout said, "It gives us a chance to experience being in a management position and opening a retail store. The Model Store gave us a chance to work with high school students and get to know Menomonie better."

Swim and the other students enrolled in Model Store did get an d'Aubuisson steps down

San Salvador, El Salvador- Roberto d'Aubuisson, the standard-bearer of El Salvador's militant and often violent right, stepped down Sunday as the head of his party, the National Republican Alliance.

d'Aubuissen's resignation is widely believed to be tacit recognition that he has outlived his usefulness and has become a liability to his backers, who include important sectors of the country's military, businessmen and landowners. Alfredo Cristiani, a 37-year-old coffee producer was unanimously chosen to succeed d'Aubisson.

Hope in talks

Washington, D.C.- President Reagan expressed optimism Monday about overcoming obstacles to the opening of Arab-Israeli peace talks this year, while Jordan's King Hussein stressed that negotiations must take place at an international conference attended by the Soviet Union.

Reagan and Hussein met for an hour in their second round of talks this year. The meeting came against the backdrop of Reagan's announcement Friday of a controversial $1.55 billion weapons package for Jordan.

Support price extended

Washington D.C.- Monday Congress approved a 45-day extension of the dairy price support program to head off a midnight surge of government purchases of surplus butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk.

The extension was needed because the law that sets the support price at $11.60 per 100 pounds of milk was to expire at midnight, the end of the 1985 fiscal year.

Jet part unveiled

Milwaukee- A metal part from an engine of Midwest Express flight 105 that was found over the weekend is highly significant because the part, called a spacer, has a history of breaking in other Pratt and Whitney jet engines, according to a federal safety official.

The 20-inch piece of spacer, which was twisted into a J-shape, came from the right engine of the DC-9 that crashed on take-off from Mitchell Field on Sept. 6, killing 31 people.

Pay veto questioned

Madison- Gov. Anthony Earl's veto of a provision in last spring's comparable worth legislation that would have frozen the pay of overpaid State employees will likely be overridden by the Assembly, according to comparable worth opponents such as the Wisconsin Association of Manufacturers and Business.

Vetoing a freeze on overpaid worker's pay was one of three changes Earl made in the comparable worth legislation before signing it into law in July.

Perspective

China's "second revolution"

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

The over one billion inhabitants of the world's most populated country and largest Marxist government, China, are continuing the modernization plans adopted by Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping in 1977. The economic reforms, which are encouraging a degree of capitalistic entrepreneurship, strive to make China a formidable world economic power through a reshaping of Chinese defense, technology, science, industry and agriculture.

Even the People's Daily, China's official Communist Party newspaper, has taken the position that "getting rich and buying consumer goods is not decadent—especially if it makes life more pleasant."

And to insure that today's reforms will not be reversed after his death, Deng has been purging China's upper echelons of career Maoists and hand picking a multitude of like-minded successors for various high ranking governmental posts.

In addition to the economic reforms spreading throughout the country, restrictions are also being eased, to a lesser degree, in the areas of political, social and cultural freedom. One such example is the planned introduction of compulsory education throughout China, as opposed to basic education now offered only to those who reside in the cities.

Although this educational initiative would be coordinated by the Ministry of Education, private schools would also be encouraged to fluorish.

Deng believes that "if a huge nation with one billion people could boost its education, its tremendous superiority in human resources would never be matched by any other country."

In the area of defense, General Secretary Hu Yaobang announced in April that twenty-five percent of the four million men in China's armed forces would be discharged by the end of 1986 in order to make it a more modern and efficient fighting force.

In the political arena, the freedom of speech is allowed to a degree and eight non-communist parties are allowed to operate. And one of them, the Chinese Democratic League, has been granted the right to publish a monthly magazine titled Opinion of the Masses.

Western fashions, rock music, fast-food restaurants, golf courses, ski slopes, hotels and racetracks are also becoming realities in what many have coined "China's second revolution."

Yet at this early stage of modernization problems have already begun to appear. The People's Daily has reported that appproximately fifty percent of the collective businesses on the state and local level have been cheating on their taxes and not forwarding the required percentag- of profits to the central government.

And old Maoists, many of whom still wield considerable power, are wary of China's anti-socialist direction.

Self growth class charts time usage

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

The students enrolled in the Seminar on Self Growth (212-535) course taught by Gregory Brock, Ph.D. in the School of Home Economics, have recently studied how Stout students, on the average, spend their time. The most time spent (other than the 8.13 hours/per day spent on sleep) was spent in class (2.37/day) and studying (2.2/day). Only .93/day was spent in the bars.

The students were instructed by Dr. Brock (who also participated in the project) to keep an accurate record of every 15 minute interval, six days a week for two weeks. They then totalled their hours spent in various areas and combined them to create an average. The students were also told to rate their activities on points ranging from 1-5. Those receiving the most points were their highest priorities, and as simplified by Dr. Brock, were usually the areas in which they spent the most time.

The class consists mainly of juniors and seniors with ages starting at 19 and going to 41. The members all contributed their total time spent in each of the activities listed below and the averages were calculated. Most calculations were based on a six-day week with the exception of a 5-day week for classes. Below are the averages for two weeks all listed in hours:

Student Activities - Two Week Average

Activity	Hours/Day
Sleep	8.13/day
Class	2.37/day
Study	2.20/day
Socializing	1.39/day
Television	1.08/day
Work	.95/day
Bar/Party	.93/day
Hygiene	.83/day

	Class High	Class Low	Average
•Sleep:	127	73	8.13/day
•Class:	45	9	2.37/day
•Study:	52.25	10	2.20/day
•Socializing:	37	5	1.39/day
•Television:	26	2	1.08/day
•Work:	43	0	.95/day

Although this was a tedious task for the students, most felt that the outcome was significant. Although the students did not want their names mentioned, they had many comments to contribute. "This assignment made me realize how I wasted my time," said one student. Another student felt "depressed and disgusted at how I spent my time." Most participants agreed that they were not spending enough time on the things that they considered high priorities and most felt they watched too much television. Some even argued that they did not have enough time for themselves or to socialize.

According to Dr. Brock, the first step in this courses' section relating to time management is the analysis of how time is spent during the two-week period. The second step is the analysis of each individual's life goals, and finally the students are encouraged to reallocate time spending once they have discovered their priority goals.

Most students have already began to reallocate their time after seeing how their time was spent. For example, one student is revising her use of time in the following manner: "I'm not socializing as much and am spending more time in the library." Dr. Brock, as a result of this experiment, makes better use of his time by using the fifteen-minute intervals that may not have been utilized previously.

Julie Weiss, a junior at Stout found that she had been spending too much time in meetings as she is involved in SSA and in Hall Council. She realizes that she needs to spend more time on studying and on her social life. She also discovered that she was involved in too many activities in one day and is now trying to budget her time better so that she is not so tired at the end of the day. She felt that this project was very successful and will result in an improved allocation of time.

Junior Bob White is a student on the football team. He found that the most productive part of his day was prior to 6:00 p.m. Football practice takes approximately 22 hours a week which allows minimal time for studying. He discovered many things that could be reallocated to better use his time. He found that he could sleep less and still be well rested. He has already begun going to the library several times a week and has seen the results in his school work.

The challenge of keeping track of one's hours for two weeks would be profitable for most Stout students as we would better understand the ways we can improve our less-desirable habits and make our days more productive.

New Menomonie library kicked-off with all day Read-a-thon Friday

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Contruction of Menomonie's new public library will begin within two weeks. Ground breaking ceremonies will be Saturday morning.

The announcement was made Tuesday by the Municipal Library Board when they awarded contracts for construction totaling $960,490 to Dell Construction Co., Inc. of Eau Claire.

The bids between the top two firms were only $910 apart although only three companies entered the bidding. Board President Charles Buelow was pleased by the competitiveness between the two lowest bidders. He believed the board achieved their desired goal as he said, "The library board has about $1,145,000 available for the project. We were looking at a base bid under $1 million to get this project moving forward." The balance of the budget, Buelow said, would provide for architect fees, landscaping and furnishings.

The next big step involving the new library will be a 24-hour Read-a-Thon at the lake bank site starting 10 a.m. Friday Oct. 4 and culminating in the ground breaking ceremonies 10 a.m. Saturday.

Kathy Phillips, a member of the Municipal Library Board and chair of the Read-a-Thon committee, said a tent will be erected on the site for the Read-a-Thon. "We expect several hundred participants in the Read-a-Thon," Phillips said. "It's a unique event, truly a tribute to books and libraries."

> "Readers are requested to bring a book, magazine article, newspaper or work of their own creation."
> Chuck Buelow, Library Board

Commenting on the importance of reading, Buelow said, "We're living in an electronic age where books are being continually downgraded to the point that illiteracy is a growing concern in our country today."

The International Relations Club at UW-Stout will participate in the Read-a-Thon. "We expect to have books written in more than 30 different languages read at the event," Phillips said. The library board continues inviting participants to join the Read-a-Thon although Buelow said last week that, "The response to our appeal for readers has been very encouraging." Phillips said that, "Readers are requested to bring a book, magazine article, newspaper, or a work of their own creation." No registration is required. Readers are expected to read for a period of one to 15 minutes in length. Participants will receive a commemorative button recognizing their efforts.

Elementary school librarian in Menomonie Esther Buckley said, "We are hopeful that those who participate will read from some recorded material that has influenced their lives." Buckley organized the reading to be done by student representatives of every school in Dunn County from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday.

Among the more notable readers will be Glen Schuknecht, president of the Menomonie City Council, who will quote the Essays of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Robert Melrose, a professor of history and political science at Stout, who will recite Alice Miller's poem, The White Cliffs of Dover.

DON'T JUDGE A BOOK BY IT'S COVER—

Editorial

Lack of parking as serious as lack of desks

One of the most disappointing situations facing Stout students today is not the prospect of starting school after Labor Day next Fall, the steadily deteriorating weather, uncertainty surrounding evaluation week or the recent increase in the federal liquor tax.

A majority of the negative remarks made by students this past week have been a direct reflection of their feelings toward the obvious lack of campus parking.

The amount of available parking at the beginning of this semester, although far from satisfactory, was tolerable. But recent changes in those areas previously designated for parking have adversely affected commutors and off-campus students alike.

Those who have the position and/or wherewithall to secure a spot in a color-coded parking lot have some degree of assurance that their mode of transportation will have a "home" for the day. Yet because more permits are distributed than the number of available spots, there still exists day-to-day anxiety as to whether a paid permit will actually yield a parking spot upon arriving on campus each day.

All those remaining, who must fend for themselves, make the prototypical "mad rush" for the metered and unmetered spots which remain.

But these parking spots have been reduced dramatically this past week as evidenced by the yards of curbing which have been painted yellow and the multitude of signs which have been changed.

If the cliche "a chain is only as strong as its weakest link" applies to the availibility of basic campus services, then the parking dilemma might lead us to believe that the services overall have reached a status beyond improvement.

The same zeal that moves us to work toward improving the buildings on campus could yield a solution to the parking shortage if the problem was recognized as such, addressed, and received the manpower it deserves.

As University enrollment increases while the capacity of the residence halls remains static, the problem can only become worse if not confronted.

If we do not get the monkey off our back it could conceivably find a permanent home.

Crash and Burn

Toasting the stork

Matt Kalina

Among the first birthday celebrations documented was in Egypt when a Pharaoh, who was mentioned in the Bible, made a great feast for his servants.

In the ancient world of Rome, the birthdays of Artemis and Apollo (May 24 and 25) were commenced with parades, circuses and chariot races.

I celebrated my 21st birthday two weeks ago without a feast for my servants or a circus or even a chariot race. I celebrated it in the typical unruly Stout technique.

At Stout an anniversary of birth is commonly celebrated by a trip barraging from bar to bar uptown.

For some people, the ultimate celebration is to collect shots and kisses on their big day. Yes, I agree; it is a bizarre combination. For many people, the search for kisses can be justified. That's explainable. Its a cheap excuse to osculate dazzling Stout women. That definitely provides some thrills. But not to be even slightly sexist, the women on their birthdays, hunt down and smooch guys. But when did free birthday shots from the bars become a tradition? No one seems to know. It's supposedly just one of those anonymous rituals.

I spoke with various bartenders recently to see what the unwritten policies were provided for birthday shots on the house.

At Nel's Inn, a birthday boy or girl must buy one shot and get they will get the second one free.

Although it is not encouraged at the Spot, it is up to the discretion of the bartender to determine if shots are to be given out free. Usually if it is observed that they will just stay for the free shot and then leave, they won't be given any.

At the Log Jam it is a similar situation, with the jurisdiction left to the individual bartender. Usually free shots are only given to regulars.

It's a virtual free for all at the Flame and the Den. With proof of age a celebrant can get a free shot of any bar rail liquor.

Things get a tad rugged at the Meet Market. The poison is straight Yukon to anyone who has a valid I.D. and insensitive digestive organs.

At the Marion it depends upon the whims of the bartender. The shot is commonly watermelon.

The Tap actually features a choice of what the birthday partier wants to drink, any shot or a beer.

The Buck offers any drink within reason.

According to several laws of the land, I am a legal adult now, being 21. Let's see. I now can see any movie, smoke, drive, marry, gamble, vote and be a soldier.

After reaching the absolute legal adult age, after finally hurdling all of the major behavorial restrictions, it doesn't seem like I have anything to look forward to gaining, concerning rights and my age. I can breath a sigh of relief that I have finally made it, but I also breath a sigh of disillusionment that where do I go now?

It has been said that birthdays are only mileposts of mortality, a grim reminder that there are more years behind us and fewer to live ahead of us.

Sounds rather depressing?

For some individuals aging can be traumatic. But if you sit back and evaluate the kind of life that you've lived, it shouldn't be completely distressing, at least you can celebrate.

To celebrate a birthday by racing chariots or just by going out and kicking it up at the uptown scene is a way of telling people that you are glad you were born because you are commemorating the day you arrived into Planet Earth.

If you can come up with reasons on how you improved the world, and truly discover that you made some kind of a difference, no matter how petty, then there shouldn't be any remorse.

But for those that re-assess their lives and cannot find any ways that they have improved the world that they live in, even insignificantly, then they deserve to be miserable.

My final word — New Fieldhouse, same old sports

Rich Langberg

A memo from Madison came across the news desk last week that caught my eye. It said that the state Building Commission had approved Stout's new fieldhouse and passed it on for approval by the Legislature. Now that it looks like there is definitely going to be a new facility, maybe a few suggestions are in order for what should go on inside the building.

To me, there is one thing about the current gym that stands out. No, it's not the rickety, old bleachers. It isn't the track that is laughed at by the other universities and even members of Stout's athletic department. It is the lone national championship banner, won by the 1983 men's gymnastic team.

It doesn't really mean that much to me that it is the only national championship won by a Stout team. It is the fact that there no longer is even a men's gymnastic team in existence here at Stout. The team was disbanded right after the championship season due in part to a lack of money.

It is understandable, in one way, to drop the sport, because there were only a few athletes affected by the money. In football, the squad is a lot larger, and the dollar supposedly benefits more students.

But what about the quality return on that dollar? Sure there were only a handful of athletes on that gymnastics team, but it was a winning team. Now, I'm not saying that if the football team doesn't win more often the sport should be dropped. I'm saying that smaller teams and supposedly lesser sports shouldn't be relegated to the back burner.

This year looks to be one in which those "smaller" sports will probably shine. The baseball team, which last year was the youngest in the WSUC, has to be considered one of the favorites to take the title this year. Coach Terry Petrie's team started not a single senior in posting a 25-21 reord and a second-place finish in the Northern Division of the WSUC.

The sport that may bring national attention to Stout in 1985 is swimming. In the four years since the program was reinstated, Coach John Miller has made the Blue Devil swimmers a power to be reckoned with. They had two individual champions last year, and pose a serious threat to UW-Eau Claire's stranglehold on the WSUC swimming title.

In the "major" sports, basketball seems to be back on the winning track after 10 years with no playoff appearances. The football team, however, seems to be light years away from any playoff opportunity. UW-Superior hadn't won a conference game in 16 previous tries and hadn't shut out an opponent since 1973 until they ran through the Devils.

However, that still isn't any reason to drop the sport completely and deprive so many guys of the chance to play the game they love. Lots of teams lose more then they win, Stout isn't alone in that respect. But when a sport is dropped after winning the national title due in part to a lack of money, and no funds are cut from a team that is 6-22 in its last 28 games, maybe something should be done.

What should be done to improve the football team and not use any more cash? It doesn't take any more money to replace the head coach. Isn't that the usual course of action when a team fails to win consistently? Last year, when the Stoutonia suggested that Coach Kamish be replaced, the athletic department was a little more then miffed.

It is obvious that the football program isn't going to be dropped here at Stout, and depressingly, it is also obvious that winning football seems to be over the distant horizon. But football has a much better chance of turning in a winning season then does men's gymnastics. At least it is still around to try.

Letters to the editor

Heartwarming help

Among the stories of rape, concern about armed guards, and senseless vandalism I have a happier story to tell. On a cold rainy night I found I could not locate the lot where I had parked my car. I had been searching for copies of the Stoutonia which had mentioned me in an article.

Cold and wet I wandered into the Student Union. I looked into a room where there were several girls. They asked could they help me. So I explained my problem. One of the girls said I probably walked out a wrong door. She said "I think I know where your car is. I will go with you." The best part was she knew exactly where to go—so I found my car.

I was impressed by her willingness to go out in a cold rainy night to help a fellow human. All I know about her is that she is from the Minneapolis-St.Paul area. I asked if her feet were getting wet, she said "just a little". When I offered to get her a Coke or a cup of coffee, she replied "I am fine and don't need anything".

This girl is a fine example of the good kids we have in our midst. Unselfish and willing to go out of her way to help. We are, through the media, bombarded with violence, crudeness and senseless goings on.

I found this to be a heartwarming and refreshing experience.

Neighborhood compromise

The guest editorial that appeared in last week's Stoutonia by Don Dickmann concerning reasons for the enactment of local laws was certainly well intended but I find it myopic and idealistic. My reasons for making this statement I will now list point by point.

You contradict yourself, Mr. Dickmann, when you say that the city council does not legislate against students—yet the reason you cited for enacting the noise ordinance was because the STUDENTS were having noisy booze parties. You say that these parties were often accompanied by vandalism etc., which gets me steamed because you permanent residents have children that do their share of vandalism, yet Stout students get all the blame.

You say that your noise ordinance is not vague. I suggest that you ask a lawyer about this like I did before you make such an ignorant statement. It is extremely vague, and if Eau Claire does indeed have a similarly worded ordinance that does not make it any less vague. Milwaukee has a noise ordinance that has specific language and terms defined as its first page that does not leave the police the discretion to give or not give out a citation based upon whatever they feel like at the time. It specifies time periods and decibel levels that are measured INSIDE the complainer's bedroom where that person is supposedly losing sleep due to excessive noise.

Menomonie's section IV-(3) states, "No person owning, occupying or having charge of any public building, place or premises, or any part thereof, shall cause, suffer, or allow any radio, phonograph or other mechanical or electrical sound making device, instrument or machine to be operated upon such premises, or any part thereof, between the hours of one o'clock (1:00) and seven o'clock (7:00) A.M." Theoretically, the "machine" referred to could be a refrigerator in a bar—since they are not silent they could be considered a "sound making device". The police could issue citations daily to every business in town that had their refrigerators ON between 1:00 and 7:00 A.M.!

If YOU, Mr. Dickmann, happen to live in an apartment above a public place YOU could be cited for just having your clock radio on! Who gave the city the power to tell you or I what we can or cannot have plugged in our own damn homes? Not all of us are lawyers that can manipulate words of the city council like this and reinterpret them after doing so. All the verbatim jargon simply clouds the bottom line—this law is simply unfair, vague, and applied mainly to people who are only trying to have a good time.

I don't want to be awakened by any noise, be it from the 7:00 A.M. road crew that screws around our house or from your lawnmower. I don't want to wake anyone either. If YOU, had your radio on too loud, I would nicely ask YOU to turn it down instead of calling the Gestapo right away.

The trouble with this law is that it turns people that live close to each other into enemies instead of neighbors. The police will not tell who complained about the noise, so supposedly reasonable people can't get together to work out something mutually acceptable. If my neighbor won't communicate with me, I have no way of knowing that he considers 3.0 on my stereo's volume reasonable and 3.4 to be unreasonable! There is no malice intended on my part, yet the fine I suffer when he complains is greater than the one I would receive if I drove across his lawn and threw a rock through his window! How can you or anyone else try to tell me that the way this law is written and implemented is not nonsense? You say that, "if the shoe fits, put it on." Well, it does not fit me because it is your shoe and quite frankly, I think it really stinks.

CAMPUS SLANT/ Is the Blue Devil appropriate or should it be replaced?

It's kind of ridiculous to change it. I think it should be kept the standard.

Tom (Tiny) Koleske,
Senior,

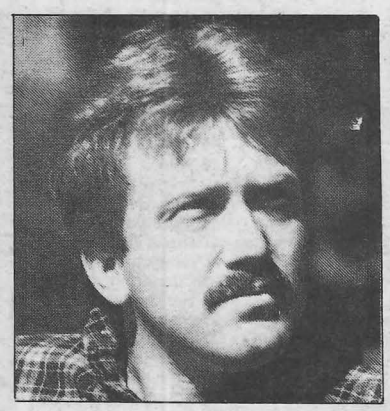
I think it should be kept the way it is. It's been the Blue Devil for so long that I like it that way. I've been here for five years and it's been the Devil since I've got here.

Karen Rolph,
Senior,
Food Service

I don't like the Blue Devils myself and I think that the Stout Senators are definitely out. The Blue Devil doesn't seem to get a lot of publicity. It's not real well known, so what can you do about a Blue Devil. When you say Blue Devil it doesn't really symbolize anything in your mind. You just don't get any mental image.



Bob Pischke,

It's been this way for so long I think it should stay that way. I'm not offended in the least, in fact, I kind of like it. It's different. I'm pretty happy with the one they have now.

I never thought of it as representing anything bad. I'm not offended by it at all. I think it's a good symbol.

Professional Career Conference may mean jobs, contacts for many

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Are you undecided about your major? Or are you searching for that area of your field you feel comfortable in? Or perhaps even beginning the search for a full-time job? Then plan to attend the Professional Career Conference!

This year, on October 9th and 10th, the seventh annual Professional Career Conference will be held in the Memorial Student Center. The conference will be held in both the Crystal Ballroom and the Great Hall. October 9th will be Business and Industry Day and October 10th will be Hospitality Day. Over 135 companies will be present, with over 350 different company recruiters, of which approximately 150 are UW-Stout Alumni. The conference, which is free and open to everyone, will be held between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. each day.

The conference is sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Services and is put on by students. The backbone of the project consists of Jeff Bzdwaka, the conference coordinator, Jim Eidman, Cliff Gonyer, Kim Rishovd, Andy Schmidt, Stacey Stener and Norma Waldoch. These seven have been working since last March making the initial contacts with companies, reaffirming the commitments, and making the final arrangements with the companies.

Stout's conference, now in its seventh year, has grown from a one-day conference with 30-35 companies into a two-day conference with nearly 140 companies represented. Bzdawka said, "This conference is the largest in Wisconsin and one of the largest in the United States." Robert Dahlke, the director of Career Planning and Placement Services, noted, "This is the largest hospitality conference in the United States."

According to Dahlke, the conference has something to offer all students. Freshmen, sophomores, and juniors should be able to find help in "solidifying their career plans" and answers to "What classes should I be taking?, What extracurricular activities should I be in? and others." He also said, "This gives freshmen and sophomores the chance to develop a human relationship with the company — a relationship which may mean a job for them later on."

Dahlke felt the conference would be more of a job fair to the seniors and graduate students. He said, "They (the seniors and graduate students) should look like a person who is ready to be interviewed. It would help their chances of getting a job if they came dressed professionally and expecting an impromptu interview."

Bzdwaka shared many of the same views. He said, "Freshmen can develop a feel for the companies and a better understanding of their area. Sophomores and juniors should be looking for job co-ops and internships. Seniors should be looking at this as a job fair. This is the only time of the year a student has the chance to meet with so many recruiters and learn so much about the companies."

Dahlke stressed that the conference is free of charge and absolutely no registration is required. He also stressed that no dress code was required, but that seniors are advised to wear professional attire. Students of any major are able to attend on either day.

Dahlke said, "This is an experience that will take a minimal amount of time and it is one of the most valuable college experiences a student can have. The real loser is the student who doesn't push themselves to go and meet as many people as they possibly can. It's up to the students to take this opportunity and make it happen!"

Dear Patty,

It's October and our house is already freezing. It's an older home and there's very little, if any insulation. In order to save some money, my roommates and I have all agreed not to turn the heat on until November. The most frustrating point is that we know when we do turn it on, it will all seep through the windows, walls and roof.

Signed, Seeping and Weeping

Dear Seeping and Weeping,

The truth is you're one in many that will be faced with outrageous heating bills this winter.

Northern States Power (NSP) has an excellent weatherization assistance program. Many student renters took advantage of this program last year and were very satisfied with the results.

Here's how it works:

The program is designed for NSP customers currently heating with gas or electricity, or who have electric water heating.

Who qualifies?

Single family home owners, renters and owners. Occupied rental property with one to four units will qualify for W.E.A. If the family annual gross income is no more than 150 percent of the current federally established poverty level. Other rental property owners will be eligible if 50 percent or more of the tenants are at or below 150 percent of the poverty level.

How much is available?

Renters are elibible for a grant up to $300 to seal the areas in their apartment where energy is being wasted. Owners of other rental property are eligible for low or no interest loans or subsidies of 25 percent of the cost of weatherization measures up to $5,000, with a maximum subsidy from NSP of $1,250. Additional money and provisions are available in special cases.

How to apply

The first step to apply for the program is to call NSP or stop by the SSA Office and pick up your application form. Next, have a free NSP energy analysis of your property. The analysis will determine what type of weatherization needs to be done. An NSP energy expert can show you how to do the work yourself, or can recommend state approved suppliers and contractors to do the work for you.

Conference builds confidence

Barb Caron
News Reporter

While most Stout students headed to LaCrosse for Octoberfest last weekend, sixty members of Inter-Residence Hall Council (IRHC) headed to the Eau Claire Youth Camp for their annual leadership conference. IRHC is the legislative body which governs students living in the residence hall community here at UW-Stout. Those who attended the leadership conference included IRHC executive board members, hall officers, hall council members and students-at-large who were interested in bettering their leadership skills.

The conference offered many activities and workshops on how to improve leadership qualities. Betty Klotz, Hall Director of Fleming Hall offered a workshop entitled Developing Self Confidence. This workshop explored the concept of self confidence and how it relates to self motivation.

Dr. Leslie Koepke offered a workshop on improving your "51 percent" skill. This workshop helped participants identify their communication style, examine common communication problems, and apply new information to improve their "51 percent" skill.

Cindy Lapidakis, sophomore in Industrial Technology/Graphic Arts Communication explained, "On the road to communication it takes two to communicate so each person is giving 50 percent, but when you think of someone as a leader, they're initiating communication or keeping it going, therefore they're giving an extra 1 percent, thus the '51 percent' skill."

Other workshops offered were on subjects such as time management, motivation, programming for the future, and burnout.

Lapidakis commented that the workshop on burnout conducted by Antrim-Froggat Hall Director Jackie Jensen was especially effective.

"The session dealt with leaders getting too involved and not having enough time for themselves or their friends. We also discussed the 'Menomonie is so boring' type of burnout that many students experience. There are things to do here at Stout if you have the right frame of mind and attitude to take advantage of all the programs and activities sponsored by UPB and SSA," Lapidakis said.

One of the most challenging aspects of the weekend was the Ropes Confidence Course. The course made participants go through a series of physical and psychological stresses. This experience provided the participants the opportunity to assess how they handle stress in their own lives and how to deal with risk situtations.

Andrea Reedy, sophomore in Clothing Textile Design and Wigen Hall President said, "In the course you learn to rely on support from others in your group. You experience a variety of emotions throughout the course such as trust, fear of injury, and a desire to quit, just to name a few. You also learn to aquire trust and assurance from others."

Lapidakis added "the Ropes Confidence Course was an experience I'll never forget. It was scary, but at the same time challenging. You had a real feeling of relief when you were finished."

When asked what one of the major things was that she learned at the conference Lapidakis said, "to be patient with people and understand that everyone has different needs and priorities and to be an effective leader you have to work around all of that."

Both Lapidakis and Reedy agreed that the weekend was a successful one for all who attended and encouraged those who didn't attend to plan on going to a leadership conference when one is offered in the future.

New concentration boasts Tech program

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

Remember the old Snack Bar? Would you believe that by Christmas next year, it will be a communication systems laboratory?

Communication systems is a new concentration in the applied technology bachelor of science degree program.

This concentration "is a new road for Stout," according to its coordinator, Robert Hendricks. "Engineers are getting more theoretical, managers have to manage. This concentration is for the man in the middle — the troubleshooter."

Applied Technology Program Director Larry Schneider agreed. "There is a need for not a superficial understanding, but a rigorous understanding of telecommunication (systems): telephones, computers, computer security, electronic mail, and electronic banking, to name a few. Today there are many specialists in (each) of those; however, most companies deal with all those systems on a regular basis and are expressing an interest in college graduates with ability in (all) of them."

The new communication systems area will aid in training these graduates with the inclusion of a halograpy lab (a halograph is a three-dimensional image; a photograph is a two-dimensional image), a student research lab, an open lab (flexible work space that can be used for a variety of purposes), personal computers, and hopefully a scaled-down PBX system.

Hendricks and Schneider stated that the remodeling of the old Student Center was proceeding smoothly and on schedule. Both men were optimistic about the possibility of several companies donating equipment for the new communication systems lab. In fact, AT&T executives met with the School of Industry and Technology department heads for the third time during the week of September 15th to discuss that very topic.

"We are exploring a possible relationship with AT&T for equipment, training, and demonstration," said Hendricks. "They seem positive."

Schneider stated, "We actively pursue companies, invite them to take a look, and tell them where we intend to go with it. AT&T seems supportive, Northwestern Bell has already donated several excellent videotapes and assisted with curriculum development, and 3M is also very excited about our program."

A retired 3M executive, Robert Herr (formerly director of communications for 3M and now a consultant to many companies) is so enthusiastic about the new communications systems concentration that he donates his time to contact companies about it.

There appears to be good reason for industry to be excited and enthusiastic about a concentration in communication systems. According to Larry Schneider, "To my knowledge, no other university in the country has a program like this."

Even though Stout has offered this concentration only for the last year, Robert Hendricks said, "We are 10 years ahead of other universities in this area; they will be scrambling to keep up with us."

The idea for a communication systems concentration stemmed from the realization that several courses seemed to overlap into both business and technology fields: communication and information technology, communication and information systems, office automation, and telecommunication systems and teleconferencing. The fact that they overlapped into different fields seemed to indicate that these types of classes were important enough to have a concentration all their own.

"Overlapping into different fields" accurately describes what will be expected of communication systems graduates. Department pamphlets state "Graduates in this field will use their extensive communications training to: 1) identify and analyze the technical requirements for industrial and business communication, 2) develop plans and propose solutions to satisfy the communication requirements in business and industry and 3) coordinate the implementation of technical systems for comprehensive communication within the industrial and business environment."

Graduates will be qualified for entry level positions as designers, engineers, or supervisors in an industrial environment. Suggested areas of interest are the design, administration, analysis, development, and/or coordination of communication systems, automated office systems, telecommunications, interactive systems, telephone systems, teleconferencing, networks, and information systems.

Schneider and Hendricks used the adjectives "hands on," "application oriented," and "technically strong" to describe how communication systems graduates would be different from those with similar degrees.

Another difference may be in job availability. Robert Hendricks said, "Companies have contacted me to ask how many grads I have in this program." Or as Larry Schneider succinctly put it, "These graduates will be gobbled up the minute they walk out the door."

SSA appoints two as Off-Campus senators

Barb Caron
News Reporter

JoAnn Prange, Stout Student Association President (SSA) called the 11th session of the 16th Congress to order last Tuesday at 6 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom in the Memorial Student Center.

Under President's report Prange encouraged senators to recruit students to take part in the School Spirit and Pride Committee. This committee is dealing with such things as pep rallies, homecoming, football games, etc. Interested students can attend the next meeting on Tuesday at 11 a.m. in the Prairie room in the Memorial Student Center.

Under Vic Sundvall's Administrative Assistant report there were motions made to appoint Rich Bruekner, and Cheryl LaFountain to two of the three vacant Off-Campus senate positions. Both motions carried. A motion was also made to remove faculty votes in student elections. This motion was automatically tabled for three weeks. Also under Sundvall's report a motion was made to reduce absences from senate from five unexcused absences to three unexcused with a total of five absences. This motion was also tabled for three weeks.

Chuck Keller, Vice President of Legislative Affairs informed senate that he will have tables set up in the Student Center and the Commons to inform students about United Council and legislative affairs. Keller also urged senate to use the legislative hotline to leave messages for their senators about their stands on issues, or to ask for information on legislative issues.

Mike Zelinski, Vice President of Academic Affairs informed senate that SSA is taking applications for persons interested in the instructor or supervisor position opening next semester for the Applied Leadership Class.

Under Landlord Tenant Report Patty Strassman reported the results of the Landlord Tenant Awareness Survey her committee took to senate. Of those who took the survey, 40 percent were aware of the Landlord Tenant service and 60 percent are not aware of the service. Of the students surveyed 45 percent are aware of the Landlord Tenant column in the Stoutonia, while 54 percent are not. Of the 45 percent who said they wre aware of the column, all agree it is both useful and informative. Strassman and her committee will be working on how to make students more aware of the Landlord Tenant service available to them.

Under New Business a motion was brought up to remove voting rights from faculty advisors on senate. This motion was presented by Bob Meyer, senate advisor. This motion was tabled for three weeks.

Sales tax proposed to promote tourism

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The Wisconsin Task Force on Tourism Funding has proposed to the state legislature a tourism and promotion sales tax to raise $8 million in annual revenues for promoting Wisconsin tourism. The money is needed for the state to match the promotion efforts being made by Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota.

The task force, appointed by Lieutenant Governor James T. Flynn, specifically recommends that "A one-quarter of one percent tourism and promotion sales tax be levied on gross sales of: lodging establishments, eating establishments, public and private campground rentals, retail liquor and malt beverages, car rentals for under 30 days and taxi cab services, and public enterprises which include but aren't limited to, golf courses, campgrounds, attractions, historic sites, food and beverage operations and marinas."

All the revenues from the tax would end up in a separate fund for tourism promotion. This fund would supplement the $2.5 million currently set aside from general purpose revenues in the annual state budget for promotion of tourism.

The proposal establishes a ceiling on the room tax of seven percent in municipalities with a population of 150,000 or more and five percent in cities with a population of less than 150,000.

Convincing the legislature that the Division of Tourism needs a four fold increase in funding will be difficult coming on the heels of a $500,000 increase in the division's funding in the 1985-86 budget.

Task force member Steve Vandeberg, president of the Wisconsin Innkeeper's Association and owner of the Holiday Manor Motor Lodge in Menomonie says one obstacle facing the task force involves getting a tax increase approved by Governor Earl as he makes plans for his re-election. "Any increase in tax in any way is going to be a negative thing for the governor when he's facing an election year. I think that just puts an added burden on us."

Vandeberg says the task force would rather have gotten the funds for tourism from general purpose revenue funds but all indications are that, "The general purpose revenue funds are not going to be coming from the legislature." He describes the tourism and promotion sales tax proposal as, "a compromise situation. We feel it is the best thing we could come up with. Nobody likes an increased tax of any sort."

The biggest factor on the task force's side is that Lieutenant Governor Flynn strongly supports the proposal. Flynn communicated this support to VandeBerg in a letter assesing the proposal. Flynn wrote, "The task force has proposed a responsible alternative for financing tourism promotion. The proposal is broad-based, including all major segments of the travel industry. The one-quarter of the 1 percent fee is modest. When a customer looks a a five cent increase on a $20 bill, it's like rounding an error on a tip. But, those five cents add up to the $8 million or so we need each year to effectively promote travel to and from Wisconsin." Lieutenant Governor Flynn expressed his concern about Wisconsin's limited budget for the Division of Tourism when he wrote to Vandeberg, "Wisconsin is being dramatically outspent by other states — especially our neighbors in Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota." Flynn noted that Wisconsin's last year's total tourism promotion budget of $2 million was so low that on a per capita basis it equalled one fourth of the average amount budgeted for tourism promotion nationwide. In 1984 Illinois outspent Wisconsin by $12.2 million, Michigan outspent us by $7.0 million and Minnesota topped Wisconsin by $2.6 million on tourism promotion.

The Lieutenant Governor concluded from his review of the budget for promotion of tourism that, "It should not be long before we face erosion, perhaps serious erosion, of our market share of both in-state and out-of-state travelers."

Steve Vandeberg agrees with Flynn except for the fact that he believes the erosion has already started. "There's a great concern in the tourism industry that we have already fallen behind and that we probably will fall farther behind unless we get on the ball here."

Vandeberg is not so concerned about how Wisconsin fell so far behind in tourism promotion as he is concerned about returning the state to a competitive level in tourism promotion. He sees the coordinated efforts by the task force members working with the aid of Lieutenant Governor Flynn's office creating a new awareness among Wisconsin legislators and voters of the needed increase in funding for tourism promotion.

The goal for the task force is to get Wisconsin tourism industry members together in a united campaign resulting in the proposal being passed and signed into law. The overall goal is to allow Wisconsin tourism promotion to help the state keep pace in the race with neighboring states for the tourist's dollar.

Student Model Store

LAST BUT NOT LEASED—
The Thunderbird Mall donated temporary space for the Stout/Menomonie High School Model Store. However, when Imagine That! closes Saturday the empty store will be available for lease.

excellent chance to get to know Menomonie better, especially the downtown and mall merchants. Several downtown merchants donated materials and fixtures (clothing racks) for Imagine That. The mall merchants donated all of the merchandise in stock at Imagine That. What the Model Store does not sell will be returned to the donating mall merchants, along with the profits.

Andy Schmidt, also a junior at Stout said, "This was an excellent chance to interact with community business people. It definitely helps build communication skills. Opening the Model Store helped me to get a different outlook in Menomonie, especially in working with the business people."

Swim, who was in the personnel department of Imagine That added, "Working in personnel helped me to gain experience in the preorganization of a business. We incorporated all the tasks of opening a business such as interviewing, scheduling and creating an employee handbook and employee policies."

Schmidt, in sales said, "Our department was responsible for attaining merchandise, training our students in proper sales techniques and working the sales floor. What we learned couldn't be taught in a classroom."

Tabor seems to have the same sentiments. He said, "This is a hands-on real world experience. Customer relations, making the sale and employee interaction can be taught in the classroom, but this experience definitely enhances the classroom instruction."

Imagine That's Grand Opening was September 28 and will close Saturday.

Tabor concluded, "The purpose of the Model Store is to give the students an opportunity to experience what marketing is all about and give them a chance to decide if a marketing career is for them."

The Model Store simulation in Menomonie is the only one in the country. So, if you would, Imagine That!

Police called in to capture loose goose

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Saturday morning, Sept. 22, in South Hall was stranger than Steven Spielberg's Amazing Stories for a resident advisor and her friend. These two discovered a white goose loose in the game room in the hall's basement as they made their early morning rounds. Campus security was called in and two Menomonie policemen helped the security officer capture the goose with the help of a goose noose.

The outstanding question from this series of events is, where did the goose come from? Not being an ornithologist, this reporter is limited to deductive reasoning alone to derive an answer from the possible alternatives.

After working part-time as a hotel doorman and never getting the chance to share my work experiences with a goose, it seems highly unlikely the goose opened the door to the game room where he was later found shut in.

Renee LaBerge, the RA who reported the loose goose to protective services, said she had gone downstairs at 5:30 a.m. to close a window in the game room "that's not normally open." The fact that the window had been left open points to one possible solution to the goose's method of entry.

It seems the Menomonie Police Department (MPD) entirely discounted the theory because the goose wasn't even questioned concerning a possible B&E violation. The most acceptable theory at this point is that someone else let the goose in through the door or possibly dropped the goose in through the window.

Serious legal questions remain concerning whether or not this person may be convicted for the false imprisonment of a goose. At this point, taking a line from the Reverend Jesse Jackson, "The question is moot." No suspect in the goose incident has been apprehended and with each passing day the odds of catching a suspect grow slimmer.

> All of a sudden there was a box down there.
> —Rene LaBerge, South Hall RA

According to LaBerge and her friend, Patty Dellabella, there was a pile of evidence, in the form of goose droppings on the floor, indicating the goose had been in the room for some time. It took half an hour of diligent work to clean up the evidence. Resident Halls Director Judy Spain said she felt badly about the extra work created for the janitor(s).

LaBerge, wanting to avoid a wild goose chase, called police. She reported a fun exchange she had with the officer over the phone when she informed him of the goose in the hall. He responded incredulously, "Like the kind that lay eggs?" which she affirmed and the situation was clarified.

The campus security officer, Kendall Fisher arrived first. As mysteriously as the goose arrived, a large box materialized in the game room. "All of a sudden there was a box down there," said LaBerge. It could be that this officer simply willed the box into the room. If this were so, why couldn't the officer have just as easily willed the goose into the box?

According to LaBerge and Dellabella, the officer got some bread from the kitchen in South Hall and proceeded to break the bread into small bite-size pieces. The bread was put into the box in the game room as Officer Fisher attempted to coax the goose in there. Well, you can lead a goose to bread, but you can't make him eat it. As a result, the goose remained free in the room until Menomonie police arrived.

The Menomonie police brought a stick with an adjustable noose which they slipped around the goose's neck. Throughout this process, picture if you will the goose vociferously complaining about the treatment. Although the officers were only concerned about the goose's well-being, they may have inadvertantly created a cause celebre for the American Goose Liberties Union (AGLU). Was an adequate attempt made to inform the goose of his rights? This reporter is aware that geese rights in America seem to depend a lot on the month of the year. My attempt to contact a skilled lawyer specializing in goose rights came up short.

The goose was escorted upstairs by the officers. Trying to place this terrified bird into the MPD car for transport to the animal park presented perhaps the greatest challenge. The noose was removed from the goose and one wing got caught in the car door. LaBerge said, "the goose fell out, becoming free."

Now there was an audience out front watching the activity. As the goose attempted its escape from the officers, LaBerge, observing all the activity from the front door, said she started laughing hysterically.

Ten minutes later, the goose was back into what can only be called, protective custody. The observers out front applauded the officers' efforts.

The conclusion of this story has a strange twist. The Menomonie police officers drove the goose to the animal park. The report by protective services reads, "The bird was left in the elk pen at the park so it would be by the water." Hopefully, the goose will be let out of the elk pen soon enough so he doesn't suffer an identity crisis.

Career Conference

UW-Stout's Annual Career Conference will be held Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 9 and 10, in the Crystal Ballroom and Great Hall of the Student Center. Students and staff will have the opportunity to meet with more than 300 representatives of 130 companies during the event, which is sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Office. General business and industry will be on the first day with the second day being entirely "hospitality" companies.

The conference serves many functions, and isn't only for graduating students. Underclassmen will get the chance to make some valuable contacts, and possibly set up leads for summer jobs, co-ops and field experience opportunities. Ruth Thomas of the Placement Office stressed that it isn't a recruitment day, but rather an opportunity for companies to distribute information about themselves.

Fieldhouse One Step Away

According to Building Commission member Dick Shoemaker (D-Menomonie), Stout's new fieldhouse is one of the projects that is included in a Commission bill that is likely to be introduced in the Wisconsin Legislature in the next couple of days. Besides the fieldhouse, additional maintenance on state buildings will be done and temperature and environmental control of the State Capitol will begin. Shoemaker said he hopes to have the bill passed during the fall floorperiod of the Legislature.

Spectrum 28 Season Opener

A live, call-in forum on proposed pari-mutuel betting and state-sponsored lotteries in Wisconsin will be brought to television viewers to start the Spectrum 28 season. The program will be live on Friday, Oct. 4 at 9:30 p.m. and repeated on Saturday, Oct. 5 at 9:30 a.m.

Appearing on the program with host Max Herbach will be State Representative Dick Shoemaker; Bill Arbuckle, chairman of the St. Croix Economic Development Commission; Carol Connolly of the Minnesota Racing Commission; and representatives from Gamblers Anonymous and the United Methodist Church.

This live forum will be the first of many to come this semester. On Oct. 11 and 12 there will be a show centered around Halley's Comet; an AIDS special on Oct. 17 and 18; and a special interview with Lord Harold Wilson, former Prime Minister of England, on Oct. 24 and 25.

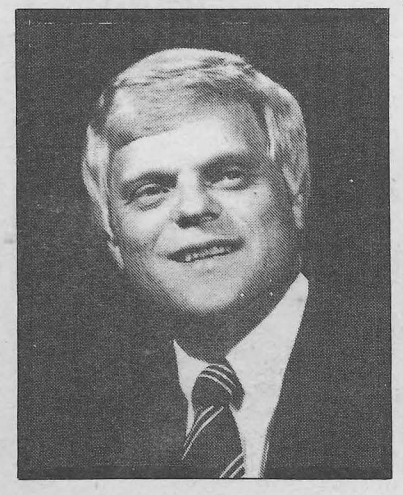
Shaw offered presidency amidst much controversy, disagreement

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Amid controversy and open disagreement, the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents authorized Regent President Ben Lawton to offer the position of university president to Kenneth Shaw. Shaw, who is "very highly regarded in Illinois," according to



Kenneth Shaw

Lawton, will assume the position officially as of Feburary 1, 1986, at a salary of $100,200 a year.

Though he is highly regarded in Illinois, Shaw has run into opposition in Wisconsin. State Repesentative Marlin D. Schneider (D-Wisconsin Rapids) not only criticized Shaw by calling him a "wimp," but criticized the whole selection process for not giving enough consideration to Wisconsin candidates. Schneider has since apologized for this remark.

Schneider feels the UW system needs "someone who can go out there and do a little ass-kicking." One outspoken Wisconsin candidate was Madison developer and two-time gubernatorial candidate David Carley. Carley, who was supported by governor Anthony Earl, thought it was "preposterus" that no one from the state, including him, was seriously considered for the presidential position.

> ...someone who can go out there and do a little ass-kicking.
> —Martin D. Scneider, (D-Wisconsin Rapids)

In defense of Shaw, Senator J.M. Davis (R-Waukesha) called Carley a sore loser for his criticism of Shaw. UW-Oshkosh Chancellor Edward M. Penson praised the appointment of Shaw. He stated he felt Shaw had all the characteristics the board was looking for in the new leader of the system.

Shaw was born in Granite City, Ill. and attended high school in Edwardsville, Ill. He received a bachelor of science degree from Illinois State, a masters degree in education from the University of Illinois at Champaign and his doctorate from Purdue University.

Shaw, at age 46, will become the eighteenth president in the history of the university. He replaces Robert O'Neil who resigned to take a similar position at the University of Virginia.

UW-Stout Chancellor Robert Swanson has recently met with Shaw and feels he is qualified to handle the task of University President. Though the Wisconsin system is much larger than the Illinois system that he is currently with, Swanson feels he has the right combination of academics and organizational skills to deal with the "step up" to the larger system. Swanson feels the step up in position may be a motivating force for Shaw.

The chancellor has invited Shaw to the campus, but a definite time has yet to be set because of Shaw's previous responsibility to Southern Illinois University.

Peer mentoring group formed to assist non-traditionals' adjustment

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The task force formed within Stout Student Services last spring to determine the specific needs of non-traditional students at UW-Stout resulted in three important changes. An information sheet was developed along with an orientation program and a peer mentoring program for non-traditionals.

Of those three changes, the Counseling Center is currently focusing efforts on creating peer mentoring groups. Members from the Organization of Adult Students Involved in Stout (OASIS) has been helping Counselor Judy Tomesh organize and promote the peer mentoring groups. Currently, there are four peer mentor groups. Tomesh says they are designed around the small group to be self-directive.

The peer mentoring concept is to get incoming non-traditional students together with returning non-traditionals who share similar likes and dislikes and help the incoming students feel they fit into the lifestyle on campus.

Each group meets once a week. The first meeting is arranged through the Counseling Center. Any interested non-traditionals should contact Judy Tomesh at her office, 11 Bowman Hall, extension 2468, and give her their schedules. Tomesh urged interested non-traditional students to act now to form their peer mentoring group because next Thursday, Oct. 10, will be the last day to form one this semester.

The definition of a non-traditional student is pretty much up to the student. Tomesh said, "Normally, it's a student who has returned to school. Some campuses use the age of 25 or above to define non-traditionals. The trend on this campus is to allow for self-determination."

> They feel it's harder to find where they fit in both on and off-campus.
> —Judy Tomesh, Counselor

Tomesh pointed out non-traditionals face a whole new set of problems when they make the switch from their previous lifestyle to the college lifestyle. "Non-traditional students are much more concerned about time management issues," she said. The time management problems are created because, "Non-traditionals add the role of student while maintaining the role of mother, father, wife, husband, worker. Since they keep the roles they face a definite time crunch."

Other problems facing incoming non-traditionals are that, "They want to meet other non-traditional students and they don't know where to start. They feel it's harder to find where they fit in both on and off-campus. The financial aid isn't as available for them as it is for traditional students. They just don't feel as comfortable in campus organizations which focus their activities around the needs of traditional students."

The vast majority of non-traditional students choose to live off-campus. As a result, it is more difficult for them to blend into the lifestyle on campus as a new student. Contrasting life in the dorms to life off-campus, Tomesh said, "There is almost a mentor system built-in if you live in the dorms. There's someone there to tell you who the best instructors are, give you advice on courses and tell you about the rules for dropping or adding a class. If you're living off-campus, it's not built-in."

The goal of the peer mentoring system for non-traditional students is to make their matriculation to Stout complete in both the social and the academic world.

Companies support I. T. majors through gift-in-kind contributions

Karen Schubert
News Reporter

Imagine the Graphic Arts Composition lab without a typesetting machine or the photo and print labs without process cameras and presses. Imagine the Energy and Transportation department without its computers or accessories. Imagine the packaging labs without their milling machine or other electronic packaging machines.

"Our department would not exist. We would just be classrooms," Dr. James Herr, coordinator of Graphic Arts Management said of the "gifts" his department within the School of Industry and Technology receives throughout the school year.

These "gifts" are part of the gift-in-kind term which describes the materials, equipment and tools the School of Industry and Technology receives from companies such as 3M, DEC, Control Data, West Publishing, Nekoosa Paper and their suppliers.

For example, last year the Graphic Communications Department received over $700,000, Energy and Transportation $250,000, Materials and Processes nearly $100,000.

According to Dean James Bensen of the School of Industry and Technology, most companies have Stout graduates working for them, are pleased with their performances and look to their school, Stout, to see how they can contribute to the academic curriculum and help Stout keep continuing to produce the kind of graduates they need.

"These gifts are the various companies' indirect way of thanking us (Stout) for the graduates we produce to work in their industry," Herr said. Herr also said that a lot of the companies pass the word on to their suppliers who also contribute gifts.

In the Graphic Arts department, such company suppliers as DuPont and Kodak have given gifts to the department.

Obtaining gifts for the various departments within the School of Industry and Technology is done through the faculty and staff. Through personal contacts with industrial sources, consultation fees and interaction with concentration advisory groups, areas requiring equipment and materials exist for another year.

> Our department would not exist. We would just be classrooms.
> —James Herr, Graphic Communications

"We go out to companies and ask for any equipment they can offer us," Herr said. Herr said his department (Graphic Arts Management) has had to turn down some gifts because they do not have the space. On the other hand, his department has also accepted gifts they do not need and resell them to bring money into the department.

Up and down the hallway on third floor Fryklund, skids of paper can be found. In the storeroom, press plates, oversized for proper use, are on the shelves. "We have work study students cut the plates to fit," Herr said. It hasn't been an inconvenience, according to Herr, to store the paper in the hallway, as the department waits for the completion of their new area — the old Student Union.

"It's exciting and upbeat," Herr said of the gifts his department receives. Most recently, a complete photo-type setting system which includes six terminals, a tape drive for backup and two hard disc drives has been set up.

According to Bensen, gifts-in-kind for 1984 were over a half million dollars and he expects the 1985 totals to far exceed that figure.

Soviet Union Study Tour

The 18th annual Stout study tour of the Soviet Union will be from March 8-22, 1986. According to Robert Evans, professor of social science, some of the comments from past participants include "enthusiastic," "great food," "a real people-to-people experience" and "a unique opportunity not to be missed."

The 1986 tour will feature visits to Leningrad, Moscow, Tbilisi, a city in the southern republic of Georgia near Turkey and Baku, a resort city on the Caspian Sea near Iran. The cost of the tour is $1,805, and includes transportation from Chicago, first-class accommodations and three meals a day. The tour is open to all members of the community, and applications should be made by Dec. 1.

Soviet Dissident to Speak

On Oct. 8 at 8:00 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Student Center, Soviet dissident Vladimir Bukowsky will give a talk on "The Human Rights Struggle in the USSR." Bukowsky was born in the Soviet Union in 1942, and had a long history of trouble with the Russian authorities. He was expelled from Moscow University for publishing an underground literary journal, arrested for possessing a forbidden book, and finally committed to an insane asylum from which he was released in 1965.

After more arrests and various trips to prison, Bukowsky was exchanged for Chilean Communist Luis Corvalen Lepe. On March 1, 1977, he became the first Soviet dissident to be received by an American President. His 1979 autobiography, To Build a Castle, was reviewed by Newsweek as, "... a textbook for political dissenters. This man ... is someone to have on your side." Bukowsky is sponsored by the University Speaker Series.

Jake's offers elegant dining alternative

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

Jake's Resort and Supper Club is an elegant, yet affordable alternative to on-campus dining or off-campus cooking.

Jake's is located approximately five miles north of Menomonie on Highway D, one-half mile off Highway 25, nestled in the trees along the river bank.

Review

Much of the dining area looks out over the water. The view from the dining room is spectacular, especially during this time of the year when the surrounding trees are exhibiting their brilliant fall colors.

In the summer, guests can relax on the wooden patio deck which is built around the restaurant and also looks out over the water.

The interior of the restaurant is warm and inviting. The walls are paneled in dark tones and a large brick fireplace separates the two sections of the dining room. Several plants and pictures brighten the dining area.

The restaurant was quite crowded when we visited Jake's last Friday evening, yet it was only a few minutes before we were escorted from the bar to our table.

Despite the large number of customers, the atmosphere was pleasant and relaxing. The tables were spaced far enough apart for privacy and quiet music floated out over the dining area.

"If it's on your mind, it's on our menu," boasts the advertisement for the Jake's. This proved to be true. The menu contained a wide variety of items, including several types of seafood, steaks, burgers and sandwiches. There were also many appetizers, side dishes and desserts to choose from.

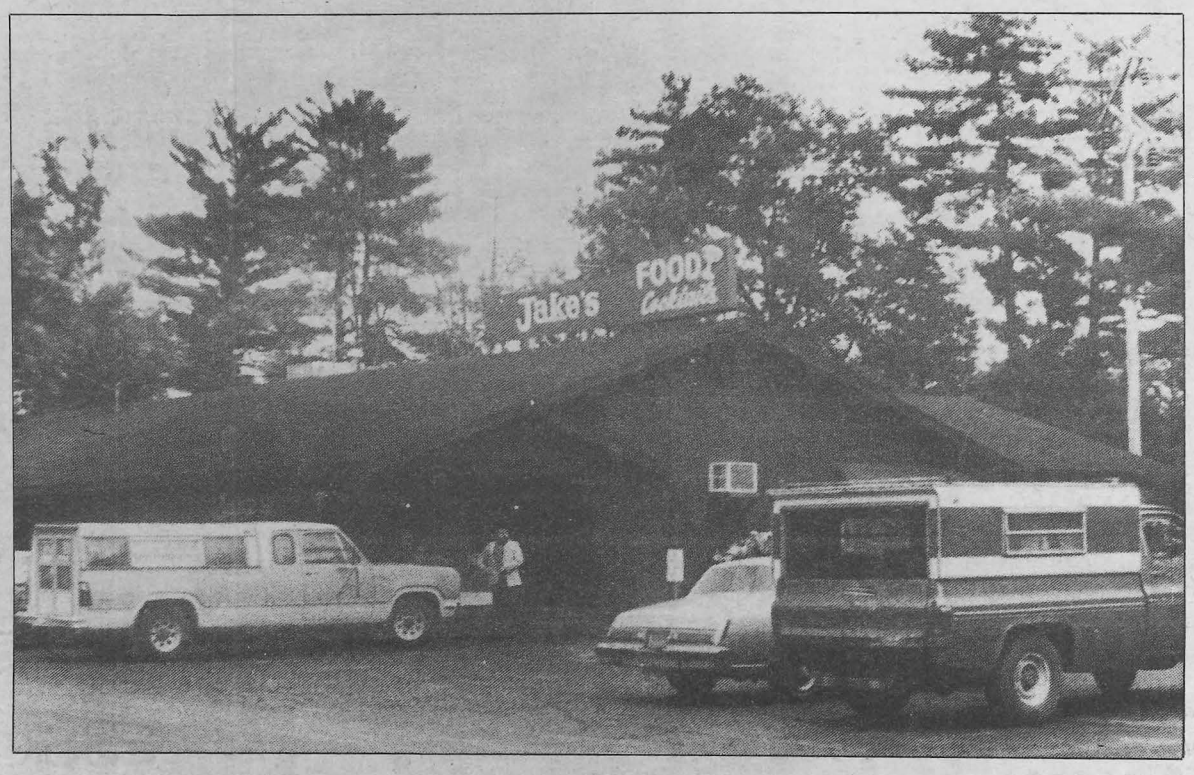
Prices ranged from $25.95, for a 21-ounce lobster to about $2.50 for some of the smaller sandwiches. Most of the main dinner entrees were under $10.00.

Each night Jake's also offers a specially priced meal. The Friday night "special," battered fish, fries and cole slaw for only $3.25, appeared to be very popular with the customers.

In addition to the nightly dinner specials, Jake's also offers daily luncheon meals and a Sunday buffet.

After studying the menu, I decided on the "Queen Size Prime Rib," on special that week for $7.25. My room mate selected the "Mouthwatering Sole"—sole stuffed with shrimp, crab meat and Monterey Jack cheese, which was $7.50.

First, fresh rolls and butter were brought to the table, followed by a crisp lettuce salad, topped with tomatoes, cucumbers and French dressing.



SUCH A DEAL—
One of this area's better quality meals can be found at Jakes's Supper Club. The beautiful location and fine service are two of the side orders with each meal. (Stoutonia photo by Kevin Berg)

Even before we had finished the salads, the main course was delivered. The prime rib was huge, covering the entire serving platter. It was broiled exactly the way I had requested. A side dish of tasty golden hash browns was also served with the steak.

The sole, which really did look "mouthwatering," was pronounced delicious by my room mate, as was the baked potato, which was served with sour cream and butter.

Overall, the quality of the food was excellent and it was served in very generous portions. Although I would have loved to sample one of Jake's homemade pies or ice cream sundaes, there was absolutely no room left in my stomach for dessert after the main course.

The service was excellent throughout the meal. Our hostess and waitress were efficient and courteous despite the large number of guests. In fact, the entire staff was very friendly, which is probably another reason for the restaurant's apparent popularity.

While we were dining, we discovered that Jake's also specializes in birthday parties. Two guests were celebrating their birthdays that evening. Each was treated to a birthday cake while "Happy Birthday to You" played from the music system. I found this to be an amusing diversion, especially for a restaurant of this large size.

Jake's Resort and Supper Club proved to be a fine dining experience for me, and I'm sure that many of the other patrons would agree. It's combination of quality food and service make it the perfect place for any special occasion.

CMP teamwork results in musical entertainment

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

"We will rock Stout" is the slogan for CMP, one of the eight commissions under the University Programming Board (UPB) funded through the Stout Student Association (SSA).

This commission is responsible for all mini and major concerts on campus. Additional events are the Wednesday Night Rock Series and video dances. Chartered concert buses is a new idea in the planning stages for the future.

"Our objective is to bring a variety of entertainment to campus," said Christa Sanicola, CMP Chairperson. In this context "contemporary" means updated and going with the trends of the 80's.

Definite plans for the semester of 1985 include the Booze Brother's Revue, November 14 and the Menomonie Battle of the Bands, December 6. Sanicola said, "We are expanding in this area (Battle of the Bands) because we want to pull our own talent here and give them a chance to show everybody what they have to offer."

According to Todd Welsch, a member of CMP, local talent is already lined up for the battle. "We have been working on that for a while and that thing is going to be so well organized by December that everybody is going to freak-out," said Welsch.

In order to produce a concert, many members deal with promotion, bookings, band setup, take down and security. Many hands will be involved this year with a record high membership of 45 students.

New members were trained this year through a special training program. Executive board members set up committees in order to educate new members about CMP, production, and to get better acquainted.

Incorporated with this program was a big sister, big brother arrangement. Members followed their brother or sister during the first concert to learn about actual production.

Debbie Zehnder, Co-marketing and Public Relations Director was on the new members committee. In order to recruit members Zehnder said, "We were enthusiastic at the Resource Fair and did new types of advertising to make people aware of CMP and our concerts. It's really fun to see a new idea work."

Much preparation takes place before a concert. Executive board members are in charge of areas such as marketing, public relations, advertising, production, hospitality, finance and security.

"It is really hard, but we try to find out what the student body wants."

—Christa Sanicola, CMP Chairperson

"It is really hard, but we try to find out what the student body wants," said Sanicola. A list of student suggestions is kept and the commission members discuss who they would like to come to campus.

Agents are called in order to acquire prices and date availability. The commission then makes their choice by a closed ballot voting process. The chairperson does not have voting rights and is responsible for guiding the commission.

Different advertising and promotion tactics are used to get a crowd for the planned concert. Michael Pedro, Finance and Security Manager said, "Our main objective is to have sold out shows. We are spending an X amount of dollars and when you see 100 to 200 people walk through the door, it sometimes can be really defeating."

On the day of a concert members commit much of their time. A band arrives at 3:00 p.m.. Load-in and set-up lasts until 5:30 p.m.. Another band arrives and is loaded in. At 7:30 p.m. the sound check takes place.

During the concert, CMP members watch the people, cater to the bands and make sure the concert runs smoothly. Between 1:00 and 2:00 a.m. members are able to go home after clean-up tasks are completed.

Due to the Great Hall facility, concerts are easier to produce. Ernie Schoenseld, Production Manager said, "The new union makes my job easier as well as a better show production-wise."

"The room is accoustically inclined for good music," said Sanicola. In the old facility, staging had to be assembled and chairs and tables removed before a concert could take place.

Stout belongs to the National Association of Campus Activites (NACA). Through this association, CMP is able to make contacts with entertainers and agents. Stout's CMP is known as one of the best concert committees within of the UW System.

Due to the cost of bands and the CMP budget, programming is a difficult task. Sanicola said, "If we hear more voices and more people participate in events, it will make it easier for us to program."

Most CMP members are attracted to the commission because they like music. Keith Ross, a a second year member of CMP said, "I'm really into music and what it is all about, like what goes on behind the scenes."

Even though being a member is a time commitment Zehnder said, "It takes lots of team work but it pays off in the end."

Corner III puts theory into practical use

Beth Reid
Contributing Writer

You're sitting in class, patiently waiting for the bell to ring. Your stomach begins to growl, reminding you that it's been four hours since you had breakfast, and that was just a piece of dry toast as you dashed off to class. After what seems to be an eternity, the buzzer sounds and class is over.

You have an hour off before your next class. That's not enough time to run home for lunch, but you also don't feel like facing the hustle of the Grandview Terrace Cafe. Where can you go to get a hot, hearty meal in a more relaxing atmosphere? The answer is Corner III.

Corner III, located on the third floor of the Home Economics Building, is a cafeteria style restaurant which is run by the Quantity Foods Production (QFP) class. Lunches are served daily from 11:20 to 12:30.

The members of the class, under the instruction of Stephen Kissler, are completely responsible for covering all areas of operation. Kissler feels that this is an extremely valuable class because, "The students are actually putting the theory into practical use."

On the first day of class, students are grouped into pairs and each pair is assigned a date during the semester in which they will be the manager for the restaurant. Each day has designated theme, or students can create their own theme idea. The themes vary from different ethnic foods, to picnic and barbecue menus.

Once the theme has been decided, the menu must be developed and recipes are selected. This involves a great deal of time and preparation. The menu must include two hot entrees, two types of vegetables, a potato or starch item, a bread item, large and small salads, a hot and and cold sandwich, one or two soups, and two desserts. Beverages include soda, coffee, Sanka, tea, milk and juice.

IN THIS CORNER—
Corner III chef of the day prepares the day's entree. Practical application results in a great meal. (stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

In addition, at least one item on the menu must be low sodium or low cholesterol. All the recipes for the items on the menu are selected by the managers and at least two of the recipes must be tested outside of class.

After the menu has been developed, the managers estimate the cost of the ingredients needed for each recipe and prepare a market order. The costing of ingredients is a very important step. "Close estimation of costs in comparison to the real costs is very critical," Kissler said. "We want to provide the customer the maximum for the minimum price. It also teaches the students about profit and loss."

Other steps that must be completed by the QFP manager are selecting pan and plate sizes, organizing staff, planning dining room arrangement, and advertising.

Another area that students learn more about is crisis management. Before the class begins preparing the food for the day, the managers are given a crisis. They must then decide what is the best way to deal with the situation. "The idea behind giving the students a realistic crisis situation is to make them think," said Kissler. "They always need to be asking themselves 'What if this happened, or what would I do if that happened'. You never know what to expect and this gives them a chance to practice their management skills."

"Critiques are very beneficial," said Kissler. "First we talk about the positive aspects of the meal. Then we discuss the negative areas and then improvements on the negative areas are decided by the mangement and staff. Then we go back to the positive and end with a praise of the meal." Kissler feels that this management style works well because the class learns to work as a team and make decisions together.

On the days a student is not a manager, he is assigned to a different position in the kitchen or in the area of service. This allows students to experience all the different jobs which go into running a restaurant.

"I've learned a lot about the process of organizing, planning, preparing and serving a meal," said senior H&R major, Kris Gordon. "The facilities are a little smaller, but I'm getting a lot of practical experience through this class. It will help me a lot when I go out into the industry."

Although some of the students in the class are not going into the restaurant field, QFP teaches students to be multi-dimensional. "I've been out in the industry," said Kissler, "and I know what it's like. The multi-dimensional people, those that know both the front of the house and the back of the house, are the only ones who will go anywhere in this business."

Kissler is a prime example of being multi-dimensional. He has a two-year Culinary degree, a Bachelor of Science degree from Stout in Hotel and Restaurant Management, and a Master's in Home Economics Education.

His work experience includes five years as a full time cook and chef, nine years of management experience, four years of running the food service for 12 public schools, cafeteria manager for First Wisconsin Bank, and Assistant Club Manager for the Dallas Petroleum Club.

He returned to teaching at Stout because, "I'm a Stout fanatic. I love teaching and it fits me like a glove. I feel I have a lot to offer in education to students because I know what they'll need. If I didn't feel this way, I wouldn't be here. High quality instruction, administration's awareness to industry needs and effective placement have been, and will continue to be the main contributing factors to success within the Hotel/Restaurant educational program."

What's Happening

Compiled by Julie Abel

The sixth in a series of ten recitals by eminent women organists will be presented with this year's organist, Professor Yuko Hayashi of Brookline, Massachusetts.

This series of recitals being given is one each year from 1980 to 1990, the 100th anniversary of the Memorial Building. The series was conceived by the Organ Committee of the Mabel Tainter Literary, Library and Educational Society to demonstrate the high place in musical America occupied by women organists and musicians.

As a member of the Organ Historical Society for many years, Yuko Hayashi is presently Head of the Organ Department at the New England Conservatory of Music. In addition, she is a well-known recitalist in America and Europe.

Along with honoring women musicians, this day has also been set aside as VOLUNTEER APPRECIATION DAY. The purpose of the Appreciation Day is to thank the many organizations and individuals who have donated their time, energies, and/or gifts of money to the Historic Memorial Building.

A cordial invitation for this concert and Appreciation Tea on October 6 at 2 pm is extended to all who have given so freely of themselves. There will be no admission charge.

SPECIAL EFX

SPECIAL EFX (pronounced "Effects") does not need any special effects to produce its warm, romantic, optimistic hybrid of jazz, rock, and world music--it just needs guitarist/composer Chieli (pronounced "Key-el-ee") Minucci, percussionist/composer George Jinda, and their various bandmembers and speical guests.

If one wonders how a rock-bred guitarist from New York can blend with a jazz-bred percussionist from Hungary; how a single track of music can accomodate such wide-ranging talents as McCoy Tyner, Dave Grusin, and Mark Egan; how some percolation percussion instruments as diverse as bongos, temple blocks, shekeres, cowbells, ganzas, china cymbals, crotales, energy chimes, udu drums, caxixi, wood blocks, tamborims, and timbales can blend with sizzling, blith jazz/rock guitar to form the heart of the very special musical matter, then one has to look no further then SPECIAL EFX.

SPECIAL EFX just released their second GRP album Modern Manners. Their music is instrumental pop -- and it is fresh and alive.

They appeared for the first time in Boston when they opened for Spyro Gyra in the Opera House. They also delighted a crowd at the Starlight Roof in Kenmore Square at a special press party.

SPECIAL EFX started as a performing band. They strive for variety in the group members who are from different cultures. Together their personalities blend and unity is created -- unity of sound, emotion, and power. They become immersed in their playing to present one idea.

SPECIAL EFX will be performing at The Joynt, on Water Street in Eau Claire on Sunday, October 6.

Steve Marmel-Comedian

There are two kinds of people in the world, according to a quote on Steve Marmel's apartment door: the kind who live for fun and kind who live for money.

"I'm going to live for both, and if you don't think I can, get out of my way." Marmel, a 21-year-old junior at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, wrote that quote and lives by it.

Although he has been performing for two years, Marmel has opened for Carson and Letterman-level comedians such as Charlie Hill and Fred Asparagus, as well as underground comic Sam Kinison, who can be seen in an upcoming HBO special this fall.

Marmel began his comedy career in front of a screaming crowd of 400 students at the University of Wisconsin, where he entered a contest sponsored by the famous Catch A Rising Star comedy club in New York. Although it was his first time on stage, he won third place.

Since then, he has worked at the Comedy Cottege in Rosemont, Ill.; Teddy's, a nightclub in Milwaukee, Wis.; the Comic Strip in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.; and performed in Sandy Hackett's Talent Showcase at the Sahara Hotel in Las Vegas, Nev.

He currently works at the Comedy Cellar, a nightclub one block from his apartment in Madison, and is planning on paying his way through school via comedy and graduating with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Journalism.

Marmel will be performing for Commons PM on Thursday, October 3 at 8:15 & 9:15 p.m. He can also be seen on Friday, October 4 and Saturday, October 5 at 9:15 & 10:15 p.m. in the Pawn.

Vladimir Bukowsky

U.S. - U.S.S.R. Relations

Born in Russia in 1942, Vladimir Bukowsky has had a long history of trouble with the Russian authorities. He was expelled from Moscow University for publishing an underground literary journal, arrested and sentenced to prison for possessing a forbidden book, later sent to an insane asylum and finally released in 1965. He was arrested again in the same year for organizing a support of two Soviet writers.

After several more arrests and a number of years in various prisons, Bukowsky was exchanged for imprisoned Chilean Communist Party Secretary, Luis Corvalen Lepe. On March 1, 1977, he became the first Soviet dissident to be received by a President of the United States. In 1979, Viking Press published To Build a Castle, Vladmir Bukowsky's autobiography.

On Tuesday, October 8, 1985 Vladmir Bukowsky will be speaking on U.S. - U.S.S.R. Relations in the Great Hall, Memorial Student Center, 8:00 p.m.

Alumni Art Exhibition

An exhibition of work by UW-Stout art alumni opens Tuesday, October 8, in the university's art gallery, Room 104, of Ray Hall.

The display is one of several major events commemorating the 20th anniversary of establishing the art department at Stout. Twenty alumni have been selected for this exhibition, which will include painting, drawing, ceramics, and sculpture.

Exhibitors have won grants, awards and other forms of recognition for their professional work. Many of them are teaching, working independently or holding art-related employment throughout the Unites States.

"The exhibiting alumni reflect and exemplify the strengths of the Stout art department in preparing graduates for the area of the studio arts," said Ed Wong, gallery curator.

Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. The display will also be open homecoming weekend, Oct. 25-27, and will close after that.

Campus Cuisine
Luscious lunch ideas
Linda Konkol

Do your packed lunches suffer from soggy sandwich syndrome? Does the thought of another bologna sandwich for lunch give you a case of dietary doldrums? If so, it sounds like you have the brown baggers' blues. You can combat these blues by adding some zip to your lunches with these suggestions.

For sandwich variety, use different breads: slices, rolls, biscuits, bagels, and pocket bread. Pack halves of two different kinds of sandwiches. Cut sandwiches in different shapes, (rectangles, triangles, strips), as well as halves.

Try one of the following sandwich fillings for a change of taste:

-Top cold meatloaf slices with sour cream.

-Flake canned tuna and mix with green goddess or creamy cucumber dressing.

-Add crumbled corn chips to chicken salad.

-Spread bread with marshmallow cream; fill with peanut butter and banana slices.

Spread butter, margarine, cream cheese, mayonnaise, or salad dressing on bread for sandwiches to keep moist fillings from soaking into the bread.

Tomato and pickle slices make sandwiches soggy; lettuce and crisp onion rings wilt if packed in sandwiches. To keep these items crisp, wrap them separately in wet paper toweling and then foil or plastic wrap; add to your sandwich just before eating.

Salads can be easily packed for brown baggers. Carry salad dressing in a separate container and add at lunchtime. Salad dressings are also sold in individual serving size packages now for easy transporting.

Other sandwich substitutions are deviled eggs, chunks of meat, cheese, vegetables skewered on toothpicks, and meat and vegetables marinated overnight in Italian dressing.

There are a variety of accompaniments you can pack besides the old stand-by, potato chips: canned shoestring potatoes, popcorn, trail mix, potato salad, cherry tomatoes, olives, and pickles.

Cast brings talent to production; University Theatre opening soon

Julie Abel
Arts Reporter

"Ok! Drop down and relax. Ok, now slowly breathe in as you stand up."—said by the truly dramatic Kimberly Steen.

I am sitting in Harvey Hall Auditorium listening in on play practice for this year's first University Theater production.

The actors and actresses are warming-up for rehearsal of the first act. They all take their turns saying "I shall never go away." First they say it with anger, then as if they are all crazy, then with sorrow, and finally they say it as their character in the play would say it. The whole scene is quite amusing.

UW-Stout's University Theatre opens its 1985-86 season with the Tony Award winning drama "Whose Life is It Anyway?" by Brian Clark.

Focusing on that gray area between right and wrong, "Whose Life is It Anyway?" asks who has the power, responsibility, and, ultimately, the right to make a life or death decision for another human being.

Ken Harrison, the central character played by Andrew McDonough, is a talented artist who finds his world and his life's work crashing down around him as the victim of a tragic automobile accident. Although he has survived tremendous injuries, he is left paralyzed from the neck down.

Initially the comedian, Ken soon turns to bitter sarcasm as he initiates a legal battle not for his compensation, but for his death. Faced with the possibility/ near certainty of spending the rest of his life in a hospital bed, unable even to perform the primary functions of a normal individual, Ken presents his case for self-determination over self-preservation.

Written in an era when the right to die is a much discussed and controversial topic, "Whose Life is It Anyway?" presents the struggle of a patient who merely wishes to be liberated from the institutional machinery and lifeless sterility of the hospital that sustains him; to be free to choose the course of his life, even if that course must prove fatal.

Clark's play transcends the particulars of Ken Harrison and his situation to bring a far more universal message of human worth and dignity to our race at large. Ken's crusade, poignant, witty, logical and emotional, is sure to touch the hearts and minds of all who come to share it.

The actors and actresses talk of the characters and how they show a shield of professionalism in the business of maintaining human life. Doctors and nurses in real life are trained to put this shield up so that they do not get too involved with their patients. But actor Dave Kiff says it best serves to destroy the falacy.

Directing the production is Kimberly Steen, 22, from Osseo Wisconsin. She is a senior in Industrial Technology, Steen enjoys the creative challenge presented by all aspects of theatrical production.

Scenic and lighting design is by Stout's new Technical Director, Dr. James-Michael Miller. Miller, an experienced designer, director and actor, recently completed his doctorate in Speech communication/Theatre at Southern Illinois University.

Accident victim Ken Harrison is crafted by Andrew McDonough, 24, an exchange student from Watford Hertfordshire, England. A sophomore majoring in a Psychology/Sociology program, McDonough has participated in Youth Drama and Amateur Drama Societies in England. His accent provides a complimentary contrast to more familiar regional lilts while reinforcing the "melting pot" constituency of the U.S.

When asked if his part is a special challenge, McDonough replies, "Ya, it is, because it's damn hard to lie there." He finds lying still on the bed very difficult when his character gets excited about things. "You try standing talking to somebody and don't move anything, apart from your head."

Consultant physician Michael Emerson is played by stage veteran Dave Kiff. Majoring in Hotel and Restaurant Management, Kiff, 28, hails from New Jersey, where he has had an extensive theatre background.

Sister Anderson, played by Patricia Dellabella, has an iron conscience and is often accused of having a stainless steel heart. Dellabella tries to communicate that she is not at all like that in real life. From Cuba City, Wisconsin, Dellabella, 20, is a junior majoring in the Fashion Merchandising program.

Nurse Kay Sadler, played by Sandra King, is initially timid while near Ken, but later develops a sisterly relationship with him. King, 22, from Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin is a senior in the Art Education program. When asked about her character, King says, "She is naive, and knows nothing about life."

The only man able to see the real man behind the injuries is the orderly, John, played by Bobby Alexander. Alexander, 25, from Smiths, Alabama, holds an MS degree and is involved in the Guidance and Counseling program. He describes his character in three words, "Humorous, witty, and crazy!"

Ken's doctor, Dr. Joan Scott, is played by Katie Redeker. Torn between her professional oaths and feelings for Ken, Dr. Scott fights an inner battle of right and wrong. Redeker, 23, is a senior in Vocational Rehabilitation with a minor in Guidance and Counseling.

Ken's lawyer, Philip Hill, is played by Kerry Henderson. Hill believes in Ken and is trying to help him win his fight. Henderson, 24, is a senior in the Business Administration program, with a Speech minor.

"Whose Life is It Anyway?" performs in the Harvey Hall Auditorium Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, October 10, 11, and 12, at 8:00 p.m. with an additional 2:00 matinee on Saturday, October 12.

Tickets go on sale October 3 at the Box Office in the basement of Harvey Hall and also by phone 232-1468. Tickets will also be available in the new Student Center, across from the University Bookstore. Door sales are also available. Ticket prices are $2.00 for students and Faculty Staff of UW-Stout; $3.00 for General Public.

To keep your lunches cold, pack something frozen in your bag: a commercial gel, a plastic margarine container that you've filled with water and frozen, or a plastic bag filled with ice cubes.

Another way to keep your lunch cold is to freeze it the night before, and take it to school frozen. Sandwiches can be stored in the freezer for up to two weeks. At room temperature they'll thaw in an hour, but will stay fresh three to four hours after thawing if kept wrapped.

Foods that freeze well include:
-luncheon meat
-tuna
-cooked beef, pork, ham, turkey, and chicken
-meatloaf
-hard-cooked egg yolks
-cream cheese, Cheddar, Swiss, Muenster, and pasteurized processed cheese spreads
-peanut butter
-butter and margarine
-mustard, catsup, and chili sauce

Foods that shouldn't be frozen are:
-cooked bacon
-cottage cheese, sour cream
-vegetables
-hard-cooked egg whites
-jellies and jams
-mayonnaise, salad dressing–as a spread or in fillings

With these suggestions and a little creativity, you should be able to add variety to your packed lunches and shake those brown baggers' blues for good!

Singles play solid in tough quadrangular

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

How could it rain on UW-Stout's women's tennis teams parade? It did Saturday, all day, during the Blue Devils Quadrangular, which pitted the Lady Devils against three tough teams including Luther, Southwest, and St. Benedicts.

Stout 1 Luther 8

"Luther is the best team we will play this year," Stout Women's Tennis Coach Bob Smith commented. Apparently, he was right. For the Lady Devils were overpowered by the Luther women, especially in doubles action.

Mary Malloy, Lynn Papenfuss, and Jean Feyen were all crushed in straight sets by Luther in the top three singles spots. Although the matches were closer, the other Stout singles did not fare any better. Tara Stahel notched the lone win by beating her Luther opponent, 6-4,3-6,7-6.

The Luther strength was even more apparent in doubles action. The pairing of Malloy and Papenfuss struggled and lost 7-5,6-3, in first doubles play. Additionally, Mary Pokwinski and Jean Feyen couldn't muster enough big points, and fell 6-4,6-0.

Again the loss was credited to not being able to get the big points, and consequently not win the close matches. But Coach Smith was pleased with the improved play of the women and praised the team on a credible showing against a team of Luther's caliber.

Stout 4 Southwest 5

The Stout women should have won this one. Smith knew this was going to be a tough match and juggled the lineup appropriately to give the women netters every possible advantage against the Southwest team.

The rearranged singles lineup proved successful, as the Stout team captured four of the six possible wins in singles play.

They only needed one doubles match to win, but could not earn it. All three doubles teams dropped their matches to Southwest. The only close contest came at first doubles where the pair of Malloy and Papenfuss lasted three sets 6-0,3-6,0-6.

"Ironically, we have been working mostly on doubles, due to the adverse weather conditions," Smith said. He also noted that the doubles had the inside homecourt advantage when play had to continue inside the field house because of rain.

Stout 3 St. Benedicts 6

Again, the singles proved to be solid, and again the doubles crumbled as the Stout women netters dropped the third match on Parents Day to St. Benedicts, 3-6.

Mary Malloy, 6-0,6-4, Mary Pokwinski, 6-2,7-6, and Tara Stahel 6-0,6-1, all played marvelously winning their singles matches.

Then came the doubles matches. They all came up short again. The doubles pairings just could not win anything, and St. Benedicts capitalized on the Lady Devils dwindling confidence and routed the Stout women in all three of the doubles matches.

What happened? "The doubles killed us this weekend period!" Smith exclaimed. Throughout the three teams the Stout women netters played, not one doubles match was won.

Smith was very pleased with the improved play of the singles, but expressed disappointment in the fact that the doubles pairings must have been a little under the weather. "In doubles we are not getting the big breaks, we lose the big points and just are having problems shaking it off," Smith declared.

Also he noted that the women netters have improved tremendously over the past six weeks of play. He says that the team is working very hard, and notes that all of the teams the women's tennis team has lost to have been very competitive.

"This is the best team the Stout program has ever had," Smith said. Now all they need is the strong mental attitudes and confidence to win the attainable matches.

This week, women's tennis play continues as the Lady Devils will travel to La Crosse this weekend to participate in the La Crosse Invitational.

Alumni return to Stout for 20 year reunion of three champion teams

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

When was the last time Stout crowned three athletic teams as conference champions in the same year? No, the answer is not never, but 1965.

The Blue Devils of 1965 achieved the honor of conference champions in football, basketball and wrestling during that memorable year and the majority of those players will be back this weekend for their 20-year reunion of the glory days in Stout athletics.

Begining at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday morning, all of the championship teams will gather in the Crystal Ballroom of the Student Center for a brunch. Members of the championship teams will be introduced during the halftime of the Stout-Eau Claire football game at Nelson Field, which begins at 1 p.m.

One of the more amazing facts about these teams are that two of their coaches still are coaching at Stout and the third is now commissioner of the WSUC.

Coach of the champion football team was Max Sparger, now WSUC Commissioner, whose team ended the season at 7-1-1. Some of the more notable facts about the season was that they lost their opening game of the season to Winona St. and then tied a tough Mankato St. team the next weekend.

"After losing our first game, the coaches had a heart to heart talk with the players," Sparger commented, "and we worked the players really hard that week in practice and I didn't hear one player complain."

When you think of championship teams you usually think of a real powerhouse that would blow there opponents off of the field. But the team of 1965 was unique in that they never lead a single opponent at halftime.

Gridders win 14-7 in conference victory

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The Blue Devil gridders held on last Saturday to edge UW-Oshkosh 14-7 at Titan Stadium for Stout's first conference win.

Head Coach Bob Kamish said he used a "ball control offense." He added that the Blue Devils may have been a little conservative, but that Stout won and that's what counts.

Assistant Coach Bill Burns commented that the players were more "intense" than they were before and feels this had a lot to do with the win. He hopes this intensity continues to grow throughout the season.

The offensive player of the week was freshman center Steve Horne. Horne won the honor by blocking against two-time all WSUC nose guard Scott Rucynski. Kamish commented that Horne did a great job of making many key blocks against Rucynski that aided in Stout's win.

Stout's opening drive of the game started with Chuck Carr recieving the kick off at the eight-yard line and returned the ball 30 yards to the Stout 38. The first play from scrimmage, Carr ran a sweep around the right end for 17 yards which was his longest run of the day. The drive died and Stout was forced to punt. Rob Lindberg punted a 45 yarder downed by Mark Horbinski at the Titans one-yard line.

Oshkosh tried to run the ball, but the defense led by Keith Jurek, stopped the Titans and forced them to punt. Stout started with the ball on the Oshkosh 42-yard line and rolled off 11 plays before the Titans stopped the Blue Devils at the one-yard line on a fourth and goal.

Oshkosh took over and on first down the Titans fumble in the end-zone and the Blue Devil's Tim Hudson recovered for Stout's first score. This play and others helped earn Hudson the defensive player of the week. Hudson had four solo tackles and three assists by the end of the game.

Stout's second score came after Brian Kellet recovered a fumble at the Blue Devil 43-yard line. Here quarterback Glen Majszak directed eight running plays for Stout's second touchdown. The biggest run was by Ron Wise for 22 yards. The drive was finished with a 4 yard run by Majszak for the touchdown.

Oshkosh's only score came when they had the ball at mid-field. The Titans completed a 29 yard pass to get to Stout's 21-yard line. Here Oshkosh runs for three plays to conclude the game's final score 14-7.

One player who has been consistantly doing well is Chuck Carr. Carr said coming into this season everyone was optimistic about the young front line, but were surprised with their performance so soon. A lot of the players credit the front line for the performance of the offense.

Looking to this week's opponent, it is a home game Saturday against UW-Eau Claire. This is a big rivalry between these two teams, the first time they played each other was back in 1913. Last year Eau Claire won 31-26 against Stout.

Last week Eau Claire tied UW-River Falls 6-6 giving E.C. a record of 2-0-1. Kamish believes the gridders can win if they can control the ball and keep the score close.

Lady Devils see a tough week of action and seek player motivation

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's volleyball team completed a tough week of dual and tournament action. Last Wednesday they faced some tough competition from St. Scholastica losing 6-15 and 5-15 at Ashland, WI. The second game ended on a positive note with the Blue Devils beating Northland College scoring 16-14, 7-15, and 15-5.

Split by their one loss and one victory, the Lady Devils knew they would have to fight hard to come out on top at the Carleton Tournament at Northfield, MN this past weekend. But lady luck ran out for the spikers, and they picked up only two wins out of the six-game tournament. A disappointing loss of 6-15 and 5-15 from UW-River Falls in the first round left the Blue Devils in a dismal state as they tried to battle back. Their two wins came from St. Olafs (8-15 and 14-16) and St. Marys (13-15, 15-6, and 15-10), but they weren't enough to make up for their previous losses.

Stout volleyball coach, Lynda Lee, when asked about the complications involved in this past weekend's performance commented, "The team was inconsistent, and personnel changes were also hard to adjust to." Those changes occured due to an injury sustained by senior hitter Wendy Morrow who slipped a kneecap at practice this past Friday.

"Her loss affected the whole team," Lee said. Teammate and fellow hitter Karen Mickelson expressed the same sentiments, "She's one of our most dependable players--she always plays well. It makes it hard on the team because we depend on her to be strong in the middle."

Although the Lady Devils fared poorly this past weekend, their current record is 11-16. This is already past their total win record from the previous year, and the season is only half-way through. What the Blue Devils need at this point, states Lee, is that, "They need to realize that they must consistently improve themselves. They haven't realized that yet." Lee also stood firmly in her belief that the desire and drive to win has to come from within her players, "It has to come from inside them."

The team is now in the process of regrouping and pulling together for their dual competition next Wednesday at North Hennepin in Minneapolis, MN. They will face no tournament action until October 19. Lee said, "They need a break from tournaments and being on the road. It will help them to reunite and get their strategy together." As for the North Heal is working on their own special areas to improve themselves and be able to contribute to the team."

Looking ahead to the rest of the season, Coach Lee stated, "We really need to get motivated to finish out the season. Fans would really help motivate us also." This feeling holds true for senior hitter Karen Mickelson,"We have to keep the momentum going--it's got to come from us all." At this point their game looks to be more of a mental battle than anything else. Freshman Shellyal is working on their own special areas to improve themselves and be able to contribute to the team."

This feeling holds true for senior hitter Karen Mickelson,"We have to keep the momentum going--it's got to come from us all." At this point their game looks to be more of a mental battle than anything else. Freshman Shelly Gasow summed it up best when she said, "It's all a mental game. We all have to get our attitudes pointed in the right direction and be more aggressive."

"They were just a good bunch of men that did a good job at adjusting to every situation," Sparger said. "Also a lot of luck went with winning the close games."

According to Sparger, the highlight of the year was definitely winning the conference championship on the last Saturday of the season before the overflowing home crowd. Sparger said he was a little worried about his team as the Blue Devils fell behind 9-0 in the first six minutes of the game, but as history had reapeated itself throughout the year the Blue Devils came back to win only Stout's second outright conference championship in the schools history 21-9.

"The one thing that still stands out in my mind today is how each one of the players were such strong believers in theirselves," Sparger remarked. "I think their self-confidence in theirselves has showed-up in their post college achievements as many of the players have went on to lead successful lives."

Sparger sees that the game has changed in respect to a more wide open offense and the many rule changes due to the increase in size and speed of modern day players.

Present Head Basketball Coach Dwain Mintz at Stout was fortunate to coach the 1965-66 squad to a conference championship. Mintz's team that year finished the season with an impressive but disappointing 20-3 record.

Disappointing in that the Blue Devils lost in the first round of the playoffs to just an average Lakeland team 76-69.

"Our team was good enough to go to nationals that year but due to our tough road schedule at the end of the year, fatigue played a big part in our failure to qualify for nationals," Mintz commented. "We played three road games in that last week of the season and the last one was for the conference championship in which we beat La Crosse for 74-71."

Mintz called his team of 1965-66 a "fine meshed team" in that everyone on the team had his own speciality and they all combined their skills to make up one solid team all around.

The highlight of this great season by the cagers according to Mintz was the victory over UW-Oshkosh at Oshkosh by a score of 67-66. "I remember that after we got the ball back and leading by one point, we froze the ball for the final two minutes of the game to secure the win."

An interesting fact about the Blue Devil's season was that the first half of the season the Devils played their home games at Menomonie High School because the newly built Johnson Fieldhouse was still under construction. Mintz pointed out that every game that year was a sellout, both at the high school and in the fieldhouse when it later opened, as people were being turned away for games.

"We didn't have a team with exceptional capibilities but just a lot of hard working specialist," Mintz said. "We were a good defensive team and that made up for some of the quickness we didn't have."

In comparing the game today to how it was 20 years ago, Mintz remarked, "There's more flair in players today and they are a lot better shooters as shooting percentages indicate. Ball players these days are made during the summer and teams are made during the season, not like 20 years ago when players did not specialize in just basketball as they do now."

When discussing recruiting, Mintz said recruiting has been one of the biggest changes in the game. He use to have 50 new players show-up for basketball every fall and only about three of the 50 would be of any college level-quality. Mintz emphasizes that he was on the road a lot doing recruiting without a recruiting budget. Now there is a lot more talent in the pool and recruiting services help the coaches search out players.

Stout's first conference wrestling championship was recorded in the 1965-66 season and coaching that team was Sten Pierce, now the head golf coach at Stout.

The Blue Devils did not have an outstanding season in the conference as they posted only seven wins against five defeats but the team came together in the end to capture the championship crown.

"That year we had a lot of talent around here and the football team got the year off to an unbeliveable start by winning the conference and the enthusiasm of the kids just grew from there," Pierce stated. "After the football team won the championship the chancellor gave everybody a day off from school to celebrate the achievement, so the wrestlers wanted a day off in winter and they got it by winning the championship also."

About his wrestling team Pierce commented, "i remember all the kids names, it was my first year so I couldn't do any recruiting, but everyone on that team contributed in some way. Everyone scored a point some how and that's how we won the conference."

CHAMPIONSHIP PLANNERS — Fred Flint (left), co-publisher of the Dunn County News, Robert Melrose, associate professor at UW-Stout, and Athletic Director Warren Bowlus discuss last minute plans for the 20-year reunion of three returning championship teams this weekend.

Devil nickname dispute

Tom Roth

Have you heard about the anti-Blue Devil movement around campus? Yes, that's right. There are both administrators and students that don't like Stout's nickname being Blue Devil, and they want it changed.

Some people are offended by the Blue Devil symbol because it is the antithesis of their own religion. But isn't the Blue Devil symbol suppose to stand for aggressive spirit as stated in last week's Stoutonia editorial? I think of the Blue Devil symbol as more than just aggressive spirit. I interpret the Blue Devil symbol as scaring away opponents and causing them misforunaten.

Anyway, what kind of new nickname could you come up with that would fit Stout more appropriately? I came up with some suggestions after brainstorming for many hours last weekend.

I thought maybe Stout should have a nickname that tied in with the city in which it was located. I could not think of any great features of this beautiful city except one. The school could be called the Stout Green Lakers since Lake Menomin is so terribly algae green. Anyway, the basketball floor in Johnson Fieldhouse is painted this distguishing color of algae green.

My next suggestion was the Stout Senators, since the school was named after a senator named Stout. But could you see our mascot walking around in a grey pinstriped suit, his hair all greased back with the newest jell on the market, waving to the crowd and yelling "Vote for me!" at the football games?

Last but not least we could be representatives of our beautiful state and be called the Stout Dairyman. I guess we could call our female athletes Lady Dairies.

After looking at some other schools' nicknames, I decided Stout should just stick to their good ole' traditional nickname Blue Devil.

For instance, how would you like to have a nickname like the Horned Frogs as Texas Christian does, or be called the Ragin' Cajuns like SW Louisiana?

Anyway, Stout is not the only school in the country with Blue Devil as their school symbol. Duke also is named the Blue Devils. But there are some people who just love the color blue. How about being the Fightin' Blue Hens like Delaware?

Some other unusual nicknames I came across included the Marshall Thundering Herd, South Carolina Gamecocks (Oh my!), Western Illinois Leathernecks, Utah Utes, Massachusetts Minutemen, Indiania State Sycamores and the Akron Zips. I think the Zips are probably the home of the first post office.

I wonder if the government named some of these schools like the Austin Peay State Governors, Washington and Jefferson Presidents, Washington and Lee Generals and the Wilkes Colonels?.

On the religious line there's the Ohio Wesleyan Battling Bishops, Amherst Lord Jeffs, Swarthmore Little Quakers and the Valparasio Crusaders.

Now is Stout's nickname Blue Devils really that bad compared to just some of these other fine institutions I mentioned above? Don't let your school nickname get thrown around by a few people that think its cute to play games with a nickname that has become a tradition at Stout.

Quarterback's Picks

UW-Eau Claire at Stout-You have to give the Blue Devils credit after bouncing back last week to nip UW-Oskosh. The Blugolds are looking tough this year on defense after last week's tie with UW-River Falls. Look for a real defense battle in this one. A real upset. Stout by 3.

Detroit at Green Bay-The Packers are looking sad this year and probably won't win another game until newly acquired quarterback Jim Zorn is inserted into the starting line-up. Detroit by 10.

Minnesota at L.A. Rams-I was not too impressed with the Vikings' victory over the lowly Bills last week. Rams by 9.

Purdue at Minnesota-Despite the Gophers good show against Oklahoma last week, the Boilermakers' passing attack should be too much for the Gophers to handle. Purdue by 6 .

Wisconsin at Michigan-The Wolverines are showing no mercy this year. Michigan should hand the Badgers there first loss. Michigan by 23.

Alabama at Georgia-This game is a real toss-up. Georgia by 1.

Ohio St. at Illinois-The battle of the Big Ten begins with these two teams and the Buckeyes are still without the services of All-American Keith Byars, but Illinois still has not proved much this year. Ohio St. by 14.

South Carolina at Pittsburgh-South Carolina has had a lot of problems this year and Pittsburgh has been brilliant at times. Pittsburgh by 10.

Vladimir Bukowsky

The Human Rights Struggle in the USSR"

Born in Russia in 1942, Vladimir Bukowsky has had a long history of trouble with the Russian authorities. He was expelled from Moscow University for publishing an underground literary journal; arrested and sentenced to prison for possessing a forbidden book; later sent to an insane asylum and finally released in 1965. He was arrested again in the same year for organizing a demonstration in support of two Soviet writers.

After several more arrests, and a number of years in various prisons, Bukowsky was exchanged for imprisoned Chilean Communist Party Secretary, Luis Corvalen Lepe. On March 1, 1977, he became the first Soviet dissident to be received by a President of the United States. In 1979, Viking Press published To Build a Castle, Vladimir Bukowsky's autobiography.

Protesters throw dirt on groundbreaking

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

For many communities, the groundbreaking for a new public library is about as controversial as local politicians kissing babies. In Menomonie, a group of approximately a dozen people showed up to protest the groundbreaking last Saturday morning, Oct. 5.

One of the protesters, Beverly Waller expressed her concerns about the community's plans for Mabel Tainter Library. She said she thought it would make more sense to renovate Mabel Tainter and add on an east wing as well. The questions arise about the Mabel Tainter Library because that is a private building.

Waller said she was unhappy about the City Council's apparent disregard concerning the referendum of November '82 when Menomonie citizens rejected the idea of having a public library by a margin of two to one.

City Council President Glen Schuknecht said, " It was an advisory referendum with no binding committment on the part of the city government either to support it or reject it."

Schuknecht was sensitive to people's concerns about the Mabel Tainter building. For the immediate future he said, "Money we'd been allocating for library services will go to the new library. Money that had been budgeted by the city for support and maintenance will continue to go to Mabel Tainter."

City Manager George Langmack explained the new library construction as a result of the fact that "The Municipal Library Board has found it can, within their financial resources, go ahead with building the new library." He described the Municipal Library Board as an anomaly to city government and called the board semi-autonomous.

Another concern for the protesters was the site's ability to support the foundation of the new library. Schuknecht commented that all the necessary soil studies had been completed to their satisfaction and are available for the public's review.

The protesters also said that there was no need for a public library in Menomonie since there was Mabel Tainter library plus the public school libraries and the UW-Stout library.

Municipal Library Board Director Charles Buelow answered these questions saying, "Menomonie is the largest city in the state without a public library." One of library board's hopes is that the new library will make Menomonie that much more attractive to companies considering moving into the area.

The library board's argument for the new library includes 14 advantages to the new library to go along with 14 reasons they consider

Professor tried in sexual assault

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Robert Wurtz, a professor in the Counseling and Psychological Services Department at UW-Stout, was charged in January with sexually assaulting a 16-year-old girl. That trial, which began Wednesday, October 2, is presently in its second week.

Wurtz was charged with three counts of fourth-degree sexual assault and has been free on a $1,500 signature bond.

Dunn County Circuit Court Judge Donna Muza ruled Monday that statements by Wurtz when under hypnosis could be submitted as evidence. Dunn County District Attorney Michael Furnstahl said these statements will be incriminating.

In addition, Furnstahl has also indicated that testimony involving fondling, oral sex and the victim's emotional suffering will be presented.

Wurtz's attorney, Phillip Steans, said that Wurtz is innocent. A psychologist, who is an expert in hypnosis, will testify that Wurtz's statements under hypnosis were not admissions but a result of guided imagery to help him remember the incident.

Steans stated that the alleged victim's emotional problems were a result of a guilty conscience because of the lies she told about the incident.

The jury is expected to return with a verdict today.

Nigerian students' "Silver Jubilee" marks native country's 25th year of independence

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

On October 1, 1960, Nigeria declared its independence from Great Britain. Stout's Nigerian students celebrated their home country's special day on October 5th at the Commons' South Bay.

Guests were cordially ushered in and seated at 3:00 p.m., and the festivities (appropriately named the "Silver Jubilee") began with the singing of the Nigerian national anthem and a prayer by Reverend Phyllis Averill.

A welcome song beautifully done by Ms. Funmilayo Awotimi was sung in the Nigerian language and required quite a voice range. Awotimi, singing acappella, proved she was up to the task.

Yussuf Dada, President of the Nigerian Students' Association, followed the song with a short speech. Telling listeners that this was not only a celebration, but also an opportunity to share Nigeria's rich and diverse culture, Dada went on to caution his country's leaders about over-importation. He explained that Nigeria's own people are interested in the ability to deliver and perform, and need commitment and a new sincerity. Dada's concluding words brought enthusiastic applause: "Twenty five years is enough time to make progress; let us resolve to make Nigeria a world power in the next twenty five years!"

Nigerian Student Association Advisor Dr. Ellen Fitzgerald was next on the agenda, and although she "came to celebrate, not make a speech," she did compliment the Nigerians, "They make my job easy; they operate the association in a democratic manner."

Chancellor Robert Swanson took over the dais for a few moments to bring official greetings from Wisconsin Governor Anthony Earl and UW System President Kenneth Shaw. Swanson compared the depth of meaning of our Independence Day to that of Nigeria, pointing out that many Nigerians were children at the time of their independence declaration and could remember it, whereas no one in the United States would have personal recollection of our Independence Day.

The celebration continued with Nigerian dances, the first of which was accomplished with much singing and foot-stomping, bringing laughter from the audience. As

Bases in Philippines discussed

Manilla, Philippines- U.S. Ambassador Stephen W. Bosworth indicated that the U.S. has options to its bases in the Philippines and said the facilities would be useless if the country were unstable.

Bosworth said there is an urgent need to strengthen democracy in the Philippines adding that it is threatened by a communist rebellion that is "widespread, better organized and even more committed than previous insurgencies."

Cruise ship hijacked; 420 held

Port Said, Egypt- Palestinian gunmen Monday hijacked an Italian cruise ship carrying 420 people and threatened to blow it up if attacked. Gunmen demanded that Israel free 50 Palestinians.

The Achille Lauro was seized by seven Palestinian commandos carrying firearms and explosives as it sailed from Alexandria, Egypt, to Port Said on the Suez Canal, Egyptian officials reported.

Food stamp hike passes test

Washington D.C.- The House Monday turned aside an effort to remove about $1 billion in food stamp benefit improvements from the long debated 1985 farm bill.

The lawmakers rejected, 238-171, an amendment that would have removed a slight increase in the food stamp benefit calculation and increases in allowances for child care and shelter costs of food stamp recipients.

Court studies anti-bias plan

Washington D.C.- The supreme court opened its 1985-'86 term Monday by announcing that it would conduct a sweeping review of affirmative action plans that the Reagan Administration charges discriminate against whites.

The justices return to the bench on the traditional first Monday in October.

Female FBI agent slain

Phoenix, Az.- The first female FBI agent to die in action apparently was shot by two fellow agents who thought she was the girlfriend of a robbery suspect they had captured, Police Chief Ruben Artega said.

Robin L. Ahrens, native of St. Paul, Minn., was fatally wounded at an apartment complex late Friday, moments after agents arrested Kenneth Barrett in connection with the Sept. 27 robbery of an armoured car courier in Las Vegas. Services for Ahren will be held in Hudson, Wis., where her family lives.

Pregnancy bill OK'd by panel

Madison- A bill to prevent unwanted teen pregnancies was endorsed by an Assembly committee on a 10-3 vote Monday after an amendment requiring parents to be notified of minors' abortions was added.

The bill now moves to the Legislative's Joint Finance Committee. Before the vote, lawmakers were warned that the bill reflected a delicate balance of views and should not be altered substantially.

Perspective

War of words

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Nazi Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels, in 1930's Germany, stated that "We do not talk to say something, but to obtain a certain effect."

The same holds true for the United States and Soviet Union, both of whom are constantly bombarding the world's airwaves with their own versions of the truth.

The American view of the world is presented by the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty.

Washington based Voice of America utilizes satellites, land lines and microwave transmission to beam its message around the globe. Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, both based in Munich, transmit to Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, respectively.

The Soviet view of the world is aired by no less than six radio propoganda divisions.

Radio Moscow is heard in nearly every country around the world, Radio Baku is beamed to the Middle East, and Radio Kiev is heard in Europe and North America.

Radio Tallen is sent to Scandinavia, Radio Tashkent is transmitted to the Middle East and Southeast Asia, while Station "Peace and Progress" is produced in Moscow for potential listeners in China, Latin America, the Middle East and Europe.

American experts believe that the Soviets spend approximately $4 billion per year on swaying world opinion via the airwaves.

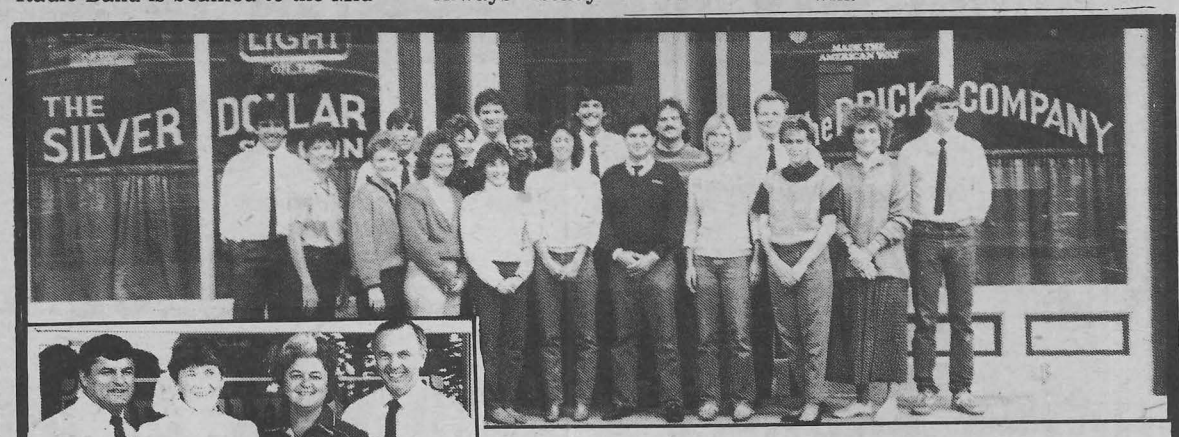
The United States Information Agency (USIA) and other similar American divisions which have jurisdiction over Voice of America, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, have a combined budget which approaches $3 billion per year.

In addition to radio, the two superpowers also engage in written forms of information dissemination.

The Soviets export virtually millions of books and pamphlets. One pamphlet in particular is titled "Always Ready to Defend the Fatherland." Regular subscriptions to Pravda and Izvestia are also made available to other countries.

The United States maintains 135 libraries or reading rooms in 83 nations around the world. Ten different magazines and 28 pamphlets, written in 18 languages, are published. One such pamphlet is titled "Good Neighbors: U.S. Business in Aisa."

When asked in the October 7, 1985 issue of U.S. News & World Report if we were winning the "war of ideas" with the Soviet Union, U.S. Information Agency Director Charles Wick believes that "Despite considerable Soviet efforts, we are winning the hearts and minds of people around the world. Nobody tries to climb the Berlin wall going the other way! People yearn to be governed by consent and to be free to pursue their own way of life. To the extent that they perceive our system as affording that freedom while the other one does not, we will always win."



We at the Silver Dollar Saloon and Brick Co. wish to thank you, the people of Menomonie, for your support and patronage over the last 12 years. Because of this support we've been able to employ over 300 students working their way through college.

THANKS, MENOMONIE, FOR 12 GREAT YEARS!

We think we're somewhat of a tradition in Menomonie and hope to remain so in the future. To thank you we would like to invite you to enjoy our week of Camaraderie at the Silver Dollar (October 7 thru 13).

Dissident blasts Soviet oppression

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Soviet dissident Vladimir Bukovsky said Tuesday night in the Great Hall of the Student Center that there will be no everlasting peace in the world until the Soviet government changes radically and until it ceases to be an oppressive tyranny. "Only together can we achieve peace," Bukovsky said.

Born in the Soviet Union in 1942, Bukovsky spent 12 years in labor camps, prisons and psychiatric hospitals for fighting for human rights. In 1976 he was exchanged for imprisoned Chilean Communist Party Secretary Luis Carvalen Lepe, and in 1977 he became the first Soviet dissident to be received by a U.S. President.

Bukovsky said that the turning point which led to the development of human rights in the Soviet Union was the death of Joseph Stalin which stopped a long spiral of terror. Before Stalin's death nobody could feel safe in the country, he said. "By the time Stalin died, two-thirds of the communist party had been exterminated, and almost the entire ruling body of the central committee had been exterminated."

He said the new leadership of Nikita Kurshkev initiated a slightly more relaxed society. The absence of mass terror plus the uncertainty of authorities not knowing what was to be allowed, created a grey area which people used to their advantage to move about and to do things that the authorities could not react upon immediately, he said.

Bukovsky said the Hungarian revolution in 1956 also led to the growth of the human rights movement. "It showed us that the Soviet regime did not change but continued to practice suppression of other people as well as ourselves. The immeidate impression was as long as the sytem remains the same, its party structure and dominant communist rule regime, the path of Stalin will be respected yet and yet again."

Bukovsky said the following years were marked by an increase in human rights activities until 1968 when Soviet officials actually felt a threat from these developments. "They felt if it continues, it would threaten their monopoly on power, mass media and information, which is very important to totalitarian society."

The decision to invade Czechoslovakia in 1968 was as much aimed at destroying the developments of democratic process there, as it was in the Soviet Union, he said. "The reaction of our movement was pretty strong. Thousands of people protested against the invasion of Czechoslovakia. There were a few people who went so far as to organize a demonstration in Red Square."

Bukovsky said the '70's brought yet another dimension to the human rights movement, identification and support of religion. The Soviet Union forbids many groups of Christianity and controls others, he said.

The final development in the movement came in the signing of the 1975 Helsinki Accords which implied that if the Soviets continued to violate human rights, western countries would not be obliged to develop cultural and econmic relations with them. Bukovski said now the accords are useless because the Soviet Union never complied with its obligations and the western countries are no longer interested in enforcing it.

Bukovsky said in 1980 the Soviet Union clamped down on the movement. "We entered a final stage of decline." He said that coinciding with the invasion of Afganistan and the Solidarity movement in Poland, immigration was stopped, mass arrests were made and a military hysteria was built up.

But Bukovsky doubts that the human rights movement will end in the Soviet Union. "If the spirit of resistence in our people is not broken after sixty-seven years of terror and after many millions of people are killed, it is unlikely to be broken in the foreseeable future."

Community unresponsive toward "Safehouse" project

Barb Caron
News Reporter

As a result of the growing concern of sexual assault on this campus, many organizations on campus have been meeting to discuss what can be done to increase awareness in this area. The Stout Student Association formed the Sexual Assault Prevention Committee to brainstorm on ideas and look for possible solutions to the issue of sexual assault.

"In this committee there were many hard-working individuals, but two students went above and beyond what was asked of them," said Tracey Lea Landis committee chairperson. "Lee Michaels and Cindy Lapidakis, spent many long and hard hours working on a project they entitled 'Safe Houses'."

According to Michaels "'Safe Houses' were developed as a proactive measure to insure the safety of the citizens in this community." the problem of people in distress are the designated houses on each block. The concerned persons are the Stout and Menomonie communities. The distressed could be anyone ranging from small children to the elderly. The associated groups would be the Menomonie Police Department, the Menomonie Chamber of Commerce, the University community, and the United Way.

The program would have a house designated as a "Safe House" on each block in Menomonie. There would be a large neon sign displayed in the window of each of these houses so persons in distress would know they could go to this house and recieve help.

Michaels and Lapidakis worked out an organizational chart to show who would be involved in the "Safe House" program. The answer to Receiving positive reactions from people on campus, Michaels and Lapidakis set up a meeting to present thier "Safe House" program to the Menomonie community. This meeting took place on Monday October 7 at 5:30 p.m. in the Cedarwood room in the Memorial Student Center. Invitations were sent out to many individuals from the Menomonie community to attend this presentation. Besides Michaels and Lapidakis, Chief of Police Beety, Dr. Elaine Fitzgerald, and Dean Samuel Wood were at the meeting. Both Michaels and Lapidakis were upset at the poor turnout.

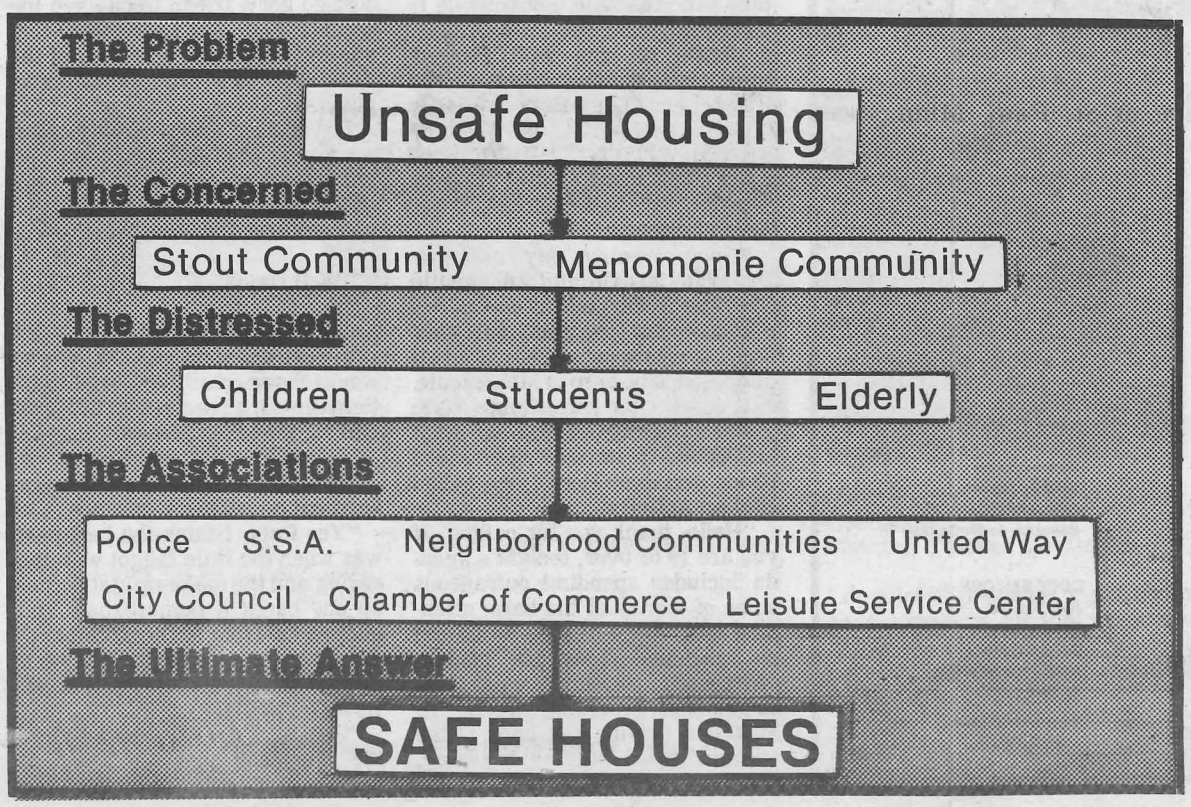
"We invited Jay Schroeder, a student on the Menomonie City Council to attend with no response, the Menomonie School Superintendent with no response, Don Dickman, with no response. We also tried to gear this program towards the elderly with no help from them." Michaels said.

After the presentation the issue of liability was brought up. Lapidakis explained, "The problem is anyone can knock on your door whether they really need help or not. If a person robs your home or assaults you, liability would fall back on the chairpersons of the project. If a distressed person somehow hurts themself in your home, you as the owner of the home would be held liable."



The liability issue isn't the only problem holding this worthwhile project back according to Michaels. "The block has also been an apathetic, reserved, small town attitude. Another problem lies in trusting others. I was shattered that a project like this can't go through to help the community."

"We were both very optimistic and we were let down. We wanted to show the Menomonie community that Stout does want to be involved and not isolate ourselves. I am upset at the lack of interest shown to us by the community. They don't feel there is a need for this project at this time, and those that do feel there is a need fear that it is only a short term need and in working on this project we were looking at a long term need." Lapidakis said.

Is the "Safe House" project dead and buried? According to Lapidakis the project has been put on the back burner for now. "We plan on bringing the idea concept behind 'Safe Houses' to United Council next weekend in Green Lake to see if any other schools have similar programs and to gain ideas and support from the members at United Council." Lapidakis said.

True democracy may be finally realized for students

The President of the United States is chosen by his constituents, the American people.

A United States Senator is elected by his or her constituents, the people of their state.

The mayor of a city is empowered by his or her constituents, the residents of that city.

But at this university students are not afforded the same jurisdictional fairness. The Stout Student Association (SSA) Constitution currently allows non-students, members of the faculty, administration, etc., to vote in SSA elections.

Because non-students obviously have different political priorities, vested interests and views of the world as compared to students, Stout students cannot be fairly governed by student leaders who were chosen via a tainted process.

And non-students could have shaped student government in the last SSA election when only thirteen percent of the student body bothered to vote. Although voter apathy is not excused, this hypothetical should not exist.

Motion USS-16-78 presently before the student senate, moved by Senator Kampen and seconded by Senator Nickels, would amend the SSA Constitution by allowing only students the right to vote in SSA elections.

We applaud Kampen and Nickels for their initiative in taking the vital first step to correct a long overdue imbalance in campus democracy. And we encourage the voting members of the student senate to pass this critical piece of legislation when it is presented for a formal vote on October 22.

Passage of this important constitutional amendment will insure that the non-students of this university will no longer be afforded the advantages a one-way street has to offer.

The Bottom Line

"Late Night" visit

Rich Brueckner

The last thing I remember before passing out, after an early jag that evening, was watching my favorite show. I usually don't remember my dreams but this one was so profound that it woke me up.

"It's Late Night with David Letterman! Tonight, join David and his guest Larry 'Bud' Melman, as they take the NBC Bookmobile to emcee Menomonie's read-a-thon... A battle of wits with the administration and Kenny the Gardener...The Panicky Guy throws a beer party...and A quiz on BRUSH WITH STUPIDITY. And now, a man who thinks degenerates wear nametags — David Letterman!"

"Good evening. My name is David Letterman and welcome to the show. We have a wonderful program for you tonight, ladies and gentlemen. We are just delighted to be here in Menomonie. You know, it's refreshing to see that a university as small as Stout has some of its own specialized phone services. Here's one called Dial an Activity"...

"Hello, thank you for calling. If you are 19 or over, tonight's agenda includes spending outrageous sums of money at the bars, attending loud booze parties, urinating on residents' trees and houses, vandalism, smoking controlled substances, cranking stereos 'til all hours, driving golf balls at the administration building, brawling, trashing restaurants, four-wheeling across the football field, beer sliding, slam-dancing, littering, loitering, and singing off-key.

If you are under 19 you can go to the Student Center and pay $1.00 to rent a lousy pair of bowling shoes, after which you can try to read the lips on the big screen TV since it is too loud to hear anything intelligible in there. Then again, you could just go get a friend to buy you the alcohol that you have been consuming for years regardless of the drinking age and university policies."

David put the receiver down with a gapped smile, "Ladies and gentlemen, please say hello to my good friend, Paul Schaffer. Did you go to college, Paul, no, I mean really?"

"Well David..."

"-Why of course you did, I'll bet you were the kind of student who would have really enjoyed participating in a read-a-thon like they had right here in Menomonie."

"Did you watch that 60 Minutes segment on AIDS?"

"Yes Paul, I think the best part was when the little faggot with the earing and the make-up stated that no one cares if homosexuals and addicts die from AIDS...Yeah buddy, that's his own hair! But on a lighter note, it's time for BRUSH WITH STUPIDITY."

"Question -1: Why does Kenny the Gardener chew up much of Stouts turf with snow-plowing equipment? Is it...(A) To keep him busy during the summer months replanting and watering sod? (B) To discourage students from making snowballs from the muddy piles? Or (C) Because that's what his boss considers doing a thorough job."

"-2: What is the most exciting activity one can delve into at the new Student Center? Is it (A) Playing video games? (B) Shooting billiards? or (C) Marvelling at the Mick Jagger poster that has all those comfy chairs in front of it."

"-3: What smells worse? Is it (A) The vomit stench outside the LLC computer lab? (B) A new library by a polluted lake? or (C) A sewage plant strategically placed upwind from the city."

"-4: Why don't they sell hot dogs at Stout football games? Is it (A) Because there's a higher markup on brats? (B) Because hot dogs are normally just associated with baseball? Or (C) Because the concession manager is unaware that this is America."

"And now, as promised, the Panicky Guy beer party...NO illegally sold cups, NO music, NO boisterous guests, NO FUN; but best of all — NO Big Brother-City legislation is at all compromised in the process. Now I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, is this a great country or what?"

At that point a commercial came on and I woke up to go to the bathroom. Goodnight folks, drive safely!

Crash and Burn

Rock in a hard place

Matt Kalina

Talk about looking out of place, ultra-flamboyant Dee Snider of Twisted Sister appeared in the Capitol building two weeks ago.

Yes, it's true, lead screamer Dee Snider appearing in jeans and a trashed T-shirt and his usual raunchy gnarled locks of dirty yellow and jet black hair, testified before the Senate Commerce Committee defending the lyrics of rock-and-roll.

He was not the only one either. Clean-cut but mind-blown Frank Zappa, and John Denver, the all-American boy, were there attempting to dispel the evils of their music.

Recently a group of Washington wives including Tipper Gore, wife of Senator Albert Gore Jr. and Susan Baker, wife of Treasury Secretary James Baker have joined arms in a group called Parents Music Resource Center (PMRC) saying rock lyrics are wicked, atrocious, dirty, dispicable and smutty.

Hey ladies, you forgot disrespectful, evil, obscene, sinful and vulgar. Add those to your list.

They say that rock music has gone too far and that the record industry is cashing in on pure shock value. They are blaming heavies like Judas Priest, AC/DC, Motley Crue, Twisted Sister, and pop stars, Prince, Madonna, and believe it or not, Michael Jackson, to name just a few.

It's funny they didn't include any hard-core groups like the Dead Kennedies or Drunk Injuns. If they ever attained the lyrics to some of these types, I'm sure that the PMRC would have to put a few new adjectives on their tally.

They say that the lyrics to many rock songs glorify not just plain-old sex and violence but everything from rape, sado-masochism, and incest, to suicide and the occult.

In other words they call it "porn rock."

What really bothers me is that these Washington wives actually at one time wanted to impose inane ratings on the sordidness of lyrics of music, such as V for violence, X for explicit lyrics, O for occult and D/A for promotion of drugs and alcohol.

Why stop there? How about P for political, T for tobacco reference. Let's get totally ridiculous and have B for bikini and S for fetal matter reference.

I don't want some bridge-playing mothers from Cleveland deciding what I should be jamming.

Some record companies at the insistence of the Washington wives and at their own discretion, put warning labels on certain albums: PARENTAL GUIDANCE — EXPLICIT LYRICS.

How can a bunch of Washington wives impose what they view as tasteful music on the general population of the United States? I can only assume that they haven't heard of the terms freedom of speech and censorship.

Who will be used to detect the presence of the so-called sleazy lyrics? I don't particularily desire a bunch of naive PTA members from Montana or some overly paranoid group of bridge-playing mothers from Cleveland deciding what I should be jamming on my stereo.

I say let the buyer beware. As my version of the ancient saying goes, if you don't want to see it, don't turn the page. Same thing goes for music. If you don't like crude rock lyrics, turn your radio to one of those public broadcasting stations or lay down some bucks for a Barry Manilow LP.

In the process of attempting to protect her kids from the overpoweringly harmful lyrics of such bands as W.A.S.P., Tipper and a bunch of her born-again right-wingers will undoubtedly mislabel, and miscategorize a great deal of significant music. As soon as music begins to be labeled, certain records with ratings will not be found in stores or heard on the radio.

In a democratic society no one has the privilege of determining if a certain song, book or magazine is worthwhile or worthless. The ultimate decision rests with the buyer. But the Washington wives feel that they have the right. Forget it, ladies, you don't.

In final examination, maybe the Washington wives want to obliterate all lyrics from tunes. You know, songs without words.

But although some lyrics approach the mysterious valley of vileness, I think songs by such deplorable groups as Van Halen, Led Zeppelin, Suicidal Tendancies and even rockin' John Denver are much more socially redeeming than Musak.

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

Dear Patty,

So they say in education "no question is a dumb question". My curiosity is one which concerns your position. Just what does the Landlord Tenant Service do and what kinds of services do you offer, oh, and where is your office located?

Sincerely, John

Dear John,

Great question! The Landlord Tenant Service was established in 1976 to provide the off-campus student tenant with services and information to effectively assist the student in their stay here at UW-Stout.

One of the most used services would be the housing list we provide year round. This consists of area landlords with available licensed housing. There is a brief description of the property, number of occupants needed, prices and the phone number of individuals to contact. Students may also use this list to advertise rental spaces which are available. For example, if they're looking for one or two more people to fill their apartment.

The Landlord Tenant Service has many helpful publications on hand for anyone to pick up and read. They range from a tenant handbook covering definitions of rental terms, where to find housing, tenant and landlord rights, the lease, security desposit, problems during occupancy, and where to go for help. This particular column was put together through our service. You may also check out with your student ID, a self-help manual for tenants, published by the Tenant Resource Center. Inc. 1985.

We offer advice and consultation to both students and landlords. Many times we are asked to be a mediator between the two.

Housing is one of the basics of life. The quality of our housing, to a large extent, determines the quality of the life we lead. Rental housing comes with its own complete set of rules and practices, and of course problems, which the tenant should understand and be prepared to face. The Landlord Tenant Service should prove to be a valuable asset to any tenant or landlord interested in proper rental and housing standards required by law.

Oh yes, our service is located in the SSA Office located in the New Student Center, Room 123.

Sincerely,
Patty Strassman,
Landlord Tenant Rep.

If you have a question or concern regarding rental property, drop it off at the SSA Office Room 123 in the New Student Center.

CAMPUS SLANT/ What non-alcoholic activities do students participate in?

Stacey Urban,
Sophomore,
Interior Design

I go to Eau Claire on weekends to see my boyfriend. I also do a lot of shopping and I go to the on-campus movies.

Brent Payne,
Senior,
Business Administration

A lot of times I'll go to Eau Claire to see my girlfriend for the weekends. Friday nights I get together with some friends and go to a dorm room, have some popcorn, sit around and talk. Once in a while I'll play volleyball and a little tennis. I duck hunted on the opener last weekend.

John Moody,
Senior,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

I travel to the Twin CIties and other places just to get out of town. I work a lot at a restaurant and I hunt small game. I don't do too much sports now but I lift weights once in a while.

Chris Maday,
Freshman,
Clothing, Textiles and Design

I do a lot of phone calling. I try to go somewhere on the weekends like to the Cities to visit friends. I play tennis if it's nice out and go to movies if I can afford it.

Alston Stoddard,
Senior,
Industrial Technology

I play volleyball, soccer and indoor games. Sometimes I go to movies and football games. I also go shopping in Minneapolis and Eau Claire.

Date rapes present a new campus concern; committees take action

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

Date rape seems to be a topic of concern on Stout's campus, as is evident by three meetings held here Monday, October 7.

The Residence Hall Association, interested in forming an escort service, met in the Union's southeast ballroom at 5:00 p.m.

Lee Micheals and Cindy Lapidakas co-chaired a meeting of the Safe House Committee at 5:30 p.m. in the Student Union's Cedarwood Room. Safe houses would be specially marked community residences that would allow a passerby in trouble to knock and obtain assistance.

Women in Management presented a seminar on rape at 7:00 p.m. in Room 321 of the Applied Arts Building.

Add to these meetings the recent "Take Back the Night" program and the formation of the Sexual Assault Prevention Committee, and it appears Stout is not only concerned but active in addressing the issue of date rape.

Is there need for concern? Judy Spain answered that question at Women in Management's rape seminar. Reading from the research of Dr. Barry Burkhart of Auburn University, she informed a room packed full of listeners that when asked, "Have you ever been raped," two to five percent of Burkhart's respondents replied in to have sex against your will," 20% replied "Yes." Nearly 80% reported being victims of unwelcome sexual contact, ranging from unwanted fondling to battery. Burkhart discovered 600 victims of date rape; only four of these however, reported the incident to the police.

Burkhart discovered that most date rapes took place during the freshman year of college or the senior year of high school. Most rapes were clustered on weekends and on the assailant's turf. Most assailants used verbal threats and/or their own physical strength to complete the assault.

Judy Spain also read from the research of Dr. Mary Ross. Ross's findings were similar; in addition, however, she also surveyed men and found that 1 out of 12 acknowledged completing acts that would fall in the date rape category. None of these men felt they were rapists.

Why didn't they feel they were rapists? One can only speculate. Perhaps they believed one of the many myths surrounding rape presented by Fleming Hall Director Betty Klotz at the seminar: "When she says no, she means yes." "A man has to show who's boss." "Women like rape." "Women who are raped deserve it because of what they were wearing or how they were acting."

Or perhaps they have a different view than the victim of what constitutes consent. Wisconsin State Statutes define consent as words or overt actions by a person indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact.

Menomonie Police Officer Gail Everts, also at the seminar, stressed, "When you say no, mean no."

Menomonie Police Chief Dennis Beety, interviewed earlier, suggested couples communicate early on sexual limits so there are no misunderstandings later. Sometimes the use of alcohol can promote a series of crossed signals; Chief Beety advises the avoidance of this type of situation and says to females, "Realize the potential for events to go beyond the ability to control them."

New school starting date?

In a move aimed to help Wisconsin's tourism industry, the State Assembly passed a bill requiring Wisconsin schools to start classes after September 1. For several years people in the tourism industy have requested that the bill be passed and allow them to keep the thousands of students who work in tourism-related industries through the heavy Labor Day weekend. The bill still has to pass the Senate Education committee and the full Senate before going in front of Gov. Tony Earl.

Some of the ramifications of this bill include revisions of the school calender with the distinct possibility of the first semester ending after the Christmas vacation. If you have any questions, you can call the legislative hotline at 1-800-362-9696 and leave a message for Rep. Richard Shoemaker.

Bill aims to move administration

State Senator James Harsdorf (R-Beldenville) has announced legislation that he says will strengthen the voice of all the campuses within the UW system. It would move the central administration of the system from Madison and place it at a site that doesn't have a UW campus. The bill directs the Board of Regents to develop a plan for relocating the central administration.

Truman Scholarship Foundation

Sophomores interested in a career in government service are invited to apply for a 1986 Harry S. Truman Scholarship. Established by Congress in 1975, the Foundation operates an ongoing program to aid students who possess leadership skills applicable to government service.

The scholarship covers eligible expenses up to $5,000 per year for the junior, senior and two years of graduate study. To be eligible, students must be full-time sophomore pursuing a baccalaureate degree, have a "B" average and be a U.S. citizen. Interested students should submit a letter of application, a current transcript, and a 600-word essay discussing a public policy issue of their choice to Robert Schuler, English Department in room 126C of Harvey Hall by October 28, 1985.

SSA plans prevention

Barb Caron
News Reporter

With their busy schedule and numerous items on the agenda, the Stout Student Association (SSA) Senate meeting conducted their student-related business with their usual flair.

Under Open Forum, the Sexual Assault Prevention Committee brought their recommendations to the senate on ways to increase student awareness on the problems of sexual assault. The committee presented four plans of action to the senate.

Fleming Hall Director Betty Klotz informed senate of a program that deals with acquaintance rape. Included in this program are the differences between high school and college dating and the different myths that surround dating. A video tape entitled "It Still Hurts" will be shown that includes an interview with a date rape victim. After the tape is shown persons attending the program will break into groups and discuss any feelings or concerns they have. This program will be presented in the Residence Halls first, then it will be open to any interested organizations and off-campus students.

"We hope that this program will educate the students that date rape does frequently occur, what to do if it happens to you, and where you can turn for help," Klotz said.

The second recommendation brought before the senate was presented by Holly Peuse, Inter-Residence Hall Council President. Peuse talked about the escort service being set up in the Residence Halls. She also informed senate that an Ad Hoc committee was formed at the last IRHC meeting to look into already existing escort services and policies in the Resident Halls to see what has worked in the past and why some services have failed.

The third recommendation was presented be Off-Campus Senator Lee Michaels. He and HKMC Senator Cindy Lapidakis have been working on a "Safe House" project where every block in Menomonie would have a house designated as "safe" where people in distress could turn for help. Michaels said that he and Lapidakis presented their idea to members of the Menomonie community and hit a "brick wall." The issue of liability came up along with what Michaels described as apathy on the part of the community.

George Schmutz informed senate of a self defense program for women that is available. According to Schmutz, "The program teaches women how to hit, and where to hit in an attack situation. This program also gives women confidence that they won't be totally helpless if they are ever attacked."

Any students or organizations interested in the above programs can contact the program directors named above.

In her President's report JoAnn Prange informed senate that this year if organizations want to lobby on their behalf regarding reallocations they must lobby to individual senators or lobby at Senators Caucus on Tuesday.

Vice President of Financial Affairs Tom Schwalbach went over budget reallocations and the recommendations his committee made. An extra $10,541.79 was added to the money to be reallocated from a reserve fund. Chancellor Robert Swanson had requested that this money be used to buy furniture for the SSA office. The Finance Committee decided to use this money to benefit all students and put it with the other money to be reallocated. A total of $45,058 was reallocated to organizations this year.

Off-Campus Senator Lee Michaels moved to accept the Financial Committee's recommendations for this year's budget reallocations. This motion is automatically tabled for one week.

Ann Warmka, Media Advertising Coordinator informed senate that the Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities applications are available in the SSA office. Juniors and seniors with a grade point average of 2.8 or better are eligible to apply.

Landlord Tenant Representative Patty Strassman went over the agenda for the senate retreat this weekend. The majority of senate including both advisors will be attending. The weekend will focus on future plans for senate and goal setting.

Library

Mabel Tainter inadequate.

The most significant change from the old library to the new will be the increase in total square footage from 2700 feet at Mabel Tainter to 12,240 feet at the city library.

Next in importance is the adequate provision for public parking that has been made. All services will be located on one floor at the new library, making it easily accessible to the handicapped. The new library will allow browsing which was unavailable at Mabel Tainter.

The expanded services at the new library will include "Audio-visual facilities, viewing rooms, art collections, television, public meeting room, Educational Telephone Network and other facilities representing modern library services."

In the past there was controversy about whether or not Menomonie should put a convention center on the site of the new public library. A proposal was made for a convention center by an out-of-town developer, but he was unable to get the needed financial backing to get started.

Everyone from City Manager George Langmack to Read-a-Thon chairman Kathy Philips said the city never could support the developer's plans because they simply hadn't done the needed feasability studies to establish the viability of their plans.

Philips said the library board never competed with the convention developer for the land, but that the convention developer's plans failed of their own accord. "If the builders wanted to have a convention center there there's enough land. But, they didn't have the financing and it would end up costing the city a lot more than they were willing to give up."

How much more would the convention center have cost? Steve VandeBerg the owner of the Holiday Manor Inn said, "He was looking at $2.25 million total investment and I think there was only like $200,000 of his own money." So the total risk on Menomonie's behalf would have been $2 million while the projected cost for the new library is less than $1.2 million.

Meanwhile, VandeBerg's planned expansion of his property to be completed this spring is hoped to bring added business to Menomonie. VandeBerg said something had to be done. "We've had no growth in this business for the last three or four years. We feel stagnant. We do need to look at other areas we need to bring in some business."

VandeBerg is unhappy that City Hall didn't approach him before deciding to attract a non-local developer. "If they needed the facility, why didn't they come to us and say, 'what do you think, and maybe we could work with these local people rather than buying the land and then trying to bring in a developer.'"

His proposed expansion is for "an indoor pool with poolside rooms, about 24 more rooms and meeting room capacity of 300 people, subdividable into four small rooms. I think the average group would be 50 people or less."

VandeBerg sees his expansion succeeding because, "I don't really think Menomonie is a viable community when it comes to conventions. Small meetings, groups, people coming to Stout, small business groups, that's a whole other ball game."

Firemen promote National Fire Prevention Week October 6-12

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

October 6-12 is designated as this year's National Fire Prevention Week. This coincides with the anniversary of the great Chicago fire which is credited to have been started by Mrs. O'Leary's cow on October 8, 1871. This week has been commemerated nationally since 1924, and Menomonie does its share by offering fire station tours to groups by reservation, or to individuals anytime during regular business hours. Department members are also traveling to local grade schools to show films and give talks on fire prevention and safety.

Chuck Vind, Menomonie's Fire Chief for the past 5 1/2 years, has seen a noticeable increase in the number of "runs to Stout" this year. "We've been there at least 85 times already this year," Vind stated. Reasons for this include: the new alarm systems still have bugs in them, false alarms, and people pulling the alarms. This was a big problem in CKTO hall last year. According to Vind, the person who was caught doing this was fined $4200 in restitutions to the fire department in addition to the university imposed fine, and the person was expelled from the university system for two years.

Each time the fire department goes on call, besides the people already on duty at the station, up to 16 volunteers come racing into action from the local and Stout community. If the fire is accidental the bill for the use of the equipment and manpower is either picked up by the city or by the rural tax payers, as a part of their property tax. If it is non-accidental, or caused by negligence, $350 in restitution is charged to the persons involved.

The Menomonie fire department is really two seperate departments in one organization. The people involved are the same, but the difference is where the funding comes from. If it is within the city limits the city pays for it. If it outside of the city it comes under the rural fire commission's jurisdiction.

The fire department equipment includes 4 engines that are used to pump water, 1 aerial ladder (snorkle) truck, 2 water tankers that carry water to the fire in areas without hydrants, and a brush truck used in fighting grass fires. The department also owns a rescue boat used on the lake.

The full-time firefighters work 24 hour shifts one day on, one day off. Every third shift they get four days off. This comes out to about 56 hours a week average for the entire year. While at the station the crew keeps busy by checking equipment, doing routine building maintanence, and washing and testing the equipment.

Chief Vind stresses that if you are renting off-campus that it is both a city ordinance and a state law that fire extinguishers and smoke alarms are in your house or apartment. If you have any hazards within your place contact the department and they will come to your residence at your convenience and inspect for rule violations. "The lease you signed is two-way binding," said Vind. "The landlord can't raise your rent for repairs he legally has to make, so why not live in someplace safe instead of a dump?"

Vind also has some hints for residence hall dwellers. Fire alarms should be kept plugged in at all times, hallways should be kept clear so that orderly exiting can take place, and if you must use multi-plug adapters use the type with the built-in circuit breakers already installed.

Committee seeks spirit for Stout events

Rich Langberg
News Editor

The bleachers are two-thirds empty despite the fact that the Stout team is winning. The extraordinary music being put out by the symphony orchestra is only heard by 35 people in Harvey Hall Auditorium. Is there a problem with the way the events were publicized, or is it something deeper then that?

Some administrators, teachers and faculty think that there is a problem with school spirit here at Stout. There has been a committee formed that is trying to deal with this issue. Formally titled, "—niversity, all that is missing is you," it has been dubbed the school spirit committee.

"The committee was set up because attendance at sporting events and university activities just wasn't there," said committee chairman Lucy Nicolai, the director of student activities. "We want to increase attendance and participation at all university events."

There is a wide cross section of people involved with the group including Athletic Director Warren Bowlus, SSA President JoAnn Prange, Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Duane Bauer and many more. They are working together to try and increase community involvement as well as student spirit.

One of the mains objectives of the group is to "Design promotional activities to stimulate greater participation of the Stout community and the citizens of the Menomonie area." This comes from the proposal that Nicolai and Bowlus drew up in a request for a $14,314, two-year grant from the Stout University Foundation. This week the committee received the crushing news that their proposal had been turned down.

"We were in a tough race with a lot of other good proposals," said Prange. "Some were on their second chance and had been rewritten."

Bowlus added that, "Our proposal was well conceived on all points; it benefitted a lot of students. We will probably resubmit it in February."

The committee definitely isn't going to give up, and will be looking for alternative means of financing in the future. Right now, their main goal is to increase student spirit at the biggest school event of the year; Homecoming.

For the week before the big football game, the committee is working with other groups such as the Special Events commission to help facilitate the Homecoming events. The theme of this year's Homecoming is "Take a Chance," and will feature a casino on Saturday, Oct. 26 in the Grandview Terrace in the Memorial Student Center.

On Thursday, Oct. 24, the committee is setting up a pep rally for the football team. Coach Kamish will introduce his starting lineup, and will try and get the fans pumped up. Before hand, there will be skits put on by faculty and students of Stout. If you are interested in putting on a skit, contact Tese Stellick, at 232-1114 before Oct. 17.

The day of the game, the committee is helping out with the annual homecoming parade, which will run from the Dunn County Rec Park to the Johnson Fieldhouse. Patti Buth, the president of the University Programming Board will help place balloons all along the route of the parade, which will start at 11:00 a.m. She also brought up the idea of placing footprints in paint along the route similar to what the cheerleaders were doing on campus, and Bob Hoage, Head of Campus Security said he would check into it with the city.

Bowlus volunteered his concession stand so that after the parade there will be a "Bluedevil Bash," with food and refreshments for sale and possibly entertainment from the Stout pep band. This will run until 1:00 p.m., with the game vs. Platteville starting at 1:30.

Halftime will see sky divers hurling themselves from 10,000 feet, the first 5,000 without the use of their parachutes, onto Nelson Field. Also featured will be the Stout Pom-Pon squad and the introductions of this year's Homecoming King and Queen winners.

Admission to the game is $1.00 with student ID, but in another spirit gimmick, if you come dressed as the Stout mascot. the Bluedevil, you will be let in free. Get out your horns!

Although the rejection of the proposal casts some doubt over the future of the group, there is still hope. Prange said "It is possible to look into corporate sponsorship of some kind, or maybe an addition to the activity or segregated fees." In any case, the committee feels that there is a problem, and they hope to be able to continue to try and deal with it.

Stout professor gives fast food new taste

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Craig Schowalter, a professor at the University of Wisconsin Stout, has been working with the fast food industry in creating ethnic menus that are nutritionally superior to the traditional fast food meals.

He began his research with surveys and a focus group made up of both usual and noneaters of Oriental food. 60 percent of 1500 people in a survey showed that their diets had changed due to health concerns. Since the menu was an Oriental one, he faced the problems of the public accepting ethnic food as fast food, what ingredients would be acceptable, and how healthy consumers perceived ethnic foods to be.

The next step involved looking at a computer profile of twenty nutrients in a typical fast food meal consisiting of a hamburger, french fries, and a soft drink. The goal was to create a meal that would beat that profile, especially in the areas of cholesteral, sodium, and calories. This was done through a trial and error process. After four months, a menu with a good nutrient profile and an acceptable flavor level that fit the preset cost criteria was created.

Schowalter said, "This menu is nutritionally superior to a traditional fast food meal and has broad acceptability," but he also admitted that Oriental fast food wasn't up to the level of a restaurant's. He said, "Our ultimate goal is to be acceptable to the general fast food eater and not offensive to a traditional oriental food eater. This type of menu is designed to be an alternative to the hamburger meal."

Schowalter said, "Our last research has shown that fast food users would prefer Chinese food many times over hamburgers" and "this (Oriental food) is one area that is showing growth and potential." The future of this area depends on how often fast food eaters will substitute Oriental food for traditional fare and where the franchises are located.

"In order to be successful, we need the frequency of substitution to be at least twelve times a month," said Schowalter. "Franchises also need to be located near the traditional franchises. Present chains have selected sites that are destination sites--you have to drive to them."

Schowalter is a director of a Chinese fast food company called "Nankin Express". They are currently reorganizing to position themselves better in the market. If the results of a fourteen million dollar federal study at the University of Minnesota shows that the public will respond favorably to sodium labeling, Nankin Express will be the only fast food franchise that will meet the accepted criteria.

Schowalter has been a professor at Stout for three years and is currently working full time. He is also active outside the University. In addition to being a director for Nankin Express, he is also workin on an MBA in financial management and does small business consulting. Lee Nicholls, the department head, said, "He is an accurate observer of industry trends and research and development opportunities. He has a unique and personable style in the classroom and the ability to work with any level in the department or in industry."

"SILVER JUBILEE"

Nigerians

master of ceremonies, Ibrahim Galadimawa said, "One needs a lot of energy to perform these dances!" The next dance consisted of more fluid movements. Both were accompanied by music, at times a combination of stringed and percussion instruments and at other times a mix of percussions and woodwinds.

The dancers gave the audience a break in which to look at displays and taste Nigerian dishes. The buffet-style meal consisted of a rice and vegetable dish, roast pork, fried rounds of bread (appearance and taste were similar to the American "doughnut hole"), and small kabobs consisting of spiced beef, onion, green pepper, and tomato.

Display items included: carved calabash (gourds), campara (colorfully tie-dyed fabric that is used to make shirts and dresses), handmade zipper bags (similar to small briefcases and made of leather, snakeskin, or hand-woven cloth), hand-woven cloth hats, and hand-carved wooden plaques.

The display was dominated by pictures of Nigeria: it's cities, schools, industries, etc. As one of the hosts explained: "People here think we sleep in trees! We have many beautiful cities, just like you do. We also have many universities. There are 19 states in Nigeria and each has at least one university, some have more. One of the major ones has a student population of 20,000. So we don't come here because we have no university of our own - we come here because it is a chance to go to school and learn a different culture at the same time."

The dancers then came back on stage, followed by G.A. Ajadi singing a short song.

The high point of the event arrived with the fashion parade. These garments were works of art in themselves - beautifully colored and many were hand-woven. Many of the men wore large gowns with lace insets and either a matching tunic or a pair of loose-fitting trousers underneath. Others wore either a lace shirt over a long tunic or a caftan.

Women wore dresses either of lace or hand-woven material, some with skillfully tied head gear and others with headbands. Beads and earrings were also displayed.

A photo session concluded the fashion parade, after which Nigerian Student Association Vice-president Godwin Akindale thanked the audience and Malam Aliyu Musa closed with a prayer.

"Whose Life" poses intriguing questions

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

Using an innovative set design together with the fine acting performance of Andrew B. McDonough in the lead role as Ken Harrison in "Whose Life is it Anyway?," University Theater presents a thought provoking play revealing man's various perceptions of life and death.

Review

This Tony Award winning play by Brian Clark uses humor to balance the harsh reality of Ken Harrison's distress as a man who remains hospitalized after suffering a severed spinal cord in a car accident.

Ken is distressed because he sees that "Technology has taken over for human will," and he lacks the dignity of having any choice concerning his course of treatment.

Ken is sensitive to the lifeless manner in which hospital staff members treat him. The sterile, non-emotional manner with which Ken is treated is highlighted by the stark contrast between the blacks and whites predominating the stage setting.

UW-Stout's new technical director Dr. James-Michael Miller believes this set ranks among the most outstanding technical stage designs ever created here. "We have chosen to represent the essence of Ken Harrison's situation on our stage — the artificial and sterile womb to which he has returned, from which he seeks to be "reborn" into a world which is both real and fatal.

"His umbilicals, his CRT and IV sustenance, predominate the space, as does the omnipresent reminder that here, in the 20th century, life is defined as a moving blip on a glowing screen."

Interesting contrasts occur on stage between the characters. Each character has a perspective on Ken Harrison that is unique to them. The most striking contrast occurs between Dr. Michael Emerson, played by David Kiff, and Dr. Joan Scott played by Katie Redeker.

Dr. Emerson is older and more conventional. Kiff has gone so far in his performance as to make Dr. Emerson appear almost maniacal in his medically meticulous manner.

There's no doubting Dr. Emerson's abilities as a physician. There is a recurrent question about his ability to be human. His first scene with Ken Harrison reveals his insensitivity to him. Dr. Emerson enters Ken's room with Dr. Scott and proceeds to review Ken's medical condition as though Ken weren't even there.

Dr. Scott, possibly the lesser doctor but assuredly the greater human being, is keenly aware of Ken's concerns about his situation. Dr. Scott, as played by Redeker, may seem cool to Ken at first but she warms to him as she realizes there is much more to the man than his medical condition.

It is interesting watching their emotional relationship develop yet there are times you wish that Redeker could give McDonough more to play off of in their dialogues.

Ken Harrison, bed-ridden and immobile except for his ability to move his head during the play, ends up being the most human of characters except for John the orderly who's well played by Bobby Alexander. Not surprisingly, John and Ken form a strong friendship because John treats Ken as a person and not as a subject to be patronized or pitied.

John talks to Ken in a relaxed fashion as they discuss things much as anyone else would. Ken responds to his time talking with John as a man who's just been given a refresher course on what it's like to be alive.

Things come to life whenever John comes onstage. He's a lively contrast to the quietly efficient people working in the hospital who act as if they would violate some sacred law if they smiled or let on in any way that they were concerned about Ken as a person. These workers only depress Ken into saying, "I don't want to become happy by becoming the computer section of a complex machine."

Other stars in "Whose Life?" include Patty Dellabella as the efficient Sister Anderson with "the stainless steel heart" and Sandy King as the young nurse in training, Kay Sadler, who is confused by the contradictory lessons on life she receives from Ken, John and Sister Anderson.

Kerry Henderson plays Ken's solicitor Philip Hill, and Howard Hazen gives a sensitive portrayal of Judge Millhouse who must make sense of the conflicting testimony on whether or not Ken should have the right to determine whether he shall live or die.

"Whose Life is it Anyway?" opens at Harvey Hall Auditorium this Thursday evening at 8 p.m. There will also be shows Friday and Saturday night at 8 p.m. and Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m.

This play isn't recommended if you're merely looking for a good time. It's best to approach "Whose Life?" with an open mind and a desire to explore significant questions about the human condition.

Alumni art exhibit displays well-executed extremes

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Eight charcoal brickettes and a terra cotta sheep's head coated with wax. Well fine.

Well dear reader, you might think to yourself, it must be a cult. First they torch the charcoal and melt the face off the sheep while dancing to Hungarian violin rhapsodies of Bela Bartok.

The wax melts revealing the likeness of a famous TV car salesman, Honest Bernie Bernu, High Priest of Culture and Propheteer of the New Age.

Well, not exactly. It's the 20 Year Commemorative Art Department Alumni Exhibition. 1966 — 1986.

So it's 1985 you say. OK. So what? Just play along. The Art Department is marking its 20th year with a show of select alumni who are practising artists.

They won't really melt the face off that sheep.

The exhibition has one strong initial effect on the viewer. It exemplifies diversity. It has a secondary impact as well. It says that more radical statements catch your eye first.

The provocative pastel ceramics of Nancy Blum really grab your attention. So does the colorful wax-over-terra cotta sheep's head of Julie Dierauer.

And the eight charcoal brickettes that dangle from a black and white dot matrix photostat of Kurt Wold.

"What is so radical about charcoal. Nothing when it's in the grill. Pretty common stuff...they all look alike to me.

Hang them from a poster-size blow-up of a cryptic, near-reverse image and they become objects of scrutiny and you are the central scrutinizer.

"It might be Kurt's sense of humor, having that dirty black charcoal hitting against my clean white wall," said gallery director Ed Wong. That could be. The piece is called "Examination."

On a stand, alone in the corner, is "Sheep's Head" by 1978 graduate Dierauer. This Minneapolis resident has been working on wax and latex patinas for terra cotta pieces.

I'm not sure why this piece fascinates me as much as it does. Maybe it's the paradoxical sensations of seeing a life-size sheep's head colored with orange, blue, white, lemon yellow, lime, turquoise, lavender, red and black crayon marks. Maybe it's that forever-dopey sheep expression and the Dumbo ears. Maybe it's the fact that the head shape is mounted on a like-colored brick as if it were some sacred ritual worship totem.

—The exhibition has one strong initial effect on the viewer. It exemplifies diversity.—

I wouldn't mind seeing a whole sheep in this style, or a flock of Dierauer sheep. But then, who's counting?

The other extremist in the show is Nancy Blum, who was recently featured in Stoutonia vol. 76, no. 5.

Blum is a 1979 grad currently working in Menomonie. There must be some sexual reference in her work. Sexual symbolism is not unheard of in modern art.

One piece is an ensemble affair made up of a pair of pastel colored "hollow, studded protruberences," (which are words for otherwise words), sheathed in more of the same. These are set into lightly tinted plexiglass tubes surrounded by six lusterous volleyball size spheres out of which "grow" strands of nylon filament. You decide.

Blum's strength is her mixture of inference, and a penchant for elaborate, meticulous detail, abundant but not superfluous.

I won't even try to explain her other piece which hangs from the ceiling.

The show has an interesting mix of expressions and styles, a variety of statements, ranging from calculated frenzy to quiet repose. There are two artists whose works span a defined conceptual polarity.

One is Dierauer. Dramatically divergent from her panchromatic sheep's head, she also exhibits a work of graceful contemplation.

Mounted on another brick of identical proportions, she offers a piece called "Figurine." This small gray patina terra cotta is the form of a woman resting in a lounge chair form-fit to the figure in graceful flowing lines.

The nude figure has feet together, legs together, and hands clasped on the lap. The head is erect creating an image serene yet alert.

Another pair of pieces of implied polarity are the dinner sets by Bill Bouillard.

Loving relationships probed by Buscaglia

Beth Reid
Contributing Writer

How do you define a loving relationship? What qualities are necessary for relating? How does our behavior affect the development of a fulfilling relationship? These are just a few of the questions addressed by Leo Buscaglia in his latest book "Loving Each Other."

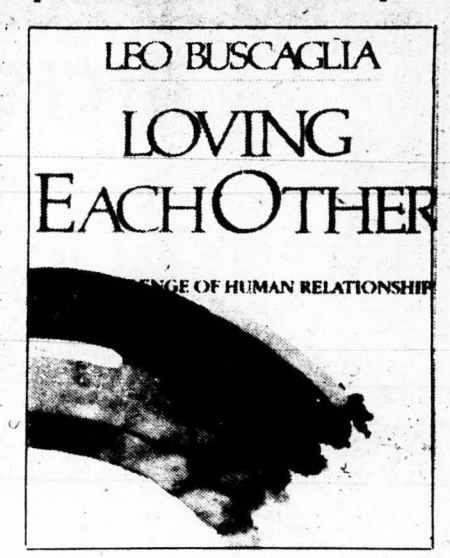
The book does not offer any hard, fast answers, but rather examines the complex nature involved in loving each other, "the dynamic and ever-changing nature of two or more unique and whole individuals agreeing to emerge and blend in long-term commitment."

Our lives are a long series of relationships, both good and bad. "Loving Each Other" is about love, tenderness, compassion, sharing and relating. Although these qualities are vital, we spend little time developing these behaviors. Learning to live with and love others requires skills. In his book, Buscaglia offers ideas and behaviors to develop as we grow in our relationships.

"Loving Each Other" also contains results of an extensive survey on relationships. Chapters of the book discuss the qualities people felt were most conducive to the development of love and growth in a relationship. These qualities include communication, affection, forgiveness, and honesty.

Other chapters look at those qualities considered to be the most destructive in relating. The destructive qualities include jealousy, unforgiving, dishonesty, and lack of communication. Buscaglia looks at each of these qualities in depth in order to understand and learn to deal with them.

Another chapter of the book looks at responses to the question, "How do you define a loving relationship?" We are all an active part of many loving relationships, with those of the opposite sex, family members and friends. Yet few of us take the time to consider the dynamics of what makes some relationships bloom, while others die. Buscaglia suggests that each of us define our own loving relationships. The theory behind this is that how we define the relationship should coincide with how the other person defines the relationship.



Finally, "Loving Each Other" offers some "solicited advice." Respondants to the survey gave some ideas which they felt might help in the development of a fulfilling relationship.

Leo Buscaglia, Ph.D., is a Professor of Education at the University of Southern California. He is a sought-after lecturer and has frequently appeared on both network and public television. Some of his best-selling books include "Living, Loving, and Learning," "Personhood," "Because I am Human," and "Love."

"Loving Each Other" is a thought-provoking book, which is definitely worth reading. Each of us are involved in many relationships now, and will continue to develop more relationships in the future. "We are each of us angels with only one wing. And we can only fly embracing each other."-Luciano DeCrescenzo

Guru Professor H.S. Adesh To Speak

Formerly professor of Hindi at the University of UTTAR Pradesh, and music at the University of Kashmir, India, Guru H.S. Adesh will address the public on the topic "Yoga and the Psychology of Stress."

He will be speaking Tuesday, October 15, at 7 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

Adesh is a world renowned musician, vocalist and artist having performed in Canada, the U.S., India, Holland, Trinidad, and other countries.

He is also published in the fields of poetry and encyclopedias of music. Further, he is the Spiritual Head, Director General and Minister of Vidya Mandir, (Canada), and the Indian Institute of Knowledge in Trinidad. Adesh has been trained in yoga and meditation by his Master Maha Guru Dr. Tara Shankar Rakesh.

The visit is sponsored by the University of Wisconsin-Stout Speaker Series and the Stout Yoga Assembly. Admission is free and the public is encouraged to attend.

Preparing for Market

UW-Stout's department of apparel, textiles, and design will be offering a "Preparing for the Market" workshop for the general public.

This workshop will discuss preparing a buying plan for a small business and will cover trends, imports, advertising, and profitability. Instructor for the workshop will be Jerry Kinnaird, administrator of the department.

Held in Stout's Home Economics Building, the workshop will be held on Saturday, October 12 from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The cost is $15.00.

World Food Day

National Town Meeting University Teleconference will be held on Wednesday, October 16, 1985. The teleconference will discuss the relationship between poverty and hunger, the impact of environmental degradation and resource depletion on food security, and the continuing African famine.

The Teleconference will feature a panel of national and international experts, and films of agricultural development projects. There will be a discussion of the presentation and formulation of questions to ask the panel. There will also be a slide presentation about Ethiopia. Interactive questions will be allowed between the panel in Washington D.C. and the different sites around the United States from 1 to 2 p.m.

Sponsored by the Department of Food and Nutrition, School of Home Economics, UW-Stout, the National Town Meeting will be held in room 208 of the Home Economics Building from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

After the National Town Meeting a "Human Food Chain" will be formed to symbolically recognize World Hunger Day. The links of the chain will be made of members of both the Stout community and the community of Menomonie. The food collected will go to the Dunn County Food Pantry.

Other Menomonie activities occurring are as follows: Hunger Walk on October 13, at 1:30. It starts and ends at the Menomonie United Methodist Church. A Sharing Meal is planned for Sunday, Oct. 13 also. This meal will also be held in the Menomonie United Methodist Church, and you are asked to bring 1/2 cup of cut-up vegetables to put into the "Stone Soup." The meal will be held at 5 p.m. On Saturday, October 12 a Hunger Issues Meeting will be held at 10:00 a.m. in the United Church of Christ. You will be able to share views with Rep. Steve Gunderson over "morning coffee."

Tryouts for "Saving Grace"

Tryouts for University Theatre's comedy, "Saving Grace" are Monday and Tuesday, October 14 and 15 beginning at 6 p.m. in the Harvey Hall Auditorium. Everyone is encouraged to participate and no experience is needed.

" 'Saving Grace' is a fun, situational Jack Sharkey comedy," says Natalie Bothwell, director. The plot is crazy, the humor witty, and the characters are unique personalities. Rehearsals will be fun!

There are parts for 2 women and 3 men so rehearsal times will be very flexible. "I'll work around when you have free!" says Bothwell. Please come, laugh, and enjoy the fun Monday evening.

One set is stoneware of steely-done coldness. The dark pewter color and machine-part design are reflected in the title, "Hardware." The six-piece set look like an industrial display for Acme Pewter Flange Co.

The organic opposite of this set is entitled "Software." Almost oceanic in appearance, these pieces undulate on their surfaces and ripple like water in a tiny tidepool.

Brouillard has conceived and crafted two excellent designs which quite accurately describe the dual nature of modern man.

So much more could be said about this excellent show. The overall quality is a tribute to the art department's credit and to the skills and talents of the artists exhibiting.

Dennis Jones' exquisite color print photograph is a dreamy image that is the middle moment of a story each viewer will tell to their own liking.

The most recent Stout graduate (1983) in the show is Sally Bowker whose face is still seen occasionally on campus during her return visits to her Menomonie home. She is currently attending the University of Iowa in the MFA program.

Her face can also be seen in two charcoal self-portraits in which, admirably enough, vanity has not withstood the search for truth and clarity in the expressionistic manner of her bold drawing style.

1979 graduate, David Leister, currently lives in London. He is represented by two curious, intimate miniature black and white photos from a series entitled "Origins of a Globe." And there is much more.

This show of Stout art alumni, which is on view in Ray Hall Gallery 104 through Homecoming, is a solid performance reflecting an unexpectedly high degree of sophistication and execution. It is compounded by a wide variety of styles and attitudes. Frankly, it is an admirable assembly of an impressive stature.

Artist shares mastery of historic organ

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Framed by lavish velvet curtains and golden woodwork, Yuko Hayashi sat behind the keyboard of the Mabel Tainter Theater (MTT) pipe organ. Spread before her were sheets of music looking like a black and white jungle of notes and lines.

Sunday, Hayashi, an internationally known organist, performed at the MTT. This performance was the fifth of a ten-year series developed by the Norman Walter family of Pennsylvania. Walter, a relative of the Tainters, has planned to bring ten women organists, one a year, to the theater in order to lead up to the centennial of the building.

Built in 1890 this Steere and Turner pipe organ has 1597 pipes, 25 stops and was originally water powered. When a key is pressed, the mechanical connection travels 20 feet up to the chest of the organ located at the top of the ceiling.

Two stories below in the basement are the massive bellows and blowers. There is much more to this organ than its pretty, carved face.

Before Hayashi's repertoire, the organ was tuned a few days earlier by Bob Dommer. Dommer, a teacher in Eau Claire, not only tunes pipe organs but reconstructed the instrument at the MTT.

Tuning a three story organ is no small task. Dommer estimated that the tuning process would take him a minimum of five to six hours to complete.

He crawls through a small box at level with the ceiling then travels up eight to nine feet to the chest of the organ. There is what Dommer calls "the logistics problem."

The organ was made in Springfield, Mass. by the Steere and Turner Company. It was shipped to and assembled in Menomonie. Dommer noted, "Half of the organ is buried in a box way up in the ceiling." The organ was installed to fit the existing theater.

Due to the placement of the organ, half of the sound is trapped in the ceiling. When Dommer is in the chest, he wears ear protection because of the tremendous sound that is created in this area.

Using an instrument which looks like an ice-cream cone, Dommer sharpens and flattens the pipes using a cone tuning process. While he is 20 feet up, an assistant presses the keys and communicates with Dommer through a walkie-talkie system.

Tracker action is what connects the keys to the chest. A stick of wood makes the mechanical connections. Temperature and humidity is what makes the instrument go out of tune. Wooden parts swell and shrink allowing air to leak out.

Dommer comes once a year in the fall to tune the organ. Four years ago he spent six months reconstructing the instrument. He said, "We tore the whole thing apart. Every mechanical piece was taken out and either repaired or lubricated."

"It had at the time a winding problem, not enough wind, and it still has that problem, but it has been lessened to a great degree," said Dommer.

If the chest of the organ were to be completely contemporized with modern sealers, the winding problem would be solved. If this were completed, the organ would no longer be historic. During reconstruction, guidelines of the Historic Organ Society were followed.

"The voicing was romantic. Which means that they did not intend for the stops to blend, but to have each one be a seperate orchestrial voice," said Dommer. Today organs are built in a way which brings the parts into units rather than individual sounds.

In order to play the historic instrument, Dommer advised, "Remember that it is old and to treat it with tender loving care."

Hayashi took much care as she pressed the keys, pumped the petals and pulled the stops of the organ. According to this musician, age has nothing to do with sound. Rather, it is the layout and installment of its parts which influence the sound. Hayashi has played organs dating back to the year of 1390.

As a native of Japan, Hayashi developed her interest in the organ through her love for the music of Johann Sebastian Bach. She said, "To know Bach you have to play the organ."

Repertoire, pieces written for the organ, date back 500 years. As chairman of the organ department at the New England Conservatory of Boston, Hayashi has developed a philosophy to understand the historical music.

This professor brings her students to Europe to practice upon historic organs. "When you play repertoire that is written at the same time as the instrument was built, you instantly understand why the music was written," said Hayashi. The instrument and the music created upon it have a very close relationship.

Hayashi came to America with a scholarship to study the organ. After her study, she was asked to stay and teach at the New England Conservatory. In Japan only a few decent organs exist. Hayashi said, "I often wonder how I got interested in the organ. If you don't have something here, you dream and go after it until it is found."

This musician has certainly found the instruments to generate her talents. Hayashi is based in Boston but frequently travels between Japan and Europe, balancing her life as a performer and teacher.

Organs such as the one in the MTT were developed in New England. Four of its kind exist in churches of Menomonie and Chippewa.

Outmuscled gridders fumble game 24-0

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The UW-Eau Claire Blugolds shut out the UW-Stout gridders 24-0 in a WSUC game at Nelson Field last Saturday as the Blue Devils turned the ball over eight times, six on fumbles and two on interceptions.

"The players did a good job running....the ball just didn't go with them.

Bill Burns, Assistant Coach

Head Coach Bob Kamish told his players he would like to play the game over without all the turnovers. With the loss Kamish said "We'll keep our heads up." Without the turnovers the gridders played as well as the Blugolds and it probably would have been a close game.

The opening kickoff was received by Stout. Chuck Carr returned the kick 38 yards to Stout's 47-yard line. On the first play from scrimmage Kyle Gunderson fumbled and Eau Claire recovered the ball. The Blugolds took 11 plays for the first score, a touchdown. The point after was good.

The second quarter was a Stout nightmare. Quarterback Glen Majzsak was intercepted on a long pass intended for Ron Wise. Eau Claire's drive went for six plays until Stout's Tim Hudson intercepted the ball at Stout's 33-yard line, but a clipping penalty backed them up to the 18-yard line. The offense moved the ball to Eau Claire's 28-yard line before Majzsak made an errant pitch that was recovered by the Blugolds.

The gridder defense held Eau Claire on their first set of downs, forcing the Blugolds to punt. The Blue Devils attempted to run the ball and on second down Carr fumbled and the ball was recovered by Eau Claire.

This drive by the Blugolds was stopped on the first set of downs. The ball was punted down to the ten-yard line. On the first play of this drive the ball was fumbled by Majzsak. Three plays later Eau Claire had their second touchdown which would give them a halftime lead of 14-0.

The third touchdown by Eau Claire came on the first play of the fourth quarter, a one-yard run by Lee Weigel. This was set up by another Stout turnover at the 49-yard line. Eau Claire's key play was a 44-yard run by Weigel.

The last score of the game was a 20-yard field goal by Kyle Cherry, again set up by a turnover by the Blue Devil offense. This uped the Blugold's final margin to 24-0.

The loss was blamed on the eight turnovers. Kamish said that the turnovers were not anyone's fault.

The reason for the turnovers were not any one thing either. The reasons for the mistakes were r a missed handoff of a player trying to get the ball or a player trying to get extra yardage by twisting and turning in a second effort and the ball would pop loose.

Assistant Coach Bill Burns said "The players did a good job running, it was just that the ball didn't go with them."

Looking to this week's opponent, UW-Whitewater, Kamish is hoping to win what seems to be the pattern "win one lose one." Whitewater has a record of 1-3 and will be playing this game at home.

Duncan remains loyal Blue Devil fan for over 40 years

Danielle Anderson
Sports Reporter

Loyal fans are what is important to the spirit of UW-Stout sports events. Stout is lucky enough to have a man named William (Bill) Duncan, one of their most loyal followers. He has been attending Stout's athletic events since the 1940's.

Duncan was raised in Menomonie and is still a resident here. He was born handicapped and while in high school he had to go for treatments in Eau Claire. His father worked on the railroad so every day Duncan rode the train to Eau Claire. He went to Eau Claire Senior High School, now known as Eau Claire Memorial. Then from school he went for his treatments.

Back then was when all the big bands were popular. He remembers "I used to sell papers on the train to help pay for expenses. Once in a while I would 'forget' to get off the train and I would follow the big bands to Minneapolis or Chicago."

After graduating from high school, Duncan's father brought him to Stout because he wanted him to be enrolled here. The two men talked to President Bowman. Bowman told Duncan that Stout had nothing to offer him. Duncan suggested that maybe he had something to offer Stout. It couldn't be worked out though because back then, it was hard for handicapped people to be accepted and to get around. There were not any facilities here until years after that.

Since Duncan could not go to Stout, he enrolled at the College of Commerce, now a vocational school. After school he taught shorthand and advanced shorthand. Now he is an accountant at the Downsville Telephone Company.

In the 1940's, when Duncan first started coming to the games, the events were held at the old armery on Broadway. It was a wooden structure with only four or five rows of seats. It was hard for Duncan to get around in the armery, so the football coach at the time let him sit on the bench with the players. The problem with that was, during all the excitement, he always got pushed off and ended up on the ground!

In 1945 Duncan had some friends on the football team so he went to all the away games. He still goes to a lot of away games, but when asked if he was going to Whitewater this week, he said he wasn't sure. He hasn't ruled the thought out, but he was disappointed at the game against UW-Eau Claire last week.

Duncan was into sports of his own at one time. He has played wheelchair basketball, and he used to coach a Sunday basketball league. His team, called the Menomonie Merchants, won the YMCA tournament two years in a row. He still has the trophy sitting in his house.

Now, to keep Duncan busy, he not only attends Stout athletic events, but he also bowls, is a member of the Moose Club, and is on the Hall of Fame Committee.

Duncan is a very dedicated man and Stout is lucky to have him on their team.

The Armchair Quarterback

Memorable year

Tom Roth

Imagine Stout's athletic department producing three championship teams in one year. Imagine our very own chancellor today, Bob Swanson, being the "voice" of Blue Devil Football. Imagine having to stand at Stout football games for every game.

Turn back the clock to the year 1965 and, that's right, all of these unbelievable events took place and a lot more.

Who on campus today would believe you if you told them that 20 years ago Stout had three conference championship teams and that our chancellor was the voice of every sold out football game that year at Nelson Field?

Last Saturday morning I had the honor of visiting with some of those athletes from the championship football, basketball, and wrestling teams as they were honored in the Crystal Ballroom. The brunch brought back old teammates for their 20-year reunion after accomplishing a feat in 1965 no other Stout team has ever repeated.

"Winning the championship game against Whitewater in the season finale was by far the highlight of the season for me," defensive tackle Tom Strehlo said. "Early in the game the Whitewater back scored on a 70-yard touchdown run and everyone just got together after that and we all did our thing to win the game."

Stout went on to win the game by a score of 21-9 to secure the championship. Support was a definite factor in the 1965 season as overflow crowds filled Nelson Field for every game that season, including over 7,000 fans for the Eau Claire game. That was even back when enrollment totaled only 2800 compared to today's student body of over 7,700 students.

"Everyone supported everyone else in that era," wrestler Jerry Robers commented. "We used to pack everything up on weekends and head to all of the road games."

Bob Schattomullen, who wrestled at 177 lbs., talked about a few pranks with the basketball team. "We used to try get the basketball players in the wrestling room to see how tough they really were. One guy we dragged in there one day, his feet were so big we could hardly get him through the door."

Schattomullen, who is now a teacher and high school referee, stressed how important it was back then to have such an experienced coach like Sten Pierce in wrestling. Schattomullen was also a member of the football team that year.

"Walking into a college wrestling room was a scary experience as I didn't know if I was going to be torn up from limb to limb," Schattomullen remarked. "I surprised myself by hanging in there and just making both teams was the highlight of the year for me."

The basketball team's conference championship was Stout's first in 23 years as they fininshed at 20-3.

"We used to get dressed in our locker rooms and then put on these capes because we practiced at the elementary school a few blocks away," Jerry Kissman commented about the facilities back then. He is still the conference's all-time leading rebounder. "It was really cold in the middle of the winter with our shorts on."

"Winning at Oshkosh was the highlight of the year for me," MVP basketball player Mike Thompson said. "Oshkosh had taken third at nationals the year before and they had almost everyone back from that team. So winning by one point was a real thrill."

In comparing the championship team to others, Thompson commented, "Most of the guys had been playing together since we were freshman and Dewey (Mintz) talked defense. His song was defense. As he would say, anyone can put the ball in the hole, but you need five guys out there playing defense."

Also honored for being in attendance was Tom Olson, who was a member of the 1925-26 championship basketball team.

The 1965 championship teams are definitely a part of Stout history that both alumni and the current student body can be proud of for years to come.

Quarterback's Picks

Stout at UW-Whitewater — It's been four weeks since I have picked the Stout game right as over the last three weeks I have mispredicted the Stout game by a total of 81 points. Whitewater won its first game of the season last week and will be hungry for number two. Whitewater by 9.

Minnesota at Green Bay-I have no favorites in this game all you Minnesotans and Wisconsinites. Despite the Vikings' loss, they played a tough game and should edge the Packers. Minnesota by 1.

Pittsburgh at Dallas-Another NFL toss-up in Dallas. The Steelers shouldn't bounce back after last week's loss. Dallas by 3.

Minnesota at Northwestern-The Gophers, rated number ten (TTT), are looking like a top caliber team for the first time in years. Minnesota by 21.

Iowa at Wisconsin-The Badgers always give the Hawks a good game, but not this year. Iowa by 23.

Florida State at Auburn-If Florida State can stop Bo Jackson they should get by a tough Auburn team. Florida State by 6.

Oklahoma at Texas-The Sooners should have all the bugs worked out by now. Sooners by 3.

Nebraska at Oklahoma State-This should be one of the best games all year in the Big Eight as the Cowboys Thurman Thomas is looking good. Oklahoma State by 1.

Quarterback's Record
3 Wins 4 Losses
Bob Mc Intyle, Week's Winner
7 Wins 0 Losses

Editor's Note-The Alabama-Georgia game was rescheduled at a later date this season.

Sack the Quarterback Rules

1. All contest entries should be submitted on a 3" x 5" index card inside a sealed envelope marked "Sack the Quarterback". (A sheet of notebook paper will also be accepted.)

2. Included on your entry should be ONLY the week's eight winners, your name, phone number and address. Also include the tiebreaker score, which will be the predicted point spread of the UW-Stout game every week unless notified otherwise. One entry per person.

3. Each week's games will be in this column and posted on the Stoutonia office window.

4. All entries must be submitted no later than noon every Thursday of the following week. Golfers come on strong to gain fifth place conference standing

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

The UW-Stout men's golf team came on strong in the final day of action last Tuesday at the Stevens Point Country Club to overcome a 13 stroke deficit and capture fifth place in the combined WSUC-NAIA District 14 Championships.

According to Head Golf Coach Sten Pierce, the Blue Devils' fifth place finish was their best finish in the conference in the school's history to his knowledge.

"Our goal was to earn an upper-division finish and we came darn close," Pierce remarked. "Overall though I was pleased with the team's performance."

But the real bright spot for the Blue Devils was the outstanding play of senior Eric Galles, who carded exceptional rounds of 77-78-77, which was good enough to earn him a tie for fourth place in the conference. Galles, however, lost in a sudden death playoff for fourth place and actually ended up sixth.

"Eric really played well in the tournament," Pierce commented. "He really molded his game together during the season after a shaky start."

UW-Whitewater took the championship, followed by UW-Eau Claire, UW-Stevens Point, UW-Oshkosh and Stout rounded out the top five of the 12 competing teams.

Finishing second on Stout's team was Brian Widder followed by Eric Pierce, Steve Mongerson, Greg Lammer and Steve Kostka.

"Golf is on the upswing at Stout as golf hasn't been a sterling emphasis in the athletic department in the past, but things are steadily improving," Pierce concluded. "The Menomonie community has also played a part in improving our golf program as they helped sponsor our first-ever Blue Devil Invitational this year."

Netters avenge loss to UW-Eau Claire

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Simply put, the UW-Stout women's tennis team played great. They avenged an early season 1-8 loss to UW-Eau Claire last Wednesday, Oct. 2, by beating the Lady Blugolds 5-4 with solid singles play and rediscovered doubles power.

Also, last weekend the Lady Devils participated in the La Crosse Invitational where they were challenged by UW-Milwaukee, St. Benedicts, and the bionic tennis women of Western Illinois.

Stout 5 Eau Claire 4

The Lady Devils were on a quest for a win, and they earned it against rival Eau Claire.

Capturing three out of five singles contests, the Lady Devils jumped to an early lead. Lynn Papenfuss' match was what she said, "The highlight of my season." She scorched her opponent 7-6, 6-4. Additionally, Mary Pokwinski and Kelly Wickman each notched a point for the team by beating their challengers 6-4, 6-4, and 6-2, 6-1.

But the doubles were the key to the win, for the Lady Devils clinched 2 out of the 3 matches. The dynamic duo of Mary Malloy and Papenfuss squeezed out a 3-6, 7-5, 6-2 first doubles win to open the door, and the third doubles pairing of Kelly Wickman and Tara Stahel shut it with an exciting 6-4, 1-6, 7-5 win.

A key player in the Lady Devils' lineup was Lynn Papenfuss who contributed two points to the final score, with a singles win, and a doubles victory with Malloy.

"I tend to take my singles matches a little more seriously, and concentrate more," Papenfuss said. "My singles win was a big win for me." As for doubles play she commented, "Mary and I have a lot of fun. We keep each other going and get each other up."

Papenfuss and Malloy are playing supremely in doubles competition, and will rise to the top in the conference if they beat La Crosse.

La Crosse Invitational

The Stout women netters were not successful against the three teams they played in the La Crosse Invitational.

They dropped a close match to St. Benedicts 4-5. "This match could have gone either way," Stout's Women's Tennis Coach Bob Smith said. He was pleased with the play of the doubles against St. Ben's and commented, "First doubles and second doubles played great."

Unfortunately, the Stout women netters never really got going, buckling under the pressure of the warmed-up Milwaukee team, 2-7.

The doubles matches were first this time, and this was a disadvantage for the Lady Devils who were not as stretched out as the Milwaukee women. Consequently, all of the three doubles matches went in Milwaukee's favor. Lynn Papenfuss commented on her and Malloy's play in first doubles, "We weren't into the match. Our first serves were not going in, and our second serves were weak."

The two points came from Tara Stahel's singles win by default, and Papenfuss' second singles victory. Papenfuss lost the first set 1-6 in her singles win, and then fought back 6-3, 7-5. "I was frustrated the first set," Papenfuss said, "but then I started playing my game instead of hers."

The eventual La Crosse Invitational Champions, Western Illinois, overpowered the Stout tennis women 0-9.

The Lady Devils had to scrape for a game, and none of the matches were close. "The team was way out of our league," Smith said. "It was a blow-out."

Although the Stout women's tennis team was not very successful in the La Crosse Invitational, the win against Eau Claire is noteworthy. "That win shows our improvement," Smith declared. "The women's tennis program is really coming around."

Lady spikers lose three in home opener

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The Stout Lady Blue Devils volleyball team suffered a three-game loss last Wednesday as they played their first home matches. Facing some tough conference competition, the Blue Devils had their hands full as they battled their first match against UW-LaCrosse, losing in straight games with scores of 8-15 and 7-15. The second match they faced the UW-Eau Claire Blugolds and lost 12-15 and 9-15. They rounded off the evening against UW-River Falls losing 15-12, 14-16, and 3-15.

When asked about her team's performance, Coach Lynda Lee said, "In game one I felt that we weren't ready to play, but in game two we competed well and started playing here. The third game showed a lot of promise, and we could have pulled out a win here if we could have gotten our momentum going." Overall, Lee stated, "We played well in front. The teams were tough, and we just need to get more aggressive and attack more."

Although at the present time the Blue Devils are ranked eighth in the conference, they are still in the position to move up as the teams are all only a few wins apart.

Some new coaching strategies to help push the team ahead, according to Lee, are to "stress a more well-rounded, even attack, and give every hitter a chance to hit at the net." Lee also feels she needs to produce a more fluid game on the court. "The team is not as instinctive as it could be. They aren't doing it in their sleep — it just doesn't come natural."

An example of where this problem can be observed is in the coverage and offensive patterns. Lee said, "In practice or any controlled situation they can go through the motions and execute plays very well, but in game situations they are too tentative on the floor. This needs work."

The crowd turnout was a positive boost in spirit for the team despite their losses. Lee commented, "I feel there's a definite interest in good volleyball, and although the crowd wasn't really overexpressive, there were some real verbal individuals that helped motivate our team."

Barb Carlson, a junior hitter on the team, expressed a deep appreciation for fan support also. "We were all excited to play at home, and although the competition was tough and we didn't perform the best, it was nice to see the fans there. We really appreciate that!"

Freshman hitter Shelia McNamara felt playing at home helped the team become a little more relaxed as they entered play. "The games really weren't crowd-pleasing games, but we felt support and encouragement from the fans, and it was nice to see them show up and take an interest in us."

Coach Lee feels from here on in it will be mostly a mental battle. Preparing for the Winona State Tournament next weekend, Lee is leaning toward switching Sheila McNamara from being basically a front line player to a total game player to utilize her back row skills as well. Lee also commented, "Our passing needs a little work. When you pass well you play well so it is important to refine that skill." Barb Carlson agreed with Lee's strategy remarking, "I feel setting up the offense and good, concentrated passing will improve the team and allow it to work more effectively as a unit. Good passing is so important because if you don't have it, the defense is thrown off and that stresses our confidence."

Confidence seems to be an important team attribute to possess, and Carlson feels, "We need some wins right away to get our momentum going and our confidence up — this is so important at this point." McNamara sensed this also replying, "The last three matches we were in a slump, so we're looking forward to the next game to prove ourselves. We hope to be coming back stronger and more confident than ever."

A more confident attitude, however, is only one of many characteristics of a well-rounded volleyball team. According to Lee, "A solid offensive structure, proper positioning on the court, proper techniques (if not exceptional), attitudes and cohesiveness with each other, and a coach who supports the team and has confidence in them is a good definition of a well-rounded team."

Lee finished by adding, "I feel the team is very well-rounded, and this is what has helped us compete with the other teams in our conference."

Devils and Blugolds battle to 2-2 deadlock

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

Against a strong UW-Eau Claire team, UW-Stout Soccer Club scraped a 2-2 tie after 90 minutes of play last Saturday.

With the absence of Coach Dan Nelson and Club President Dan Stoffregen, team organization was in the hands of defense co-ordinator Doug Hall and stand-in captain, Kevin Sheehan.

The game started with Stout put under a lot of pressure by Eau Claire. Eau Claire won most of the high balls in midfield and also controlled the game for the greater part of the first half. Stout rarely got close to the Eau Claire penalty area. On the occasions they did the ball was scrambled away as the Stout offense did not have the support of its midfield.

At halftime the score stood at 0-0. Doug Hall, playing as goalkeeper, saw what the problem was.

"We need to push out from defense as a team. There's a big gap between midfield and offense which is why we are constantly under pressure," he said during the interval.

Stout began the second half with a more positive approach. Frank Lohrer and Jimmy Lea had been placed in the offense as wing players.

It was an unfortunate error by the Eau Claire goalkeeper, however, that gave Stout its first goal. After some good hustling, Joe Krawczyk passed the ball for Lea to run on to. An Eau Claire defender reached the ball first but his backpass slid underneath his own goalkeeper. Lea had kept running and managed to strike the ball before the goalkeeper could recover.

"That one was a gift," Lea said after the game.

This goal surprised both teams as it seemed the game was fairly one-sided in favor of Eau Claire.

Another shock came soon after when Stout won a corner kick. Krawczyk was again involved. His well-taken corner swung in toward goal and it was somehow scrambled over the goal line.

Following the goal Stout never threatened to score again and it was a case of defending its own goal. Eau Claire felt they did not deserve to be behind and they played some good attacking soccer.

It wasn't too long before they had lowered the deficit to one goal. The Stout defense was caught by a quick break and the Eau Claire attacker struck the ball beyond the helpless goalkeeper, Hall.

Several other attacks by Eau Claire were thwarted by the Stout defense. Many of these were from corner kicks and the ball was kicked off the Stout goal line on more than one occasion.

It was during a goalmouth incident that Eau Claire leveled the score at 2-2. The final whistle brought relief to the Stout players.

"If we hadn't been given the two goals as presents, we would have lost for sure," Steve Abrahamson said.

Captain Kevin Sheehan felt that none of the Stout team had really played well and that "the game generally was a scrappy affair, one which I don't think any of us enjoyed."

The Stout Soccer Club was to have played a representative team from Nigeria last Friday at Galloway Park. This was cancelled due to the field being waterlogged.

This Saturday the club is travelling to the Twin Cities for a game against Northwestern in Roseville.

Runners aim goals at conference meet

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

Saturday the men's and women's cross country teams traveled to Northfield Minnesota to compete in the St. Olaf Invitational. The women's team placed in the middle of the competition, seventh out of 15 schools while the men's team didn't fare as well, finishing ninth out of 10 teams.

Conditions for both the men's and women's course were soggy and muddy. Sue Meyer, who finished first for Stout at 15 overall, felt the course was slow. "I thought I would have run a faster time until I saw the course. There was a lot of pack running for the first two miles making it difficult to run where you wanted to," Meyer said.

Junior Ann Meyer was close behind Sue Meyer as well as Senior Captain Sheila Geere finishing 21 and 23 respectively. Meyer finished in a time of 19:51 while Geere finished the course in 19:54.

Rounding out the rest of the women's team were Liz Lund, 38, Leslie Drall, 93, and Karen Schubert 101.

Eau Claire emerged as the winner for the women's division followed by Oshkosh and Stevens Point.

The men were without Senior Captain Matt Christenson and number three runner Bob Hackley. Senior Todd Zuerlein led the way for Stout finishing 26 overall with a time of 26:37.

"It's slower than you think it is (the course). There's really not many hills but for some reason the times weren't that fast," Zuerlein said.

Next for Stout was Eric Bretl at 30, Sophomore Ben Haney, 54, Freshman Dave Polishinski, 61, and Freshman Tim Stordahl, 65.

For their efforts at the meet Sue Meyer and Zuerlein were voted runners of the week by their teammates.

St. Thomas won the men's meet followed by Carleton and Oshkosh in third.

Head Coach Lou Klitzke was pleased with the performance of the fifth runners of both the men's and women's teams. "Both Leslie Drall and Tim Stordahl showed improvement and Tim ran a personal best," Klitzke said.

The cross country team is now at midpoint in their season with the Blugold Invitational set for Saturday in Eau Claire. Klitzke said the meets ahead are the ones the team has been practicing for.

"Several conference schools and large Minnesota schools will be at Saturday's meet and the competition will be equivalent to conference," Klitzke said.

Professor convicted of sex assault

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Professor Robert Wurtz from the Counseling and Psychological Services Department at UW-Stout was convicted Thursday, October 10, of three counts of fourth-degree sexual assault on a 16-year-old friend of his daughter, who spent the night in his home last January.

> "You should focus down to what happened in that room that night. That is the only issue on trial here.
> —Phillip Steans, Defense Attorney"

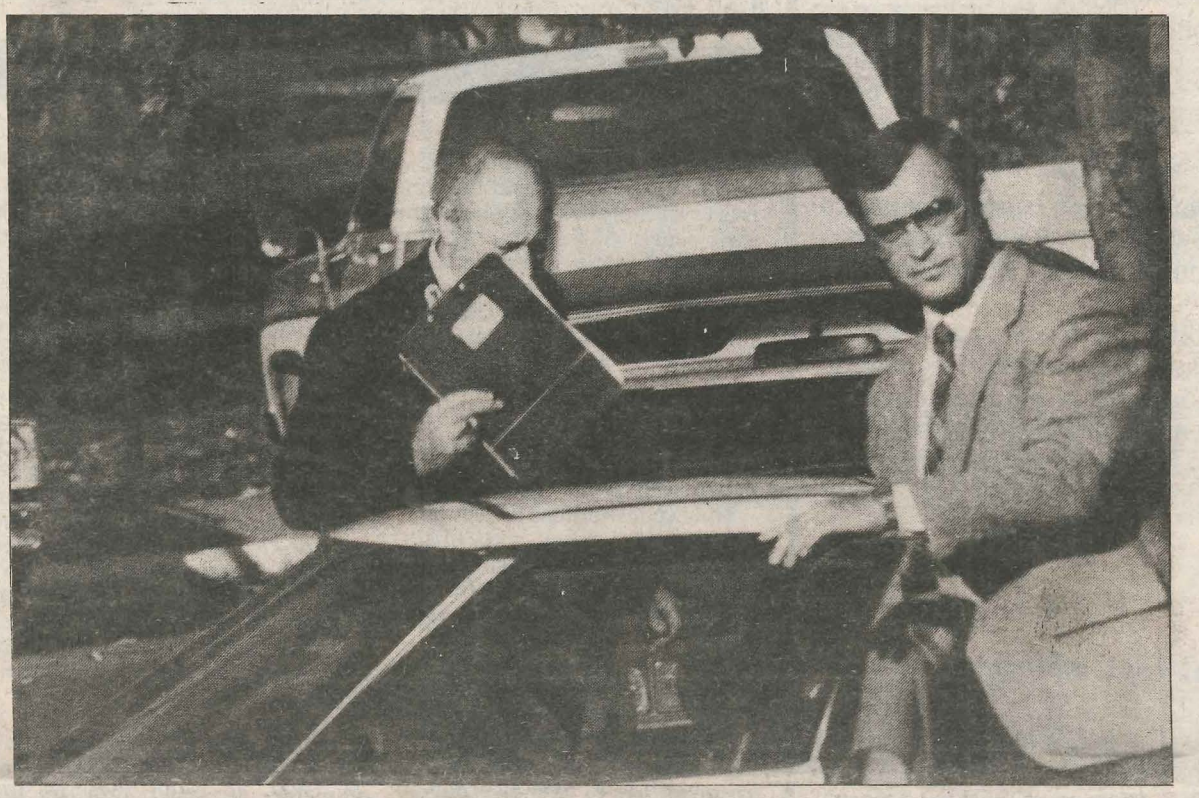
The trial began Wednesday, October 2 and went through October 10. The jury deliberated for four hours on Thursday evening and returned with the verdict at 11:00 p.m.

The 16-year-old girl who was assaulted and another girl were invited to spend the night at the Wurtz's home. The victim testified that early in the evening they drank some brandy, and each took a pill and a half of Tylenol 3 with codine. The girl then went to sleep. That evening Wurtz entered the room on three different occasions, fondling and kissing her and on the second occasion had oral sex with her.



WURTZ CONVICTED — UW-Stout Psychology Professor Robert Wurtz (left), represented by Menomonie Attorney Phillip Steans (right), was convicted on three counts of fourth-degree sexual assault on a 16-year-old girl. The jury deliberated for four hours before returning with the verdict of guilty on all counts. (Stoutonia photo by Lary Derrah)

Dunn County District Attorney Mike Furnstahl said that the victim's testimony was consistent every time she was questioned.

However, Phillip Steans, Wurtz's lawyer, said in closing statements that the victim's testimony was different in the videotape, in her written statement, on the witness stand and to the friend she spoke to the day after the incident.

Two other witnesses, who were minors at the time of their individual incidents, testified that Wurtz had made sexual advances at them also. One of the witnesses, a 20-year-old Stout student, testified that Wurtz molested her 10 years ago at her house and at his. The second witness, an ex-girlfriend of his son's, testified that Wurtz had made a pass at her in the fall of 1981.

According to the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch, October 11, Steans told the jury "You should focus down to what happened in that room that night. That is the only issue on trial here."

"After the incident, the victim quit school, ran away from home, had suicidal tendencies, was depressed and spent a week in the hospital for psychiatric help," said Furnstahl. Donald Fast, a Baldwin lawyer, has been retained by the victim's parents to file a civil suit against Wurtz, according to the St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Steans said that because she had lied about the incident, she felt guilty and was suffering emotional problems as a result.

Furnstahl said that the maximum sentence Wurtz can receive for the conviction would be 9 months/$10,000 on each count. However, because the crime is a misdemeanor, Wurtz can only receive up to one year in jail.

Mr. John Enger of University Relations said that Wurtz is on a special research project and for that reason will not be teaching in the classroom. At this time there are no provisions which address what happens to a faculty member after being convicted of a crime. The case would have to go to the Board of Regents and would require due notice, a hearing and a recommendation from the board. Nothing has been done to this point.

Attorney requests use of polygraph results in rape trial

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

William Schembera, defense attorney for former UW-Stout student Dennis Green, submitted 19 new motions in Green's sexual assault case. The motions mainly concern the use in court of a polygraph test taken by the defendant.

In an official correspondence, Theodore Welch, the person who performed the test, stated, "the purpose of the examination was to determine if Dennis Green was truthful in specific statements when he denied the September, 1985, sexual assualt complaint against him by the alledged victim. Based upon the results of the polygraph test administered to Dennis Green on September 16, 1985, it is concluded that Green was truthful when he stated that prior to any sexual intercourse with the alleged victim on September 6, 1985, she had removed her clothing at her own desire."

Schembera stated that polygraph results are currently banned from courtrooms by law, but he feels they should be used, because the person who administered the tests is very well known and respected not only by himself and Dunn County District Attorney Mike Furnstahl, but by police departments in both Milwaukee and Cook County, Illinois. The test was administered to both Green and the victim by the same recognized polygraphist and verified by an independent third party, Sgt. Steve Kassing of the Eau Claire police department.

> "...Green was truthful when he stated...she had removed her clothing at her own desire.
> —Theodore Welch, Polygraph Operator"

Schembera sees no reason that it can not be used as evidence. "Where you have both the defendant and the victim tested by the same operator by mutual agreement and the results are consistent, and the defendant passes and the victim does not, and the results are verified independently by a third party agreed on in advance that evidence should be allowed into trial," stated Schembera.

Other reasons to allow the evidence are on the basis of ineffective or incompetent council, and denying the client of due process of the law.

In another motion for Green by his attorney, Schembera moved for a court order requiring the results of the polygraph tests administered by Welch to the alleged victim on September 16, 1985, to be given to the attorney for the defendant. In the same motion Schembera also asked for all written and oral statements of the alleged victim by the alleged victim to Theodore Welch on the same day of the test.

Schembera also motioned for a change of venue on the grounds that on impartial trial cannot be held in Dunn County. Defense will furnish an affidavit in support of this motion and all documents when it has had an appropriate chance to gather those items.

Gorbachev fires reform opponent

Moscow- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev took another step toward full control of the Kremlin with the sacking of a key opponent to his plan to reform the Soviet Union's sluggish economy.

In a move just four months before the next meeting of the communist party, Gorbachev relieved Nikolai as the Kremlin's Senior economic planner, his position for more than two decades.

Japan aims for growth at home

Tokyo, Japan- The Japanese government-trying to please its allies by slowing the flood of exports-announced Tuesday measures to stimulate the domestic economy.

U.S. and European officials have urged Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone to promote economic growth through internal demand rather than exports. The plan comes as dozens of protectionist bills are pending in Congress and four days before Nakasone visits the White House.

Wal-Mart chief tops billionares

New York, N.Y.- Oil heir Gordon Peter Getty is no longer the richest American, Forbes magazine reported Monday. Getty has been replaced by Arkansas retailer Sam Walton. Walton of Bentonville, Ark. is worth $2.8 billion.

Medicare reform boosts costs

Washington D.C.-Reforms in medicare that were intended to control medical inflation are having the unintended effect of boosting by 23 percent the amount the elderly will pay out of their pockets for hospital care next year.

The $1.1 billion increase taking effect Jan. 1 will affect every medicare recipient admitted to a hospital after that date. It will cost each recipient an extra $92 per hospital stay, on top of the $400 they pay now.

Major economy gains made

Madison- Gov. Anthony Earl said Monday that Wisconsin's economy has made drastic gains during his administration.

Earl said Wisconsin had jumped from 42 in 1983 to 31 in 1984 in state business climate rankings compiled by the Alexander Grant consulting firm. No other state has made such "dramatic improvement," Earl said.

Seat belts on all under 18

Madison- The latest proposal in a longstanding discussion over a mandatory seat belt law for Wisconsin was a bill that would require people under 18 to wear seat belts in vehicles. The bill would require minor drivers and minor passengers to use seat belts.

Failure to comply would result in a fine for the driver of $10 to $200. In late 1982, the legislature required children up to age four to be buckled up in motor vehicles.

Perspective

Education's 'best defense'

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

This country's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), frequently referred to as Star Wars, is one of the most concerted defense programs the United States has undertaken since President Kennedy started the race to the moon in the early 1960's. The program, which is designed to make America immune to a nuclear strike, could inevitably carry a price tag estimated between $400 billion and $1.2 trillion if and when it is actually deployed.

The two institutions which would benefit the most via initial research and development, and actual production would be American universities and business, respectively.

The Strategic Defense Initiative Organization (SDIO), which screens the thousands of requests for research grants that it recieves, has to date awarded approximately 1000 contracts totaling $1.1 million.

One particular research grant valued at $19 million has been awarded to a group of universities comprised of Auburn, Polytechnic Institute of New York, Texas Tech, the State University of New York at Buffalo and the University of Texas at Arlington.

Other universities which have also been awarded research grants include Carnegie-Mellon, Caltech, M.I.T. and Stanford.

Yet some universities are not only not applying for research grants, but are openly discouraging their fellow academicians from participating as well. Fifty-three of the 70 full professors in the physics department at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana have signed a statement which labels SDI as "deeply misguided, dangerous and expensive."

Others believe that although the technology is scientifically impossible, it could provoke the Soviets into similar research.

Yet many university scientists state that the Soviets have already been working on their own brand of Star Wars for years and that American research in this area only helps to balance a previous strategic inequality.

Quoted in the October 7, 1985 issue of Time magazine Robert McCrory, director of the Laboratory for Laser Energetics at the University of Rochester, believes that "we could offer to share our technology for stability and tie that to an arms build-down."

And many American business leaders believe that spin-off SDI technology could possibly be used to expand other "consumer level" industries, which might have a more immediate impact on society akin to the technology gained from man's quest to reach the moon.

The miniature computer chip, which is the spark which made today's computer revolution possible, is the most widely known technology which was gained through the many Apollo flights of the 1970's.

Senate passes 85-86 reallocations

Barb Caron
News Reporter

Division and heated debate created the atmosphere at Tuesday's gathering of the Stout Student Association. The orders of the day were changed moving Old Business up to Open Forum to give the Senate adequate time to discuss the proposed budget reallocations for the 1985-1986 school year.

President JoAnn Prange reread the Main Motion, USS-16-87, which had been tabled for one week. The motion was made by Off-Campus Senator Lee Michaels, and seconded by UPB Senator Sands McAlees. The motion stated, "I move that the USS of the SSA accept the Financial Affairs Committee recommendations for the 1985-1986 school year budget reallocations."

This is where the fireworks began as senators offered amendments to the main motion, all of which failed. These amendments ranged from removing entire reallocations to percentage cuts across the board all of which failed.

An amendment was offered by Women's Affairs Senator Tracey Lea Landis to strike $1438 from the Rainbow organization's budget and reallocate it to the SSA's budget.

Off-Campus Senator Barb Caron offered an amendment which would take a 2 percent cut from all organizations in order to reallocate money to the Tower Yearbook which was given no money in reallocations.

After heavy debate on all of the offered amendments, the main motion of passing the reallocations as stated passed by majority vote.

In her President's report JoAnn Prange stated that, "It's very healthy that an organization do a self-examination of what we do in committees. Because committees' recommendations are just that; recommendations. The reason committee reports go back to senate as a whole is for checks and balances, and as a senate we must have these checks and balances. By opposing recommendations doesn't mean that it is a personal attack on committee members. I thought the debate was healthy for senate as a whole and it brought some spice to senate."

Prange also informed the senate in her report that she will be attending an Alcohol Education Conference at UW-Whitewater this weekend. "At this conference we will try to sensitize students, faculty, and administrators to the alcohol problems existing on campuses in the UW system. Hopefully this conference will educate us on preventive measures and solutions to existing alcohol problems."

Prange also commented on the retreat that senate attended last weekend. "We achieved our two goals. We have become a more unified body, and set realistic goals for senate this year. Now the work begins in striving to meet these goals."

After break a motion was made by South Hall Senator Sandra Kampen to appoint Gary Harder to the vacant Off-Campus position. This motion passed.

In his report, Tom Schwalbach, Vice President of Financial Affairs, thanked the senate for their support in passing his committees recommendations on budget reallocations. Schwalbach said, "The debate was not on a personal level, but political, and I hope no feelings were hurt."

In her report Tracey Lea Landis, Women's Affairs Senator informed the senate that she is looking for a replacement for her position.

UPB Senator Sands McAlees reported on upcoming UPB events which include the Booze Brothers concert on Nov. 14, at 9 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Student Center, and the movie M*A*S*H*, sponsored by University Cinema on Sunday only in the Great Hall.

Stout/community work to ensure eventful Homecoming

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

With Homecoming programs centered around the Memorial Student Center, added student interest in Homecoming activities and a growing sense of cooperation between the university and the Menomonie community, Homecoming 1985 at UW-Stout promises to be a special occasion.

Chairman of the University/Community Relations Committee, Bill Siedlecki looks forward to this year's Homecoming being a successful university/community effort. Siedlecki said, "We've turned the corner with some of the problems we've had years ago. There seems to be pretty good cooperation between the campus and the community."

He thinks that university/community cooperation in organizing Homecoming is exemplified by the fact the Menomonie High School Band will be marching in the parade.

Siedlecki said he was impressed by the Menomonie Tavern League's ad in the Stoutonia before last year's Homecoming asking that people drink responsibly. "That was just a real nice thing that indicated to us that the tavern owners were concerned about their customers and they're interested in promoting a safe, positive Homecoming." The committee is urging the Tavern League to take the same action this year.

To promote a safe Homecoming, Siedlecki says "There will be some ads placed on behalf of this committee in the Stoutonia encouraging people to responsibly use alcohol and just be cool."

Siedlecki is currently working with Police Chief Dennis Beety designing an informational poster that will be posted around campus and in the community. The poster is designed to make people aware of state statutes and city ordinances and let people know about the fines involved.

Returning to the positive aspects of Homecoming this year, Siedlecki is pleased that "There seems to be greater interest in student organizations to present king and queen candidates. We have more now than I can ever remember."

SSA President JoAnn Prange wants students getting involved in the Homecoming activities. "That's the fun part of Homecoming," she said. "You get a lot more satisfaction from Homecoming if you're an active participant rather than just partying."

Prange recognizes the need to constructively channel the energies resulting from Homecoming. "Homecoming, the entire event is a very energetic thing. We shouldn't try to have them hold back those energies, but have them vent them off in a very constructive way."

Along those lines, there will be a pep rally next Thursday night at Johnson Fieldhouse involving both student organizations and faculty groups. Prange said Saturday's Blue Devil Bash will be, "Just a social get together between the parade and the game that would be a constructive event students could go to."

Chancellor Robert Swanson is pleased by the prospect of Homecoming this year. "As far as alumni are concerned, we're hoping this will be the largest Homecoming we've ever had. It is coordinated with the new Student Center, the capital campaign and with honoring alumni."

Swanson has been on the Stout campus for 40 years and as a result, he has perhaps the best perspective on Homecoming as an event. He's witnessed difficulty over the years in integrating the activities of the students and the town with the activities of the alumni.

Reviewing the history of the parades, the bonfires and dances associated with Homecoming, Swanson noted, "These things sort of go up and down in popularity."

In reference to the I-94 incident of '82 he added that, "With some of them you get things carried to some extreme that becomes undesirable. It's like people horsing around. It's just good clean fun and then it's carried to the point where something gets damaged, somebody gets hurt. Then people say, 'We've got to knock this off and go to some other activity.'"

Like Prange and Siedlecki, he's pleased with the recent success of Stout Homecomings. "A couple of years now Homecoming has been a fairly conservative type thing. People just kind of enjoying getting together with friends." He sees the recent trend in Homecomings as, "Just the natural scheme of things that you see in all kinds of activities."

Silent majority bypassed when selecting senators

Democracy in these United States dictates that all citizens have the right to participate in the choosing of leaders at all levels of government. But once an election or referendum is completed, all votes are tallied and the will of the majority is implemented.

We believe that this is the most fair form of representation on this earth. Yet this in no way resembles the way elected representatives, namely senators, are selected to serve on the Stout Student Senate.

Although sixty percent of students live off-campus and forty percent live on-campus, each group is not represented proportionally on the student senate. On-campus students are represented by a senator from each of the nine residence halls and one senator representing Inter-Residence Hall Council (IRHC). But off-campus students are also afforded ten senators.

This blatant inequality under represents the majority and unjustifiably favors the minority.

The University Programming Board (UPB) has a voting representative on the student senate, yet this particular senator represents a special interest group that is allowed an official voice in the budgeting of the student activity fee from which they themselves receive funds.

Although less than two-hundred students on campus belong to fraternities and sororities, they are alotted three voting seats on the student senate. This gives less than three percent of the student population three of the twenty-eight votes.

The women of this campus, although they are virtually equal to men in a numerical sense, are unjustifiably granted added representation through the Womens Affairs Senator. The men of this campus are not afforded the same consideration.

We believe that the will of the majority is not respected when specific groups are arbitrarily guaranteed representation. Representation should only be granted to those who seek this privilege and have it bestowed upon them by a consensus of the student body.

We propose that the present system for electing senators be discarded and that twenty-five senate seats be created, whereby any full-time student would qualify as a candidate. The twenty-five candidates who receive the most votes would represent the majority who elected them.

We believe that this system, which is far closer to true democracy than the present one, is an alternative which will more accurately represent the sentiments of the student body.

The present senate could make its mark in University history by addressing this current problem or melt into obscurity like many of its predecessors by conducting business as usual.

My final word

Zzzzzzzz

Rich Langberg

The 1980's are boring. Dull. Conservatives are in power, and on college campuses there are more virgins then there are Democrats. Especially on this campus, it seems like the students are more interested in stocks than sex and their future then fornicating.

I don't own a DeLorean, but I would love to be able to travel back in time and escape this Yuppie-oriented generation. There are so many other eras in history that offer more excitment, more thrills, more risks. Heaven knows, there was probably more rampant nookie, also.

Imagine living in colonial America. I could have been an explorer, and charted the vast country that was only inhabited by Native Americans and animals. Hell, I could have been the first college student to go to Daytona Beach.

Or how about being at the forefront of the westward movement across the nation. All the natural beauty undisturbed by man's ravages. No Three Mile Island, no Love Canal, no Times Beach. Just pristine wilderness, and no one to tell you where you can or cannot go.

Think of the thrill of being involved in the California gold rush. The towns springing up almost overnight, people becoming incredibly wealthy in a heartbeat. San Francisco's nightlife at the time was supposedly unrivaled anywhere. It would be great to shout, "Hey bartender! A whiskey and leave the bottle," as you slam down a small bag of gold dust.

Moving on through time, we come to the 1920's. The Roaring Twenties. The Charleston. Jazz at the Cotton Club. The depression and prohibition were still in the future. For anyone who wants to make a life-long mission of partying, this seems like it would be a great time to be alive.

Even when prohibition was enacted, the good times didn't necessarily come to a halt. For someone like me in Hotel and Restaurant, the chance to run a speakeasy represents a challenge that is unattainable today. "Honestly Officer, it was coffee in those coffee cups!"

Although the 1950's seem like the fun was there, it was basically a family-oriented period of time similar to what was portrayed on the show Happy Days. There was, however, something brewing. Led by James Dean, the American youth was feeling alienated from society. Kids looked up to Dean as a rebel, and it was these kids and their little brothers and sisters that were instrumental in the period of time that sounds the most intriguing; the 1960's.

There was the greatest gathering of people our age ever at a farm near Woodstock, New York. There was music, messages, lots of rain and lots of love. To be a college student at the time meant to be in the foreground of America's conscience.

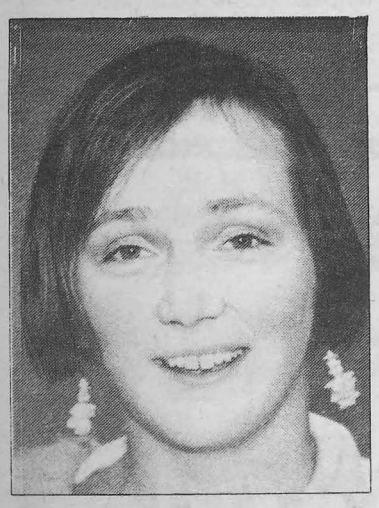
Many people feel the student protests had a great deal to do with ending America's involvement in the Vietnam war. It was the students who brought to the public's attention the atrocities our government was involved in.

Jim Morrison. Martin Luther King. Jimi Hendrix. Bob Dylan. These were people who were able to eloquently express the way an entire generation was feeling. College students weren't apathetic, they got involved, they had issues to deal with.

Nuclear arms. World hunger. Relations between countries. These are issues facing us today that many students are putting to the back of their mind in favor of the search for the supposedly all-mighty dollar. We must re-realize the dream of past generations and stop giving new meaning to an old word. Boring.

State drinking laws deceiving; live bands curb alcohol abuse

Our boys were still coming home from Nam when the drinking age was lowered in this state to nineteen. People in Wisconsin stood behind the idea that if you were old enough to fight and die for your country, you were old enough to decide whether you should drink.



Tracy Lea Landis

Now there is a push to raise the drinking age, to put under-age drinkers out on the backroads to drink while sitting in their cars, which is the way it went with under-age drinkers in rural Wisconsin, where I grew up.

Guest

There are also debates about laws which make a host/ess (sic) or the owner of a bar liable for the damage done by any irresponsible drunks they create. They are said to create these drunks by serving them. There's a sticky wicket for you; who is responsible for the drunkeness created or the deeds done under its influence? Subject A, who poured 'em, who knew that B was already wasted? Or is it Subject B, who got totally smashed...again.. that's responsible?

So there are pressures on us, messages from everywhere, from government in the form of law changes, from the media and even from the liquor industry itself, reminding us that there is grave danger in the indulgence of the self-destructive drinking tendencies to which we are so collectively prone. It is like, you know, our collectibe conscience is reminding us how lame it is to jeopardize other people by driving around all messed-up.

As always, some solutions offered are not good solutions and raising the drinking age is one of those. The issue of responsiblity in loaded people is a highly debatable question because, in the drama of human affairs, blame is such a difficult thing to place. But if we are to answer the nagging of our conscience which reminds us that boozing it up too much can be, and regularly is hazardous to people's health and safety, then we well still have to address the problem somehow.

The way I see it, people will have to gradually change their partyin' habits. It could be done. Like people starting right now, in Menomonie, people who both sell and consume alcohol, could start reconsidering the long-range benefits to the community of encouraging people to stand around, doing nothing but drinking the local bar.

What else could a local bar owner or patron do, in order to respond to the idea that maybe people don't need to get so totally smashed?

Well, I have a suggestion and it comes straight from my Curbfeelin', blues singin' heart.

Live bands in the bars. Something to relate to besides getting smashed. It takes a bit more time and trouble for the management to deal with a band and valuable space is lost for the calculation of drinks sold per square foot. But what does fighting the 21-year-old drinking age mean if you don't actively address the fact that, in this town, the clubs very rarely offer anything other than specials on drinks? A person goes uptown to get smashed, no to check out the bands and yet the biggest complaint about Menomonie is that there's nothing interesting happening here (although I personally don't have that problem!)

At this very moment, however, there are at least two hot bands functioning in Menomonie, the Curbfeelers and DCVer. Local, dedicated to their art and not costly to engage, these musicians, who are mostly Stout students, are ready to rock Menomonie. If bar owners have a real committment to reducing the abuse of their product, whey should consider taking advantage of the availability of local talent and occasionally offering entertainment as well as booze. And their patrons could suggest it.

We could all do something about the problem of alcohol abuse...find something else to do, instead. ENJOY IN MODERATION AND SUPPORT YOUR LOCAL BAR BAND!

Letters to the editor

Cynical columnist is crude

I am directing this letter to your columnist, Rich Brueckner. Rich could you please send me a 5X7 photo of yourself because:
A. You're a really good looking guy.
B. You're one of the most gifted writers on the Stoutonia staff.
C. I want to throw darts at your cynical face in order to relieve the stress caused by your narrow-minded and pessimistic articles.

The answer is: C.

I have spent four years at UW-Stout as a student and an employee of the Student Center. It makes me angry when a fellow student employee consistently finds fault with the institution with which he is affiliated.

A person in your position has the opportunity to comment on both the positive and the negative. I am a strong believer in the truth and in constructive criticism, neither of which I have been able to find in your past two articles.

From your column we get a pretty crude picture of the Stout student, one who's life ambition seems to be "spending outrageous sums of money in the bars" and "driving golf balls at the Administration Building". The average Stout student I know is far from your pictures of immaturity and irresponsibility.

We also get a negative view of our school and the new Student Center from your articles. Instead of focusing on "why does the Pawn's water fountain dispense luke-warm fluid", why don't you comment on the great view from the Terrace Cafe when the sunset comes through the west windows or the nostalgic woodwork and beautiful stained glass windows of the Heritage Room?

We have much to appreciate in terms of our school. I've had the opportunity to visit several UW campuses and have not seen the new, up-to-date facilities which can be found at Stout.

Surely you can find more constructive ways to use your talents and time. Give the Stoutonia reader mature, provacative insights as opposed to constricting, dead-end issues.

Name withheld upon request.

Reward for thesis trasher

An unfortunate act of criminal damage to property occurred in the library on October 8th or 9th. A graduate sutdent, studying on the 5th floor of the library, was called away on a family medical emergency. He left his notebook containing all his work toward his master's thesis and his personal calendar sitting out at a study cubical. He was unable to return until the next morning only to find his notebook containing his master's thesis work ripped up and destroyed.

Although the library does not assume responsibility for student materials left in the library, we are sympathetic to the student involved and wish to help. The Library Staff are offering a reward to anyone who may have any information leading to the arrest and conviction of the perpetrator of this act. If anyone saw or heard anything, please contact Campus Police at 232-1632. This would have occurred between 9:00 to 1:00 p.m. on Tuesday, October 8, or between 7:45 to 10:00 a.m. Wednesday, October 9. Please help.

CAMPUS SLANT/ How would starting school after Labor Day affect students?

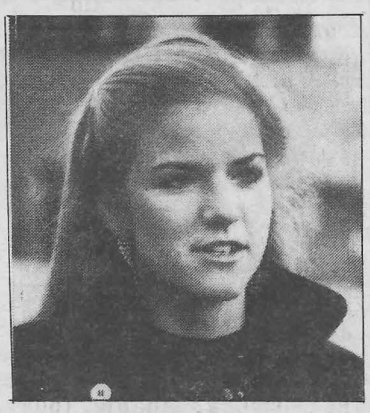
Joe Huftel,
Sophomore,
Technology Education

I think in many situations a lot of high school students that could take the jobs that college students leave. I don't think it's that big of a factor. It's being blown out of proportion. I think (the schedule) should be kept the way it is now. The earlier the better.



Tisha Spahr,
Sophomore,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

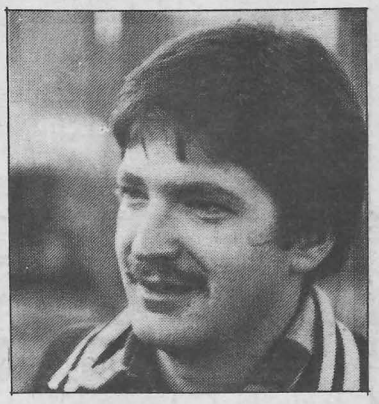
I think it's a good idea to start after Labor Day because a lot of people work in resorts in this kind of school and are not allowed to get back until after Labor Day so it makes them cut out of school.

Jose McGill,
Senior,
Marketing Education

I'm in favor of starting classes after Labor Day. Many students here at Stout, especially those that are in the Hotel and Restaurant Management major, work at resorts in Wisconsin. Take for example Wisconsin Dells. Many students make commitments to stay and work until Labor Day at a lot of resorts down there.

Colette Kolker,
Senior,
Dietetics

If the semester would go after Christmas then I would be totally against it. It really doesn't matter to me if the semester starts before or after Labor Day, but it would be nice if it was after because it would provide extra days for working and making more money to go to school.



Paul Brandt,
Junior,
Applied Math

I wouldn't want to start after Labor Day if it means shortening the semester, because it would just be jamming more homework in that time. If it ran over Christmas I wouldn't like it. It wouldn't effect me at all if it started after Labor Day. I would just work longer in the summer.

U.N. food day observed

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

"People will be able to view hunger from a local aspect, a national aspect and an international aspect."

This is how Dr. Anita Wilson, Food and Nutrition Department Administrator, described events organized here at UW-Stout to observe World Food Day, October 16.

World Food Day originated in 1979 to commemerate the 1945 founding of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization. The special day symbolizes voices around the world united in appealing for the end of world hunger. This year, the day was recognized in more than 150 countries.

Menomonie kicked off it's program when Bread for the World coordinator, Julie McNaughton, called a Hunger Issues meeting with Representative Steve Gunderson on Oct. 12. Much of the discussion centered on the farm bill presently before the House of Representatives.

Gunderson said the first farm bill was created in 1949 to guarantee adequate food supplies during shortages after World War II. He feels that it should now focus more on the structure of agriculture.

Gunderson said Wisconsin residents cannot target things that address farm issues because the Southern and Western states have taken over the agriculture committees. He finds this frustrating because "most of Wisconsin's farms are dairy farms, and dairy farms are the last bastion of the family farm."

As the meeting shifted to questions and comments from listeners, McNaughton reminded those present that our view of hunger should be a world view, not a local or national one.

The following day saw a 10-mile hunger walk, beginning at 1:30 p.m. Participants had sponsors pledge money for each mile walked. One fourth of the money will go to the Dunn County Food Pantry, and the rest will go to other hunger prevention organizations.

The two main events of the actual World Food day itself were the Human Food Chain and satellite-assisted "national town meeting." Running from 11-2 p.m. in the Home Economics building, the meeting featured dicussions on the various topics concerning world hunger.

The panelists were beamed in via a Westar 4 satellite from Washinton D.C. The four-member panel was made up of Peter McPherson, an administrator of USAID, Paul Sarbanes (D-Maryland), Marie Savane, Director of the Association of African Women and Barbara Huddleston, Food and Agriculture administrator in Rome.

McPherson began the discussion by stating that this year had been, "Exciting, productive and stressful. Over half of the food that has been donated has been American."

"If you took all the 50 lb. bags of food that we ship over to Africa and laid them end to end, they would stretch twice around the world at the equator."

After an hour of the discussion from Washington, the forum switched to the overflowing crowd in room 208 of the Home Economics Building. The discussion was titled "Ethiopia's Potential," and was led by Wilson, who had spent two years teaching home economics in Ethiopia. The last hour of the three-hour program was spent with the panel in Washington answering questions from people around the country.

The day's activities culminated with the Human Food Chain, and involved members of the Stout and local community. "World Food Day is a tool to be used by all - for all - all through the year," said national coordinator Patricia Young.

DECEMBER COMMENCEMENT, 1985

December Commencement Excercises will be held on Saturday, December 14, 1985, at 10:00 a.m. in the Johnson Fieldhouse. Graduating students will each be given 4 guest tickets. Notices will be posted on bulletin boards when instructions and tickets are available in the Student Services Office Room 203 of the Administration Building. This should occur during the latter part of November.

Make sure that appropriate forms are filed with the Registar's Office and Graduate College immediately if you wish to have your name appear in the Commencement Bulletin.

Rep. Gunderson states views on deficit

Rich Langberg
News Editor

Steve Gunderson is the Congressman from the third district of Wisconsin which includes Menomonie. He is originally from Osseo, Wi., and is serving his second term in the U.S House of Representatives. On a week-long recess, Gunderson stopped at UW-Stout during a trip to college campuses in his region. The following is part of a 24 minute interview that was held in the Stoutonia office.

Stoutonia: Many people feel that the deficit is the biggest problem facing the United States today. What do you see as a first step that the Congress has to take in combatting this problem?

Gunderson: To enforce some discipline upon us. That is really the problem, neither the President or the Congress today have the discipline necessary to deal with the deficit. We all look at it and say it's got to be solved and say solve it for somebody else. Until you resolve that and get some kind of process together which forces us to deal with it, either by dealing with the spending side or the tax side or both, it's not going to get done. This is the year it should have happened with the budget and it didn't.

However there is this process of dealing with the deficit and the debt ceiling that I hope is going to force Congress to set in place the process.With this, we are going to have deficit targets for each of the next five, six years leading to a balanced budget by 1991 and so the President and Congress can deal with this whenever they want. However, if they do not meet that target we will just meet it by across the board spending cuts.

Stoutonia: So then if that target isn't met, then the Congress will just cut programs to come down to that level?

Gunderson: It would be done in a fair manner in terms of defense being required to take the same percent across the board cut as any other agency.

Stoutonia: Do you think that the American public is losing faith when every year it comes down to the end of the fiscal year and the Congress has to pass stop-gap spending measures?

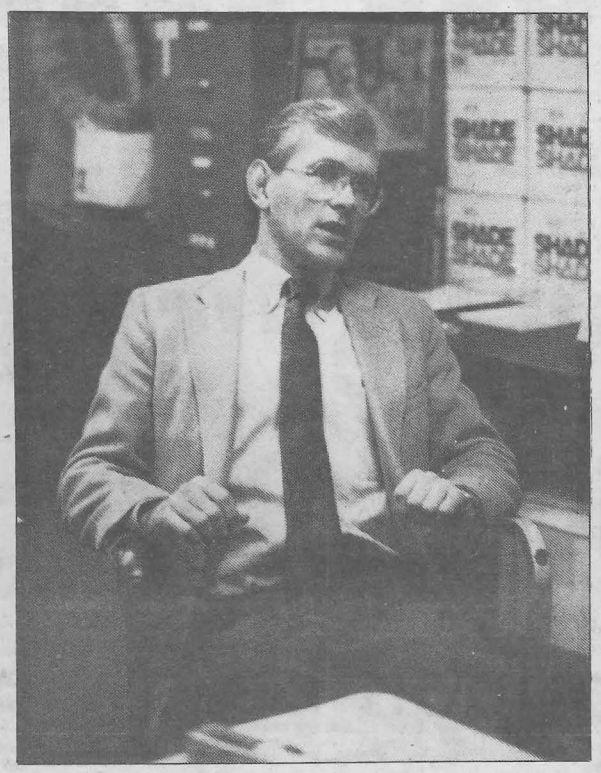
Gunderson: Under this new process [the debt ceiling bill] that would be eliminated, though it wouldn't in terms of funding because we've still got to pass the different spending bills each year. What it would do is that it would effectively reduce the deficit over the next six years and from that perspective it would gain some confidence in the American people's eyes because we would least have put together a process that gets us there and it [the Congress] would make individual decisions on that basis.

Stoutonia: With the Soviet Union at least outwardly willing to make arms concessions, what do you think the Congress and the President can do to make the summit a successful one?

Gunderson: Most importantly what the Congress can do right now is try to maintain one voice from within the United States because if the President goes into the summit under an appearance of a split constituency back home, he certainly doesn't have the bargaining power he otherwise would have.

Secondly, it's essential that everyone understand that the Soviets are embarking on a major propaganda campaign at the present time. With that in mind however, I think there is the possibility that some real discussions can be forthcoming.

I caution people however. I remember when discussions first occurred about the summit the President said I'm not going to have a summit until we're ready to get major agreements and sign them. And everyone said wait a minute, what you ought to do is you ought is simply get together and talk, don't worry about major agreements. Now all of a sudden everyone is back at let's get major agreements and I really caution people that put too high a standard on their expectations out of the summit. Rather just let them get together, for example on strategic arms, those discussions are going on in Geneva, they've been going on for some time and are far more complicated then either the President or Gorbachev can handle by themselves by simply sitting down in personal dialogue.



Steve Gunderson

Stoutonia: What kind of role will the Congress play in the summit, especially concerning approving future weapons systems or additional "Stars Wars" research with the President relying on them as a bargaining chip?

Gunderson: I think Congress recognizes that and therefore provides some flexibility to the President in strategic weapons that otherwise would not be there. For example, there was no effort in Congress to eliminate Strategic Defense Intiative (SDI) research. There is no effort, or very small effort to destroy or eliminate the MX program because people felt the President needed these as bargaining chips as we go to the summit with the Soviets.

Stoutonia: I think it was Gary Hart that said it seems ridiculous that we are building more weapons to bargain for less weapons, in effect you are funding "Star Wars" and building the MX only to go to the table and say let's cut.

Gunderson: Well, I think that you have to look at it a little different than that. The SDI was really put together in a response to the Soviet buildup and a recognition by our Pentagon personnel that the United States would never politically support building up in numbers comparable to the Soviet Union in terms of missiles. Recognizing that the SDI intiative is one that will counter the number of missles they are building now, and I think has already been successful in achieving this goal which is getting the Soviets to talk about reductions in weapons, something a year ago or before SDI they were not willing to do.

Stoutonia: Tying this back into the first question, next year let's say you have to make those across the board spending cuts to reach that target amount, will those kind of weapons systems and programs be considered untouchable?

Gunderson: It is too soon to tell because we haven't worked out the agreement on how to deal with the deficit. There is some speculation that contracting will be exempt. I think that if in effect that would give the Pentagon more of a free ride that will not be accepted by Congress. The Pentagon has got to share equally in the whole deficit reduction plan.

Stoutonia: Maybe you can now enlighten us on the Harkin farm bill, which some people seem to think is the all-potent end to the farm problem.

Gunderson: It's important, I think, that people do understand really what the Harkin farm bill is. The first thing I try to clue in my dairy farmers in Western Wisconsin is that the Harkin farm bill doesn't even include a dairy title. It is only a way to address the meat and grain surpluses in this country. But there is a concept behind it that I think people are trying to support which is the opportunity for farmers through referenda to vote for mandatory supply management, and by virtue of mandatory supply management, legislatively increasing the price they receive for their commodities.

Now, we've completed the farm bill in the House, and sent it on to the Senate, and we deleted every reference to the referenda. I voted for many of them but they still were defeated. I think there was a clear message from the House, that number one, we are not interested in major cuts in price supports during the farm crisis, but at the same time we don't believe we ought turn over the farm policy decision making to a referenda, any more then turn over student financial aid authorization to students or tax reform to the American citizens. Where do you start and where do you stop? There is a very strong attitude in Congress on that. The Harkin bill was referred to in the House as the Alexander bill. Believe it or not, the Alexander bill got only 59 votes. So there not at all is support for that bill.

Now, there are some other problems with it. The drafting of the bill was very shabby, I got up and personally showed some of the collegues some of the drafting errors in the dairy section. I mean that even if I had supported the concept I wouldn't have dared vote for it the way it was drafted. Also, they will be offered an amendment to allow referenda for mandatory supply management in dairy, that received 35 votes. There just is not the support in Congress for mandatory referenda.

Stoutonia: What will it take for the President to get his tax reform through the Congress?

Gunderson: The problem with tax reform isn't the problem with tax reform. It is very difficult in that everyone has said that the tax code should be neutral. If you want equity in taxes, you necessarily cannot have simplicity, they're opposite. So, that becomes a problem, what are you for, tax equity and fairness or tax simplification, they are two different things.

Secondly, you have to look at what the President has proposed is a reduction in income tax rates. In order to get that, you almost have to have every one of the eliminations the President has in his tax bill and the present tax breaks and reductions also, most of which are strongly supported by somebody here, there or otherwise.

The third question is, what the President's tax bill does is it increases taxes on business, decreases taxes on individuals. It could be called a very consumption-oriented tax bill because it encourages people to buy, but doesn't really encourage them to invest. Now, is that what we want in terms of economic policy? It is almost 180 degrees opposite of what the President proposed in 1981, his incentive for savings and investment both among individuals and businesses, so there is some real question about that. It can be argued that the tax code is only industrial policy we have in this country that gives tax incentives for investment, expansion and new equipment for business, and it [the tax bill] could eliminate most of that.

Then how do we compete with the third world on the trade issue that is so important right now? So there a lot of interesting discussions about this.

Stoutonia: So if you see that it increases taxes on business, do you see a long fight in getting a tax bill passed because of business lobbying?

Gunderson: It certainly won't pass the Senate, and we will be lucky if it passes the House this year. About the only way it can pass the House if they keep us there until Christmas which is longer then most people said they want to keep us.

Stoutonia: With the recent raid in El Salvador where the rebels said they were after the U.S. military advisors there, do you think that will change this country's funding or presence in in that area?

Gunderson: I think we've seen in El Salvador in terms of terrorist's actions is similar to what is going on worldwide. There is no doubt we are going to have to spend more money in defending American personnel, both military, civilian and otherwise around the world. Unfortunately we are the target by virtue of being ther leader of the world, I guess.

Above and beyond that, at the present time there is really no dispute on American policy to the El Salvador. There is a consensus behind the Duarte government and what they are trying to do. Whether we move towards a consensus on Nicaragua or not it's too soon to tell. There was a feeling, however, that the recent decision to provide some aid to the Contras in terms of humanitarium, not military aid is a middle ground that allows the President to keep his presence in the region and use that for strategic purposes and keeps Congresses desire to demilitarize our role in Nicaragua. Whether that will evolve into a bipartisan. long-term policy is too soon to tell.

Stoutonia: Are there military advisors aiding the Contras in Nicaragua?

Gunderson: Are they aiding? They're not supposed to be direct military advisors to the Contras. I will tell you that there are private, military people in this country, funded by private organizations that are certainly trying to help. There is no question that there is communication between our government and the Contras in terms of intelligence functions, which is a legitimate government operation, military or non-military.

refrigerator or clock radio, as he suggests, caused such noise, I am sure the owner of the sound-making device would have the equipment corrected for their own peace and quiet. It would not take the police or a neighbor to react first.

There is no manipulation of words in the noise ordinance. It states that one should not disturb another. That is quite clear. The City Council is not opposed to a good time. They object to ones good time causing another a bad time. That seems fair to me.

What the citizens of Menomonie want is not to be disturbed when sleeping. The problem lies in when one should sleep... Before 1:00 a.m. and 7:00 a.m., or after 1:00 a.m. and 7:00 a.m.

Life would be pleasant if we could approach our neighbor and indicate displeasure in their behavior and come to some understanding. However, this is near impossible when the neighbor and house guests are not of sound mind. It is remarkable what alcohol can do to reasonable people. I suggest that Ken Paque have a real life experience with one who has overindulged, and ask that person(s) to reduce their stereo to 2.9.

In addition, should one be honestly concerned about the sound of their stereo, they should take the effort to approach their neighbor. That would be reasonable and sensitive. Being sensitive to others is a blessing.

In closing, one may repair the lawn and a window, but one may never get back or repair a lost night's sleep. The fine for noise abuse should be greater and enforced more often.

Sincerely, Thomas P. Phillips

Label rock albums

In regards to the labeling of rock albums-I find too much simplification on the part of the [personal columns] that condemn the labeling attempt as so much censorship. First of all-NO ONE IS TELLING ANYONE WHAT TO LISTEN TO. Matt Kalina is not a minor nor is he a parent. He is independent and may listen to whatever he wishes to as may anyone else for that matter. However, I am a parent, as are the people who would like to see albums labeled as to their content. I, for one, am concerned about the values that my children develop. I have a standard that I would like to impart to my children, be they 7 or 17.

That is the value of the individual person as a person and not as a piece of flesh without dignity or value. If my child wants to buy an album, I would like to know what the values being propagandized in the album are and discuss this with my child. That is not only my right as a parent, but also my duty as a citizen that I through neglect, allow someone to devalue another human being. Secondly, I am quite sure that anyone who looks at a movie review has made at least a slightly informed choice about the worth of seeing a movie, whether it appeals to that person's standards or not. The same is true for the money spent on albums. The songs we listen to on the radio are there for the express purpose of advertising the "artist" and his "talent" to induce the purchase of same.

If when I choose to go and buy an album by an artist that seems to appeal to me and I have the opportunity to see that the rest of the album contains lyrics which violate my standards or those of my family, I will not have wasted $8-12 for the one song I did like while I find the rest of the album disgusts me. Thirdly, when the movie industry began rating, the movies themselves were not censored. An adult may still see any film he chooses to see, however, now he makes an informed choice about what to see.

I have just read Mr. Brueckner's column "Late Night Visit" in the Oct. 10 issue of the Stoutonia. He brings out some interesting and humorous points about the new Student Center. I must say, I think the new Student Center is a good looking building. The landscaping is ok, but the tombstones could have been left in the graveyard. The interior though, leaves a lot to be desired.

For the past two to three years we have heard that we, the Stout students, were overcrowded in the old Student Center. "The new Student Center would alleviate the overcrowding problem," we were told. Does it look to you, as it does to me, that the only people that are no longer overcrowded are the employees in the new Student Center? The Union, or should I say Grandview Terrace, is still as crowded as the old Union. The table and chair layout looks as if it was done by two children.

The bookstore is bigger, I agree. But more merchandise has made it just as crowded and messy as the old store. The Heritage Room is also packed full of tables and chairs. It is uncomfortable to sit with the back of my chair touching the back of the chair behind me. The Pawn also suffers from overcrowding, along with what I call straightlinitis. Now to the real reason I am writing. The Rec Center. Need I say more?

I believe these views are shared by many students. I have even heard some of the faculty and staff express some of these views. Mr. Editor, is there anything we, the students, can do to have our ideas and opinions heard? Can we work through the Student Senate to have these student occupied areas redesigned and cleaned up? I have some ideas. I don't want to get into them in this letter.

Kellogg discusses behavioral problems

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Have you ever felt trapped by your behavior? Behavior you know is self destructive and yet you feel unable to control? Perhaps for you it is watching too much television, overeating, drinking, smoking, or one of a variety of other experiences. What you suffer from is a compulsive and addictive behavior.

This past Monday, Terry Kellogg, the director of Compulsivity Clinics, gave a two hour presentation on compulsive and addictive behaviors and the problems they create for their owners.

Kellogg began with his description of an addictive behavior: "It is a pathological relationship with a mood altering experience, event, or thing." He then went on to explain that in order for something to be addictive, it must be mood altering - or it won't work. Usually it is euphoric and changes ones' mood or it is a distracting activity which prevents a person from facing their true feelings.Kellogg also described addictive behavior as "mankinds' one universal experience," stating that nearly everyone has some "self destructive behavior that they can't seem to get a handle on and change."

Kellogg then divided addictive behaviors into several categories. The first of these was thoughts. Most compulsive behaviors stem from obsessive thoughts - the thought is the obsession and the compulsion is the acting out of that thought. Worry, ruminating, excess fantasy, and even destructive "self-thought talk" can be compulsive behaviors by themselves.

Activities may also develop into addictions. Kellogg said, "Some people, such as workaholics, students who feel they must participate in every club and activity, gamblers, and others, can't slow down. They can't be with their own realities." Shopping, eating, and even exercise can be addictions. Kellogg said, when faced with the proposal of positive addictions (such as exercise), "I don't believe in positive addictions - there are positive attitudes and behaviors, but not addictions."

Substances, such as drugs and alcohol, are a highly addictive area. The reason for this is usually their euphoric effect, their quickness, and their effectiveness. Food substances, such as sugar and caffeine, and smoking are also a few examples of substance addictions.

People addictions are also possible. Kellogg said, "People can be addicted to being in love, to certain types of relationships (such as abusive), safe relationships, or even to their children."

Even feelings can be addictive. Sometimes people use a feeling, such as anger, to avoid feeling their true feelings. Kellogg described one such method as the "offender system." In the offender system, the person who has the bad emotions inside him projects them on to others and makes them feel the way they do.

Kellogg said, "Addiction begins as a survival technique." It can begin with anything that lends itself towards relieving unwanted anxieties and feelings. In the meantime, the problem causing those feelings continues to grow and the addiction is needed even more. The problem grows in both directions. Often in our society, the time the problem is treated is when it reaches the chronic stage. By this time, the addict has reached the point where he has lost nearly everything, including the desire to break loose from their destructive behavior.

A lot of addictive behaviors begin with the family. Kellogg stated, "If you have a dysfunctional life style, chances are you learned it in a dysfunctional learning system. For most people, the learning system is the family." He then went on to say, "Dysfunction isn't the problem--denial of it is. The family is a closed system and tension affects the whole system."

He stressed that 80 percent of communication is nonverbal and that even though problems may not be spoken about, they are still felt. Often the "denied" problems have reappeared later in the children.

He used the example of stealing and self-exposure to show this. In the cases he presented, children of past offenders were exhibiting these behaviors, even though they had no prior knowledge of their parents actions. Kellogg said, "Denial (of problems and family situations) sets us up to act out, stressing that people are set up to act out addictions because they were denied the ability to deal with their true problems and their feelings about them."

Recovery from addiction, according to Kellogg, is a "forgiveness process" and he stressed that "it is a process, not an event." The first step involves breaking the denial and admitting the problems in the past. He said, "If denial is the dysfunction, what makes things functional? Awareness. It gives us a foothold on the way to recovery."

Next, the victims must realize they have feelings about their problems, and allow themselves to feel those emotions. Then they should try to share those feelings with someone - preferrably someone who caused the initial problems, although this is not necessary. Detachment from that person, either partial or complete is the next part of the process. Finally, acceptance and serenity about the wrongs done and the person who caused the wrongs, should be reached. Kellogg ended with, "You can still have feelings about the wrong, and the person who caused those feelings, but you will no longer allow it to control your life."

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

Dear Patty,

What kinds of responsibilities does our landlord have when preparing the house for the long cold months ahead?

Dear Julie,

You're on the right track. It's a great idea to be thinking of solution to what could be chilly problems.

The landlord must abide by all appropriate local housing codes. Most of these codes require the landlord to maintain the building in a reasonably weathertight and watertight condition. In addition, the codes generally require a landlord to provide storm windows and doors and to keep the furnace, electricity and plumbing in operational and efficient condition. The Wisconsin Department of Industry, Labor and Human Relations has a 67 degree minimum temperature requirement for all habitable rooms, and many local housing codes include similar provisions.

Statewide energy efficiency codes regulate only new construction, so a landlord is not required to insulate rental properties other than by meeting the minumum housing codes.

Tenants should pressure the landlord to insulate. Explain to the landlord that a property will be more rentable if properly insulated and that insulation measures are tax deductible business expenses. As a compromise the tenant can offer to donate some time to do the less complicated work such as calking or weatherstripping. Remember, any promises by a landlord to repair or weatherize a rental unit must be made in writing.

Good luck, Patty

"Seventh Seal" seeks to explain truth

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

There are many kinds of films. The Seventh Seal is one of a kind.

It is Ingmar Bergman. That might almost be enough of an explanation to some readers. It is an allegorical film, a film which reveals a statement while suitably disguised in symbols of a fable.

The Seventh Seal is a classic example of film as an art form. It seeks to explain the truth, or something like it. It seeks to express itself in the terms of the creator.

Bergman's terms are more easily understood now than in 1957 when the film was released. It won a special award for Art Films in the 1957 Cannes Film Festival. Someone understood it then.

It takes some thought. And even then, like art, a lot of questions remained without answers.

It is filmed in black and white which seems to be preferrable to color since the film uses high contrast lighting and sets to emphasize the mysterious drama that unfolds.

Set in the 1400's, the Black Plague is ravaging the population. Fanatic spiritualists, demon worshippers and the whole crazed populous are terribly distraught over the massive death.

It opens on the sea shore. The opening introduces the two leading mortal characters, the knight, Antonius Block, and his squire, Jons.

Death appears to the knight. Death tells Antonius how close the time is. Antonius is a crusader, and a seeker. Antonius does not wish to die until he has learned about the nature of God.

To forestall Death, the knight arranges a chess match between the two. If Antonius wins, he is released. He is free from death as long as the game proceeds. Antonius desires to use his time to achieve one significant act.

During the film certain images are brought forth that have no explanation. One particularly haunting line is, "There were four suns in the sky." The end of the world is related in Biblical terms and the scale of the mystery is equal to the scale of destruction.

Attention shifts to a small family of travelling theater troopers. Husband Joseph, his young wife, their infant son Michael, and "troop director", Skat.

Joseph has visions. It seems he has less earthly sense than ethereal. He is aware of the importance of his life and its connection to performance.

So does Bergman. The troopers appear to symbolize the "stage-like" quality life has for all of us. I believe he also slips in a line to state how he felt about the mixed reception of his own films. One of the troopers says, "People are not interested in art." That could be.

> During the film, certain images are brough forth that have no explanation.

At times, Bergman is writing like Shakespeare, or from a similar view of man. Joseph tells Skat one beautiful morning, "A fool like you could play the human soul." It might take a fool to play the role well and properly.

Later, the squire and the knight are in a church. There is an artist painting a large mural depicting the plague. Jons is with the artist as he describes his mural and the story, which later becomes the parallel for the film action. Incredible times, they must have been.

During the same scene, Antonius reveals his philosophy to someone he believes to be a monk. He also reveals his chess strategy, but it turns out to be Death, "a very sharp tactician."

One scene is profoundly strange and unsettling. The troopers in harlequin dress are performing a small musical skit. The lines are a strange mixture of paradoxical impossibilities.

The play is interrupted by a frightful parade of fanatics, monks, and twisted devotees involved in self-flagellation.

The spokesman for the procession preaches Hell and Redemption. His face is incredible as he curses the crowd telling them the plague is Divine Retribution for their sinful ways. The powerful sound of the Swedish language makes the scene even more dramatic.

What is so powerful about the scene is the implication of a play within a play, guilt and anxiety overriding the otherwise absurd nature of the play of daily life. Also, the measure of the finalty of Death is matched against the brevity of the skit of life.

The symbolism in this Swedish masterpiece is very rivoting. No one wishes to die without some understanding, or knowledge about the nature of life. So each character seeks in their own degree to understand or rationalize or ignore.

The ancient time setting makes a reference to primitive thinking and the weakness each succeeding generation accuses of the predecessor's ideology. In this respect, the squire plays the role of modern existentialist, and modernist cynic.

The tale proceeds between moments of the chess match. Antonius concludes that his goal is not to prevent death for himself, but to guide the troopers through the night and deliver them to the light of morning.

Each film character portrays an intellectual or spiritual disposition towards life, fulfilled in character behavior.

This is a tough and thought-provoking film. In the words of the Kinks' songwriter Ray Davies, "life is too complicated." This film may not provide any answers to the seekers in the audience, but it will surely give them some brilliantly conceived depictions of universal thoughts on the subject of life.

The film is sponsored by the Foreign Film Society and will be shown free to the public tonight and Friday, at 7 and 9 p.m. in 321 Applied Arts.

Quillings' years of campus living produce ideas for improvement

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

When people tour the UW-Stout Memorial Student Center, they comment upon a variety of subjects. When Lawrence and Joyce Quilling walk through the building, they honestly remark, "We used to live here."

Within a span of 27 years, the Quillings witnessed the progress of their old neighborhood. It transformed from a residential area to that of the education industry. Across from the Technology Wing, the Quillings lived in a two story house surrounded by a garden of flowers. They lived in this house until 1984, at which time they moved to North Menomonie.

Quilling is a known community figure. He is the neighborhood barber at Morrie's Barber Shop across from the Administration Building. It is still a place to meet and socialize. Quilling said, "In the place of a barber shop we cover more topics in one day than a person does in a month."

Kinfolk of Quilling came from Prussia and settled to the east of Menomonie in 1845. There they set up the homestead and farmed for a living. When Quilling worked in the hay fields he'd see cars drive by with fishing poles tied to the top. He would say, "Boy if we didn't have to do this we'd be going fishing."

Quilling's uncle was a barber. After high school Quilling went to a barber school in St. Paul. He started his trade in a shop on Broadway. Why the barber trade? Quilling said, "I enjoyed meeting people more than I enjoyed talking to cows."

> I enjoyed meeting people more than I enjoyed talking to cows.
> —Lawrence Quilling

Due to their contact with the student population, the Quillings have become internationally known. Mrs. Quilling said, "We've been flying places and when we land a younger fellow will come up and say, 'Are you from Menomonie?'"

Students in the United States and abroad keep in touch with the Quillings. A Stout alumnus from Nigeria sends a check every three months to the barber shop. In return, Quilling sends to Nigeria hair care products which are not available in that country.

Foreign students often deliver notes to the barber shop from alumni in their home country. Newspapers from around the world can be found in the shop right next to copies of the Dunn County News.

Foreign students often come to Stout a week before the semester begins. When the Quillings lived in their house on campus they saw these students walking around. This couple's usual response was, "Come on over and sit yourself down."

Homecoming was a special week for the couple on campus. Mrs. Quilling would make a kettle full of soup for the students and alumni who would stop by for a visit. She also baked bread and cookies.

During the halftime of the homecoming game there would be the "pot call" at the Quilling home in order to take advantage of the homecooking. Mrs. Quilling often tended to the children of alumni who were too cold to see the end of the football game.

A turkey was on the grill during the game. It would be ready to eat for those who would stop by, then go uptown to the bars. The Quillings laid out their table of plenty for 15 years.

Being on campus for nearly three decades, the Quillings have experienced quite a bit of action. Quilling said, "We went through the panty raids, the streakers and all the rest of it."

During the rebellious era of the 1960's there were not many disturbances in Menomonie. "When a protest would come around, the instructors would schedule a test," Quilling said.

"We have two cities here, the university city and the shopping city," said Quilling. He would like to see more shopping available for the university age person. He would also like to see more restaurants and lodging places in the area. In time, he believes the hotel and restaurant management program will expand so far as to have their own hotel on campus.

"I'd like to see the Stout homecoming parade up and down Main Street. For every napkin and

Donahue entertains Pawn crowd with original and famous songs

Suzette Kramer
Arts Reporter

The Pawn, on October 10, 11 and 12, succeeded once again in providing for their viewers a very talented entertainer. Vicki Donahue, a former Stout student who majored in Fashion Merchandising, performed a number of her own original songs as well as many songs by other artists of the 60's, 70's and 80's.

Donahue, who first picked up a guitar in 1974, has very well mastered the techniques of a musician. She has been playing professionally since 1982 in such places as the Pawn Live Coffeehouse, the Eau Claire Cabin Coffeehouse, the Gnu Deli in Eau Claire, and various Ground Rounds, Country Clubs, banquets on campus and weddings.

Before she started singing as a career, she also played her guitar at church, and put on some special concerts with other professional-bound hopefuls like herself.

Inspired by such artists as the Beatles, Joni Mitchell, and Joan Armatrading, Donahue has styled her own music around many of their techniques. She stressed, "Joni Mitchell and Joan Armatrading have been my major influences, but I am working to develop my own style."

Donahue feels her career as an entertainer is going "Great!" She is just beginning as a professional, so she also relies on her job in the Costume department at the Children's Theatre in Minneapolis to make ends meet.

> Her original songs were great.
> —Kelli Rai Smith, Sophomore

Many of Donahue's original songs reflect a great deal of affection and emotion. One song in particular, entitled "Your Company", cast a silencing lull over the viewers at the Pawn.

This song was written for her family and shared many relatable sibling rivalries. Donahue later admitted, "It honestly made my family cry. This is the first song I have written that actually succeeded in bringing tears to their eyes."

In her production, Donahue also included a few Van Morrisson pieces, some Simon and Garfunkel and "Poetry Man" by Phoebe Snow. Performing other artists' work is never an easy task due to preconceived judgements by the audience, yet Donahue worked with this handicap, creating a true musician's dream.

Most members of the audience were very pleased with Donahue's performance. Kelli Rai Smith, a sophomore at Stout said, "Her original songs were great. The lyrics were touching and a true sign of talent."

Mark Taylor, a student at Mankato State in Minnesota, had only one complaint. "Some of the members of the audience were very noisy and rude. But the music was really interesting."

Looking into the future, Donahue hopes to do many more performances, including visits to the Pawn, although nothing has been set up as of yet.

The Pawn engages many entertainers throughout the year. Some of these are professionals while others are just willing to perform their works for an audience. Its coffeehouse atmosphere enhances almost any entertainer who sets foot on the stage.

Benefit dance to fund surgery for Stout grad

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

One of those little miracles is about to take place. Operation Dance.

This is a benefit. A medical fund-raising event for a recent Stout graduate. Operation Dance.

This is not one of those nebulous benefits for Tennis Elbow — Give So That Others May Serve, or something like it. This is a bit closer to home.

Earlier this summer, Christopher Pouler, a spring 1985 graduate in Industrial Design, was the random victim of a life-threatening medical problem.

Without warning Pouler was siezed by a very serious case of peritonitis, which is acute inflamation of the abdominal membrane. It was complicated by a massive infection.

It required a prolonged and greatly difficult surgical episode and extensive recovery. To complicate the matter worse, it will require a second operation later this month to remove a section of faulty intestine.

That is the motivation behind Operation Dance. The tremendous burden of a major operation does not fit well into Pouler's budget, nor would it into anyone's, particularly a recent grad. You can imagine.

The idea behind the benefit is credited to Rob Price, art faculty. Once suggested, it was immediately pushed from the idea to reality. The reality is Operation Dance.

Pouler's former roommate and friend, Bill Moran began to organize the event, first intended to be held off-campus. Later, a more elegant facilty was desired. Arrangements were made for the Great Hall in the Student Center.

Menomonie's two best rock & roll bands were volunteered, agreeably. DCver and The Curbfeelers will provide the dance music. These bands are well established on campus and are urging their fans to attend this special event.

DCver, formerly known as a heavy rock & roll band, has recently added a new lead singer and a synthesizer player. They consider their new sound lighter than heavy, better than pop.

The Curbfeelers also feature a talented lead singer and a first-class keyboard player. Well rooted in rhythm & blues, this band incorporates a variety of tunes into their own excellent sound.

Since Operation Dance is a privately sponsored event, beer will be served. Accordingly, the alcohol age limit will be enforced and those under 19 will not be admitted.

Special thanks go to all who helped organize the event and to those who have already made donations, including Campus Ministry for donating the free printing of posters and tickets.

Few occassions elicit the kind of emotional reponse that Operation Dance has brought.

This special event will begin at 8 p.m., Saturday, October 19, in the Great Hall. Tickets available at the Art Office, third floor Applied Arts, at the door the night of the dance, and from organizers and members of the bands. A donation of $3 is requested for tickets. The benefit is sponsored by the Fine Arts Association and all funds raised will go to Chris Pouler.

Quilling

beer container left behind, somebody has made money on it, who brought it into town, who sold it, who used it and the man who will dispose of it," Quilling said.

This couple has many suggestions as to how to improve the community and relations with Stout. Before Christmas they would like to hear foreign students on the radio explaining their holiday traditions and singing their native songs.

Another of their suggestions is to display the flags of nations represented at Stout. Maybe it could be an addition to the decor of the Student Center.

Being across from the Administration Building in the barber shop, Quilling has seen a large number of students pose before the "University of Wisconsin-Stout" sign on graduation day. He believes "Menomonie, Wis. USA" should be added to the sign. This would give a reference to those visiting and a relationship between the city and the university.

While living on campus the Quillings realized the talents of the students around them. Once a week the couple walked through the Applied Arts Building to see the art work being produced. They would like to see rotating displays of students' work in the windows of local businesses.

During the year, the Quillings travel. Like the campus population, they leave town at Christmas time. This is when Menomonie quiets. Two-thirds of the taverns close and life is at a standstill.

"I would like to spend a vacation here in Menomonie," said Quilling. He believes it would take a week to see all the buildings and work done at Stout. This couple especially enjoys seeing the flower beds on campus. Many of the flowers which were in their old garden now beautify the beds near the Home Economics Building.

When the University was ready to work on the lot for construction of the Student Center, the Quillings were willing to move. They stayed in their old house as long as possible because they really liked living there.

Do they miss their old home? Quilling said, "Home is home, no matter if the roof over your head is a big or small one."

How would you characterize American food? "Soft," "bland," "spicy," and "fried" are some words foreign students used in their descriptions of American food.

A few foreign students I talked to — Sandra Reece-Tuitt from Trinidad and Jamal Al-Awami from Saudia Arabia — found that foods in the United States are similar to what they're accustomed to. Several students noted differences between food in America and food from their countries.

Claudia Sanclemente from Columbia noticed that Americans have more fried foods, use more preservatives, use more canned foods, and put more emphasis on sweets.

Betty Finlay from Grenada thought that foods in the United States tends to be softer; she also said the sweet and salty flavor combinations in dishes like pork and apples, and chicken and pineapples are different from Grenadian cookery.

Several students mentioned the emphasis on fast foods in America as being different from foods in their countries. Clemente (Columbia) says she would like to see more time taken in food preparation here.

Even foods that we consider ethnic in America may not be authentic. Stella Chow says that Chinese food eaten in her native country of Hong Kong is not like "Americanized Chinese food." Chop suey and chow mein noodles are not even served in her country.

To get a taste of "home," many foreign students cook foods from their native countries. Chow says, "I cook Chinese every night." Adesola Adisa-Ajibowo explains, "I prepare food in a Nigerian way. If I want to eat American food, I'll go to a restaurant."

Trinidadians Wendy Bridglal and Reece-Tuitt cook a mixture of American and West Indian food. "On the weekends when there's time I cook Trinidadian foods. Other times I eat things like peanut butter sandwiches," said Bridglal.

Finlay (Grenada) cooks mostly American food because she can't find foods she's accustomed to here. Obtaining special ingredients seems to be a problem for many foreign students. Bridglal (Trinidad) finds that the Menomonie Food Co-op caters to international students; they'll often order a special food if a lot of students request it.

Some students pick up specialty foods in larger cities. Chow gets Chinese food in Minneapolis. Adisa-Ajibowo gets Nigerian food from Chicago.

Finlay has relatives in New York who send her Grenadian foods like pigeon peas and dried salted codfish.

When necessary, substitutions are made. Adisa-Ajibowo substitutes Bisquick for the dried cassava flour used in Nigeria. Reece-Tuitt (Trinidad) uses spinach instead of dasheen leaves in a dish called calalloo. Finlay (Grenada) substitutes lentils for pigeon peas in stew.

Some foods mentioned which are unavailable and difficult to find substitutes for include yuca, a type of potato used in soups in Columbia, coconut water (from green coconuts) and fresh fish from Trinidad, and papa, corn flour from Nigeria.

One foreign food which is available in Menomonie at the Co-op and sometimes at Don's Supervalue is the plantain banana. Plantain is a starchy firm variety of the banana that is eaten cooked.

A popular way of serving plantain is sliced and deep-fried. These plantain chips are similar to potato chips and are eaten as a snack food in the West Indies, Africa, and South America. This recipe comes from Karen Koo, a native of Tobago.

Plantain Chips

Choose plantains that are half-ripe, just starting to turn yellow. Peel plantain and cut into 1/8-inch slices. Heat at least 2 inches of oil in a saucepan to 350. Fry plantain slices in oil until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. Sprinkle with salt. One plantain will make about 1 cup of plantain chips.

This Kofta Curry recipe was contributed by Shams Poonawala, a native of India. The recipe calls for three spices commonly used in Indian cookery: coriander leaves, turmeric, and curry powder (a blend of spices). In India, cooks would mix their own curry and add it generously. This is a milder version of this Indian main dish.

Kofta Curry

3 slices bread
1 lb. ground beef
2 eggs
1 tsp. coriander leaves
3/4 tsp. paprika
salt and pepper to taste

Soak bread in water to soften; squeeze water out. Combine with remaining ingredients. Form into balls. Set aside.

Curry:
4 fresh tomatoes, quartered
1 onion, quartered
1 fresh green chili
2 Tbsp. tomato paste
2 Tbsp. curry powder
1 tsp. coriander leaves
1 tsp. turmeric
1/2 tsp. paprika
1/4 cup shortening

In a blender container, combine all curry ingredients except shortening. Blend until smooth. In a large saucepan, melt the shortening. Add the blended mixture. Cook over medium heat until mixture thickens. Add 1 cup of water. Bring sauce to a boil and add meatballs. Cook, stirring occasionally, until meatballs are cooked through. Serve Kofta Curry over rice or bread. Makes 4 servings.

Foreign foods like these will be served at the International dinner November 9 at the Great Hall in the Student Center. A cultural show with singing, dancing, and a fashion show will accompany the dinner. Tickets are available at the service center.

Cinema to present "M★A★S★H"

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

University Cinema goers will be treated to M*A*S*H this Sunday Oct. 20, at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

When M*A*S*H was released in 1970, The New Yorker reviewer Pauline Kael called it, "The best American war comedy since sound came in." In the past 15 years M*A*S*H has grown into an American film classic.

Director Robert Altman blended sensitivity together with humor and ended up with a relentlessly funny film that makes the viewer seriously consider the insanity of war.

Elliot Gould is Trapper John MacIntyre and Donald Sutherland is Hawkeye Pierce, two college acquaintances stationed together by coincidence to work as surgeons at the first Mobile Army Surgical Hospital in the Korean War.

It doesn't take long to figure out there are a thousand other places Pierce and MacIntyre would rather be than in Korea patching up American soldiers as fast as they come in so that they can be returned to the front lines in record time.

To remain sane upon their release from this body shop, these two surgeons devise a limitless number of schemes and highjinks allowing them to escape temporarily from the harsh reality of their surroundings.

The fun in M*A*S*H results from watching the resourcefulness of Pierce and MacIntyre in making the best of a bad situation over and over again. They relentlessly tease Majors Frank Burns and Margaret "Hot Lips" Houlihan who spend most of their time trying to play the Army's game. Robert Duvall and Sally Kellerman's fine performances as Frank Burns and "Hot Lips" Houlihan provided the perfect foil for the planned debauchery by Pierce and MacIntyre.

Frank Burns and "Hot Lips" see the war as a means toward their own advancement. Their game is to march around playing by the rules and acting as if they're both future generals in the Army. Of course, they're nothing more than generals in their own minds.

Along with the outstanding performances by Duvall, Gould, Kellerman and Sutherland, Gary Burghoff as Corporal Radar O'Reilly deserves recognition. Radar isn't too different from Hawkeye and Trapper in that he finds himself in a war he'd rather not be part of.

Burghoff is memorable as Radar, the seemingly prepubic Iowa farm boy stuck in a war he doesn't understand. His love for animals combined with his yearning to return to the life he knows back in Iowa, makes Radar the most adorable character on screen. Charlie Brown in Korea if you will.

Memorably funny scenes from M*A*S*H include the resolution of a bet between Hawkeye and his tentmate concerning whether or not "Hot Lips" is a true blond. Through great teamwork they simply remove the tent in which "Hot Lips" is showering so the whole camp knows, "Does she or doesn't she?"

Another time, Pierce and MacIntyre team up with Radar to help the whole camp listen in to Frank Burns and "Hot Lips" making love. For those who don't already know, that scene is the source of "Hot Lips"' nickname.

I'd be remiss if I didn't mention the funniest football game in movie history. Brent Mussburger couldn't begin describing the chicanery involving the M*A*S*H football game.

Director Robert Altman fashioned M*A*S*H into a cinematic masterpiece that helps the viewer understand the desperate condition forced on those who fight our wars. M*A*S*H also succeeds in eliminating the artificial barriers set up between those engaged in war so we can see the aspects of humanity shared by us all.

Iowa Poet

Poet Gerald Stern will present a reading of his work at 8 p.m., Thursday, October 17 in Room 208 of UW-Stout's Home Economics building.

Stern is a distinguished member of the faculty of the University of Iowa's Writing Workshop, considered the most influential of all American creative writing programs. In 1977, Stern received the prestigious Lamont Poetry award. He has also been the recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship and two creative writing grants from the National Endowment of the Arts.

Stern's most recent books have all received strong praise in "The New York Times Book Review" and other respected journals. "Lucky Life" and "The Red Coal" were published by Houghton, Mifflin. "Paradise Poems" was released last year by Random House.

About his craft Stern writes, "Poets are witnesses, living proof of the uniqueness of the human soul, of the unforgivable sadness of its perishing, of its immortality. The more living the poet, the more unbearable the death; the greater the poem, the more it ransoms."

While at Stout, Stern will also visit creative writing and American literature classes.

Stern's appearance at Stout is sponsored by the University Speakers Series, the University Poetry Series and the English department.

Poetry Contest

National College Poetry Contest, Fall Concours 1985 is offering $200 in cash and book prizes and free printing for all accepted poems in the ACP Anthology. It will again be of special interest to all collegiate poets as it provides for them a source of inspiration and encouragement and a unique, intercollegiate outlet for their literary ambitions.

The forthcoming ACP Anthology, sponsored by International Publications, will be the 21st edition since it was first published in 1975.

The contest is open to all college and university students desiring to have their poetry anthologized. Cash prizes will go to the top five poems. Awards of free printing will be made for all accepted manuscripts in the handsomely bound and copyrighted anthology, AMERICAN COLLEGIATE POETS.

The deadline for the poems is Thursday, October 31, 1985. For more information see the office window of the Stoutonia in the lower half of the Memorial Student Center.

Adesh relates yoga and stress

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

Yoga is a systematic science which deals purely with the union of the individual self with the supreme universal self. It is considered by its proponents to be the ultimate solution to stress.

Yoga guru, professor H.S. Adesh, delivered a presentation in UW-Stout's Great Hall Tuesday evening which dealt with "Yoga and the Psychology of Stress."

Adesh, a former professor of Hindi at the University of UTTAR Pradesh, is the director and spiritual head of the Canadian Vidya Mandir and the Indian Institute of Knowledge in Trinidad.

Adesh has been practicing yoga for virtually all his life. He was born into a family that had been practicing yoga for generations.

"I've inherited my interest in yoga through my father and forefathers," Adesh explained. He has also passed this tradition on to his children.

Although most people think of yoga in terms of reaching a state of "superconsciousness," Adesh believes that this is only one of the forms of yoga.

There are actually eight limbs or types of yoga, according to Adesh. Each type must be practiced to discipline the internal and external mind and body.

The major categories of yoga are Hatha Yoga, Raja Yoga, Karma Yoga and Jnana Yoga. Hatha Yoga deals with the science of the physical body in attaining proper health. Raja Yoga deals with the control of one's emotions, thoughts and desires.

Karma Yoga teaches one to live extremely skillfully and selflessly and Jnana Yoga, the highest form of yoga, is the yoga of knowledge and wisdom.

Yoga has attracted particular attention in the area of stress management because it deals with relaxation of the mind and body. It appears to be one of the oldest continuous disciplines in this area.

Adesh believes that yoga helps reduce stress in daily living. He emphasizes that stress can be either positive or negative, and that experiencing stress is essential for health.

"Stress cannot be totally removed from life," Adesh said. However, yoga techniques such as using certain body postures and breathing patterns can aid in stress reduction.

Although yoga disciples have been practicing these exercises and techniques for centuries, only now, with the advent of psychophysiological testing devices, scientists are able to test and validate the effectiveness of yoga and stress reduction.

"Yoga has greatly reduced the stress in my life," Adesh said. "I have a disciplined mind and live very comfortably and contentedly, enjoying both the happiness and sorrow which life brings."

Adesh believes that his peace of mind stems from having a mind and body that are in harmony with each other and the universal self. When there is disharmony in a body system, sensory and motor malfunctions occur which can result in physical and social disorders.

Adesh has many other interests which he relates to yoga. Once the chairman of the music department at the University of Kashmir, India, he is a world renowned musician and vocalist.

"Music is a perfect discipline for the mind." Adesh said. "It helps to develop the concentration needed for meditation."

Adesh is also a writer. He has authored several volumes of books, poetry, and encyclopedias of music.

He is currently the editor of "Jyoti," a magazine on Eastern philosophy, fine art, literature and culture. "Jyoti" is published monthly in English and quarterly in Hindi.

He has spoken at numerous conferences around the world and is a licensed marriage official in Canada.

Adesh's visit to UW-Stout was sponsored by the Stout Yoga Assembly. This organization contains some of Adsesh's leading disciples and teachers of yoga.

Apple orchard operation involves Connells' year-round commitment

Beth Reid
Contributing Writer

The combination of the cool crisp air, along with the fiery colors of the falling leaves are the makings of a perfect autumn day. On such a day as this, what better place is there to be than in the country enjoying the out of doors? And with this being apple season, what better place to visit than Connell's Apple Orchard?

Connell's Orchard, located nine miles west of Menomonie, is the largest apple orchard in North Central Wisconsin. The Connell family have been growing apples in Wisconsin for over 100 years, and they purchased this orchard in 1939.

The orchard spreads across 180 acres of land and contains approximately 14,000 trees. It was here that the new variety known as the Connell Red apple was produced in 1949 by Thomas Connell.

Although fall is typically considered "apple season," the orchard is in operation year round. "People don't realize how much work goes into running an orchard," Connell said. "It's a continuous cycle of pruning, planting, spraying and harvesting."

Pruning begins in the month of November, after all the apples have been picked, and continues through the winter months until April. "We prune all of our trees, select certain trees which need to be removed or remove whole sections of trees," said Connell. "We also go through and paint the trunks of the young trees to protect them from the winter damage."

When the winter is over, the second part of the cycle begins. "Apple Blossom Time" is about May 10th. During this season, the trees are in bloom and must be pollenated. Connell has bees brought in by a local beekeeper to pollenate his trees.

The bees are left in the orchard for a period of time, and then taken away again when the process is complete. The pollenating process must be done each year because it has a great impact on the number of apples the trees will produce.

> People don't realize how much work goes into running an orchard.
> —Thomas Connell

Another aspect of caring for the trees is in combatting mice. Mice love apple tree bark and will eat rings around the trunks of trees and cause the trees to die. To protect his trees, Connell does three things. "We mow between the trees frequently so the mice don't have a place to hide," Connell said. "Then we put mouse guards and poison around each tree. By doing this, we don't have much trouble with mice killing the trees."

Throughout the summer, the orchard is under constant care. It is sprayed 16 times a season, mowed and pruned. Connell and his employees work busily, awaiting the arrival of the picking season.

The harvesting season begins in August and runs through October. All of the apples are picked by hand. From September 1st thru October 15th customers can pick their own apples.

The time of harvesting is determined by the type of apple. There are a variety of apples and each variety is ripe at a different part of the season. "Everybody has their favorite apple," Connell said. "That's why we have so many varieties of apples — to suit all the different taste preferences."

After the apples are harvested, they may go to a number of different places. The majority of the harvest is sold to a broker in Minneapolis, 25% goes to Canada, some are distributed throughout this area, and the remainder is sold on the floor to visitors of the orchard.

"People will drive from all over the area to buy apples here," Connell said. "On any given weekend, two-fifths of our customers are coming from Minnesota. They are looking for high quality. All of our apples here are hand packed, choice, and fully ripe. The stock of apples is also rotated often."

Apples are for sale at Connell's Orchard from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., seven days a week from August through November. Carameled apples are also for sale on weekends only, and there is free homemade apple juice on weekends during September and October.

So if you're looking for somthing to do on a Saturday afternoon, why not take a scenic drive out of town and visit Connell's Orchard?

Album Agency

New sound for AC/DC

Dan Elmergreen

Fly On The Wall

AC/DC is not a problem child, only the name of their latest LP is. "Fly On The Wall" I feel is a turn-off to the listeners, but if the avid fans of the group give this album a chance, they will find soothing heavy rock and roll.

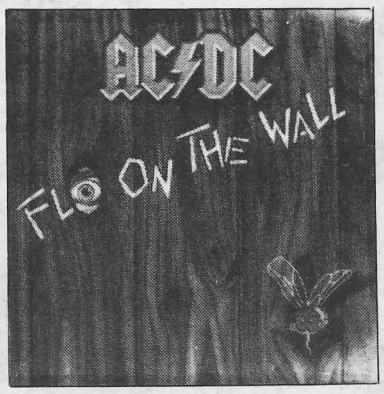
It has been a while since the group last released an album and it seems they took the time to work on moving from the "old AC/DC sound."

Their time and effort show clearly that this well-seated group can still satisfy the diehard listeners as well as appeal to a whole new crowd of screaming 14-year-old high school students.

Generally this does not mean the music is totally pop, although one must enjoy the essence behind AC/DC's lyrics.

From the start of side one the group bombards you with the title cut "Fly on the Wall." Immediately you get the feeling that this is the same old group, but lucky enough, this is a very short track.

To continue with side one the group breaks into a slower than normal beat but a unique style that separates this LP from past AC/DC LP's. The one song that stands out is the tune "Danger," which plasters you with paronia and fear of talking to strangers with the repeated chorus, "Danger, Danger, don't talk to strangers."



Side two appears to take the crisp rumble of the bass guitars and drums and incorporate this with some meaningless lyrics like "PLAYING WITH THE GIRLS gonna get you hot."

To sum up the latest musical creation by AC/DC one can only say it's for sure a hot track. And as for the new listener, this trend toward heavy metal may stray thought and attitudes of the common person (not recommended for them).

Low-life Fact 100c

Another outstanding release by the popular English group NEW ORDER is sure to install new life into casual listeners.

This LP is a sensational blend of nostalgic British beat with a progressive attack on lyrics. Fitting into the recent trend, the group commit themselves to loyalty to the mother country and praise the fact that they would die for their country.

With all this patriotics, NEW ORDER still manages to input staggering bass/synth rhythm with meandering lyrical influence.

Immediate reflection of this beat-filled release is exceptionally top notch and well worth the investment.

The key point to inventive packaging has been covered in strict detail by marketing the cassette version of the LP in a book sized box with collector photos of the group.

Originality and aggressive marketing tactics pinpoint this new release by NEW ORDER as an experiment in success.

Rhos Male Choir brings famous Welsh choral style to UW-Stout

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

It has been said that when three or more men congregate in a village square in Wales, they have the makings for a choir. Eighty-seven of those Welshmen, known as the Rhos Male Choir are bringing the famous Welsh choral singing to Menomonie.

The Choir was a tremendous success in Menomonie, the Midwest, and nationwide (via public radio) during their 1983 U.S. tour. In Menomonie, the choir performed at the Mabel Tainter Theater, and informally at several local pubs.

The concert is scheduled for Tuesday, October 22, at 7:30 p.m. in the Great Hall of the UW-Stout Student Center.

Choir includes farmers, teachers, policemen, and businessmen, ranging in age from their mid-20's to 70. Few in the choir can read musical notation so all their work is done by ear and memory. Two soloists travelling with the choir are "on loan" from the Welsh National Opera. They are Dafydd Edwards, tenor, and Ifan Lloyd, bass.

The concert promises the precision of tone, impeccable diction, and stirring interpretations for which the choir is renowned. The program features hymns, operatic choruses, traditional and spiritual songs sung in Welsh, English, Latin and German.

The choir comes from the village of Rhosllanerchrugog, known throughout Wales as "Rhos." It is a sprawling village of narrow streets and huddled houses, located in Northeast Wales, not far from the English border.

When the coal mines of the area were flourishing during the first half of this century, about 12,000 people lived in Rhos. Today, the coal industry in the area is greatly reduced and the population of the village has fallen, but the intensity and flavor of life is unchanged. The Welsh language prevails in daily conversations in Rhos and Welsh traditions continue.

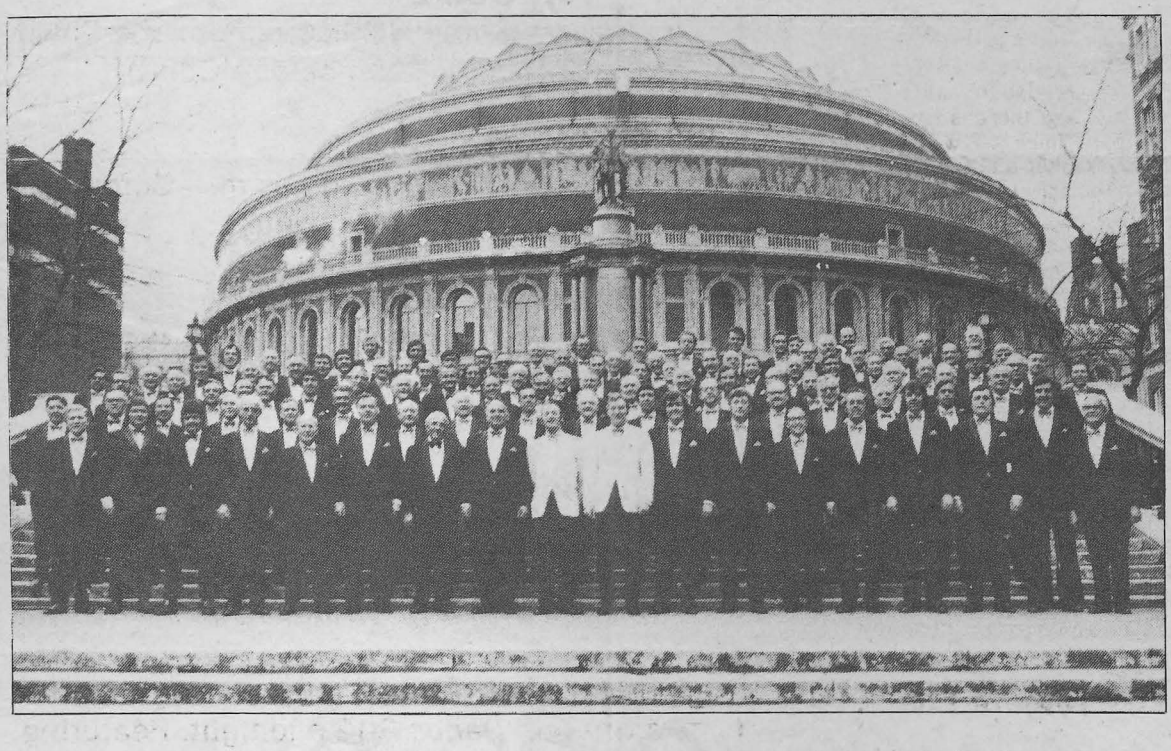
Throughout Europe, Wales is known as "the land of song" primarily due to the excellence of its choirs. The Rhos Male Voice Choir was formed in 1891 and has consistently been judged best in annual choral competitions known as "eisteddfodau."

The Choir won the BBC "Best Male Voice Choir in Britain" award in 1984 and 1985, selected from over 100 other choirs. Concert tours in Canada, Spain, Germany and the U.S. have established their reputation on the international music scene.

Currently the choir is conducted by Colin Jones. Jones has held the baton for 25 years, having first been the accompanist for the previous four years. He is also Principal Lecturer and Head of Music at the North East Wales Institute of Higher Education. Jones was invited to become the conductor for the Rhos Choir when he was only 22.

The program includes works by Bizet, Mozart, Verdi, Puccini, Welsh composers, and traditional pieces arranged by choir piano accompanist John Davies.

Ticket prices for the concert are $6 and are available at the Student Center, the International Programs office, 210 Harvey Hall, and at the door the night of the concert.



THE VOICE OF WALES—
The Rhos Male Voice Choir will be in concert at UW-Stout Oct. 22. There are few choirs in the world of this quality. Their return to Menomonie is a special event.

Stout gridders surprise Whitewater, 7-0

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The Stout gridders shut out UW-Whitewater, 7-0 at Whitewater last Saturday, giving them their second conference win of the season. The victory raises the gridders record to 2-2 in the WSUC and 3-3 for an overall record this year.

After the game Head Coach Bob Kamish said, "Everybody played with a lot of intensity."

Rob Lindberg started the game in place of Glen Majszak, but Lindberg was injured on a broken play. Jim Gorecki replaced Lindberg as the punter, as Gorecki used to kick in high school. Unprepared at the time, Gorecki kicked the ball seven times for an average of 31 yards. When Whitewater punted Gorecki was also the one to receive the ball as he did six times. This earned Gorecki the offensive player of the week honor.

The only score in the game came early in the fourth quarter. The drive was set up after Stout punted the ball, but Whitewater was called for a roughing the kicker penalty. Majszak then engineered the offense 14 plays which moved the ball from the Stout 42-yard line to the Whitewater one-yard line. Then on third down Majzsak scored on the keeper.

One of the major improvements was the decrease in the number of turnovers by the offense — one, as compared with eight in the game against UW-Eau Claire last weekend. The ball was fumbled four times, but recovered three of those times. The one ball that was not recovered came in the last minute of the game when Whitewater had the ball at their 37-yard line.

Whitewater started their last possession with 57 seconds left in the game. Whitewater's first play was a run by the quarterback. On second down the ball was intercepted by Scott Romenesko which killed any chance for a last second score for Whitewater. The interception was Romenesko's second of the day and of the season.

The defense had caused one more turnover which came in between Romenesko's interceptions in the fourth quarter. That turnover was a fumble recovered by the gridders at the Stout 41-yard line.

> Everybody played with a lot of intensity.
> —Bob Kamish, Head Coach

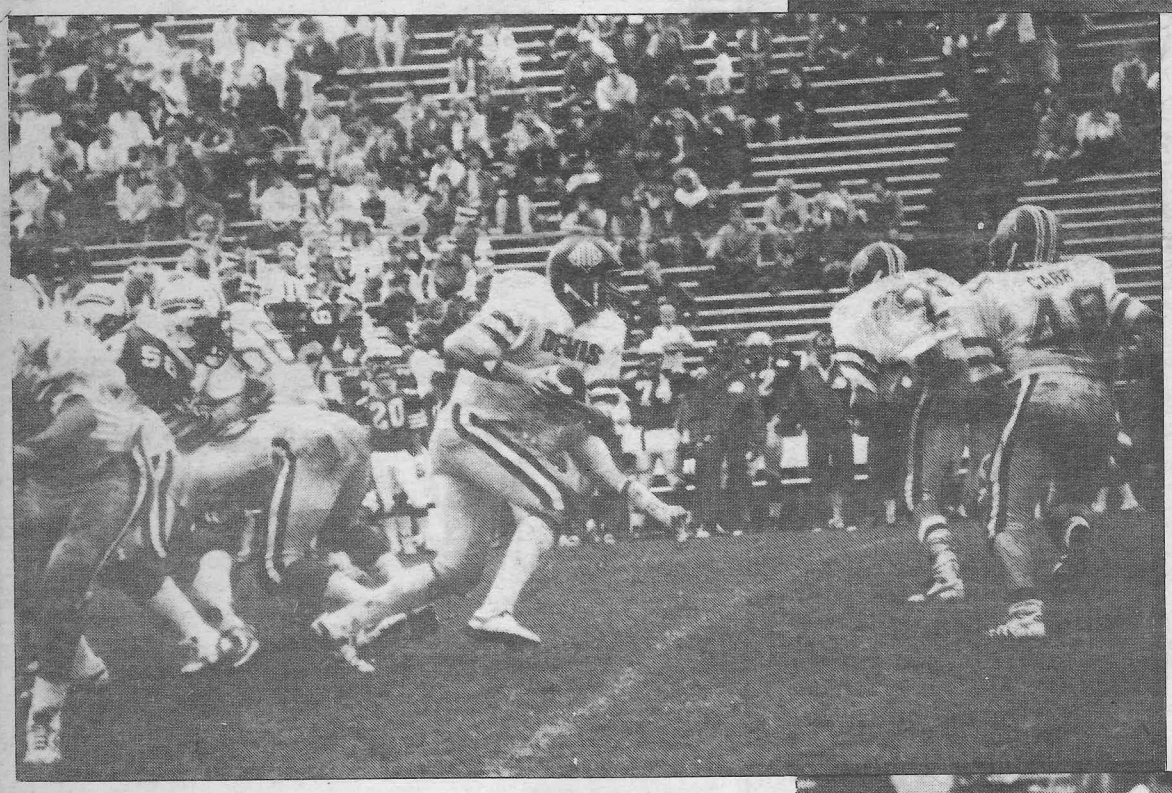
In the first half of the game it was a punt exchange. The ball was punted 12 times back and fourth, until Stout had the ball fourth and one and Majszak fumbled the ball. The ball was recovered by Ron Wise, but short of the first down. Whitewater was unable to do anything and punted the ball away to end the first half.

The third quarter was a little more exciting as Whitewater unsuccessfully attempted a 37-yard field goal. Two punts after the field goal attempt came the roughing the kicker penalty which lead to the big score for the gridders' win.

The defensive player of the week was the defensive co-captian Brian Kellet. Kellet had three unassisted tackles, nine assists and broke up one pass. Assistant Coach Steve Terry said, "Brian looked great and made the rest of the defense look good." Kellet was also the defensive conference player of the week for his efforts.

This week's opponent is Stevens Point at Stevens Point. Their record stands at 2-1-1 in conference play. Kamish commented that Point has a big offensive and defensive line and that the gridders cannot afford to make too many mistakes against them.



BLUE DEVIL POWER—

Baseball had its moments

Tom Roth

Baseball fever, catch it! Only baseball die-hards still have the fever at this time of the year as postseason baseball continues for yet another week and half. Despite the long season their were some great moments and some not so pleasant ones during the 1985 season.

In the American League, New York and California came up on the short end of things while Toronto and Kansas City held on for their championships. It was the Blue Jays first ever and the Royals sixth in ten years.

Defending World Champs, the Detroit Tigers, had a disappointing year as they were missing that "spark" they had the year before and the Yankees provided their usual spice to baseball with yet another "Billy Brawl."

Cleveland was the only team in the A.L. to reach the 100 loss plateau, but the Milwaukee Brewers and Texas Rangers weren't far behind.

Team standings were shuffled left and right from the previous season in the National League as St. Louis out battled the fierce N.Y. Mets. The Los Angeles Dodgers were in control since all-star break, but not without a constant challenge from the young and spirited Cincinnati Reds.

Last year's champs, the Chicago Cubs and San Diego Padres, were nowhere to be seen all year in the league pennant races. The Cubbies dropped below .500 and the Padres barely surpassed the mark.

The Pittsburgh Pirates won the honor of losing the most games during 1985, 104 games, 43 games out of first place, and San Francisco hit the century mark on the nose while the Atlanta Braves tried hard for the milestone, but came up short.

There were plenty of great moments during 1985 and a lot of them were by the older generation of players. Player-manager Pete Rose proved to everyone he can still play the game as he broke Ty Cobb's all-time hit record. Even an older big leaguer reached a milestone of his career. Phil Niekro, 46-years old, notched his 300th career win in the final game of the season with a shutout and two months earlier Tom Seaver recorded his 300th win.

Some of the new stars that shined were the amazing speedster from St. Louis, Vince Coleman, who stole over 100 bases, and the Reds suprising rookie Tom Browning, picking up 20 wins for his club. Another young hurdler, 21-year-old Bret Saberhagen, also won 20 games in his first season with the Royals.

Dwight Gooden, John Tudor and Joaquin Andujar brought recognition to the N.L. pitchers as they all recorded over 20 wins, placing them in the race for the Cy Young award.

One of the great plays of the season was when Carlton Fisk tagged two Yankees out at home plate on the same play.

Major league baseball was yet plagued by another strike and drug scandals surfaced in Pittsburgh and other club houses during 1985.

The 1985 season provided plenty of memories, though for me, I'm sure I can wait until April to see another baseball put into action.

Quarterback's Picks

Stout at UW-Stevens Point-Despite Stout's victory over UW-Whitewater last week, the Blue Devil defense is going to have its hands full with Stevens Point quarterback Dave Geissler, whose offense racked up 62 points last week. Stevens Point by 17.

Green Bay at Chicago-The Packers don't stand a chance against the well-rounded Bears. Walter Payton should put some new records into the record books in this one. Chicago by 18.

San Diego at Minnesota-Bud will be steaming for a victory at the Metrodome after two cliffhangers on the road. Minnesota by 6.

Northwestern at Wisconsin-The Wildcats will be hungry for a victory but the Badgers should have enough in them to pull this one out. Wisconsin by 7.

Minnesota at Indiana-Lou Holtz's Gophers are improving every week as Indiana should be no problem for the Gophers. Minnesota by 16.

Tennessee at Alabama-Both of these top caliber teams are coming off disappointing losses, but Alabama seems to possess more power. Alabama by 6.

Arkansas at Texas-This game just might decide the Southwest Conference Championship, so the Razorback's should be ready for the Longhorns. Arkansas by 3.

Michigan at Iowa-Number one versus number two by almost every poll in the country. This might be the game of the year in college football with Heisman Trophy candidate Chuck Long guiding the Hawkeyes against the Wolverines awsome defense. Iowa by 1.

Christenson launches year with increased motivation, new goals

Danielle Anderson
Sports Reporter

Many people participate in sports and do a very good job in them, but only a handful are athletes who stick out as being exceptional. Matt Christenson is one of these people.

Christenson, a senior majoring in industrial education, is the top runner for Stout's cross country team. He has been on the varsity team all four years he has been at Stout. As a freshman, he was ranked number six on the team. In 1983 he was awarded the most improved runner. Now he is number one runner as well as team captain.

Christenson has been running since junior high, but it wasn't until he was a senior in high school that he started to run seriously, which lead to improvement. He said, "the more I ran, the more fun it became." Christenson now runs about 75-80 miles a week, averaging anywhere from 8-12 miles a day.

Running isn't the only sport Christenson has tried. While a freshman in high school, he also tried being a defensive back for the football team. He decided it wasn't much fun though because it was too serious and decided to stick with running.

Some of Christenson's most memorable achievements are becoming Stout's fourth all-time distance runner, coming in eighth at the mid-western championship and running the five mile course in 25:23, which is the second fastest in the history of Stout. The only people who beat him were division one runners running on scholarships.

Looking ahead, Christenson's new goals are being in the top ten in the conference, being an All-American and being in the top 25 at nationals.

There are two motivators that help Christenson keep up his good work. The first motivator is his older brother Keith, an All-American from Oshkosh. Christenson and his brother run together all summer and when he doesn't feel like going, his brother is there to get him up and going. The two brothers competed against each other in a recent meet. Keith came in third and Christenson came in fourth. Christenson said, "It doesn't make me feel bad when that happens. I don't feel like he overshadows me. I feel that he helps me set more goals."

The second motivator is Christenson's parents. His father was a cross country coach and made running fun and relaxing. His mother helps her son by being there with a lot of moral support.

Once he graduates, Christenson plans on finding a job in Hawaii teaching technology to high school students and being a cross country and track coach. He also wants to find a company to sponsor him so he can keep running.

Christenson also runs the three mile run and steeple-chase run for the track team. He feels that people don't realize how different track is from cross country. Although he enjoys doing both, he likes cross country better.

Christenson finds cross country much more grueling than track. In cross country, the end results come from a team effort and the total of the team's scores. In track it is done individually. He also likes cross country because he can take advantage of the unpredictable weather.

WINNING STRETCH—

Sports Quote of the Week in Football-"They remind me of an ol'heathen who got religion in the Baptist church. They did a complete turnaround." Bobby Bowden, Florida State coach, on Auburn, which lost to Tennessee 38-20 two weeks ago but came back to beat Bowden's team 59-27.

Bear Fans Irate over Ditka's Arrest-Chicago Bears Coach Mike Ditka was arrested and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol early last Monday, prompting irate Bear fans to flood state police with calls of protest.

Ditka was arrested about two miles north of O'Hare International Airport shortly after the Bears had returned from San Francisco, where they thrashed the 49ers 26-10.

"We've been called everything in the book that you can think of," a Illinois State Police Trooper said.

No More Beer for Bear Fans-Last Tuesday the Chicago Bears decided that drinking and football don't mix, so beer will not be sold after halftime at Monday night's NFL game against the Green Bay Packers.

Running Backs Reach Milestones-Running backs Tony Dorsett of the Dallas Cowboys and John Riggins of the Washington Redskins reached NFL milestones last Sunday. Dorsett gained 113 yards to become the sixth player to rush for over 10,000 career yards. Three touchdown runs by Riggins gave him 101 touchdowns for his career and made him only the second player to rush for 100 or more TDs.

Blue Devil Country 5K Run-"Coke" and the UW-Stout Alumni Foundation will be sponsoring the Blue Devil Country five kilometer run on Saturday, Oct. 26 at 9 a.m. Proceeds from the run will be donated to the UW-Stout Rehab Club and the Blue Devil Cross Country Team. For more information stop by the Vocational Rehabilitation Building.

Fan Trades House for Football Tickets-Some fans will do anything for hard-to-get tickets, such as those for last Saturday's Oklahoma-Texas football game at Dallas.

Howard Lee of Oklahoma City traded one of his rental houses for eight tickets near the 50-yard line. "I just wanted tickets," he said. "I've got lots of property."

Runners fall short of expectations due to poor warm-up and weather

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

Slow times, misty weather and inadequate warm-up played key factors for the UW-Stout men's cross country team at the Blugold Invitational at Eau Claire on Saturday. The men placed seventh out of the 10 schools participating. UW-Oshkosh won the meet with 69 points, second was UW-Platteville with 78 followed by UW-Eau Claire with 89. Stout had 193 points.

Senior captain Matt Christenson led the way for the Stout men by finishing 10th overall with a time of 26:31. "I felt really tight in my upper body. I ran a dumb race, it wasn't my style. I was leading at the three mile mark and should not have been," Christenson said of his race.

Christenson went on to say that the whole team felt tight during the race as the team was misinformed of the race time and did not get a proper warm-up in before the start.

Junior Eric Bretl finished second for Stout, 36th overall with a time of 27:21. "For not having a decent warm-up I felt good, but it was a slow course so I wasn't happy with my time but satisfied with my place," Bretl said.

Senior Todd Zuerlein was third for Stout, close behind Bretl at 39th with a time of 27:36. Zuerlein said he felt good at about the three mile mark when he finally warmed up.

Fourth for Stout was sophomore Ben Haney with a time of 28:19, followed by Mike Bennett at 28:23, Dave Polishinski at 29:45 and Ed Wojdyla at 30:12. Bretl was voted runner of the week by his teammates for his performance at the invitational.

In women's competition the times for Stout were mediocre, according to captain Sheila Geere. Stout placed fifth out of the eight schools competing. Eau Claire won the meet with 22 points, UW-Stevens Point followed with 75 and Oshkosh was third with 83. Stout finished with 116 points.

Geere led the way this week for the women with a seventh place finish at 19:20. Junior teammate Ann Meyer was close behind Geere at ninth with a time of 19:24, a personal record for her. "I felt good and was afraid I was going too fast but I felt good enough to go for it," Meyer said.

Nursing an injury this week was last week's number one runner Sue Meyer. Meyer finished third for Stout, 24th overall with a time of 20:03. Freshman Liz Lund was close behind Meyer at 20:22.

Freshman Leslie Drall also came home with a personal record, at 23:13. Drall was follwed by Kris Klokow at 24:35 and Karen Schubert at 24:45.

"As a team our times were not as we had hoped and we are looking for faster times and a better team performance at conference. Right now it is going to be tough for us to qualify for NAIA Nationals, but we are training hard and hopefully we can put it together as a team at Whitewater (conference)," Geere said of the remainder of the season.

Both teams are down to one more tough meet before the conference meet on Nov. 2 at Whitewater. The La Crosse Invitational is set for Saturday and according to Head Coach Lou Klitzke, he is expecting fast times from all his runners.

This year the conference meet for both teams will be the deciding factor on which teams move on to nationals at Parkside. The top four teams go on to nationals and the top five runners as well.

Senior spikers lead team to new heights

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

By definition, a leader is one that directs by influence. The UW-Stout women's volleyball team definitely has leadership from all arenas, especially from that of the senior members.

The team has shown some outstanding performances this year, as their record reflects. Already, the team has broken the total win record of any Stout women's volleyball team, and they are well on their way to ranking within the top five in the conference.

One of the influential members on the senior leadership team is Wendy Morrow. Wendy is a native of Crystal Lake, Ill., and is a 5'10" hitter, with power in her hits as well as in her will to win. Another guiding member of the team is senior Mari Church. Mari is also a 5'10" hitter, and she is originally from Barron, Wis.

When looking at volleyball, most of us fail to realize what a teeter-tottering effect this sport can have on its players. As Wendy Morrow feels, "Volleyball is such a mental game, and there are so many ups and downs that the whole team has to be up for a match in order to regroup from any previous losses."

In order to pick up after a string of losses, there has to be someone to lead in that effort. One person who believes strongly in her team, and helps to do just that, is Mari Church. Some of Church's ability in providing help to others comes from her own self-confidence. "I think I have built up confidence in myself and I try to instill that on others. I always try to help others that are down, and support them as individuals."

As for what to look for in a team leader, Church feels, "They should be enthusiastic, and should emphasize and appreciate individual strengths." Wendy Morrow also agrees with that, adding, "A leader has to know the players and help them out anytime while always encouraging them to do their best and play to their top performance level. There are certain leaders on our team, some more than others, but anyone of us can be a leader at anytime."

One important aspect of the team is that all of them at anytime must be working their very hardest due to the fact that the team doesn't have a definite starting six, so all of them must work their hardest to get a spot. This is a motivating factor in and of itself. Morrow states, "I think every player has been working very hard to improve themselves personally, and for the team as a whole. We all have a responsibility to the team, and we all learn by watching and listening to others."

The fact that the team is so small has contributed to its unity, and that is important when trying to move a team in a positive direction. "Since we're a small team (ten total members), we're very close and united. It's everyone's job to cheer everyone else on whether they play or sit on the bench. I feel everyone's attitude on the team is good, which helps a lot," Morrow stressed.

Church explained how that "good attitude" was not always a characteristic of the team. "Last year was hard to come back from, and our attitude was bad. The old coach emphasized the negative, but Coach Lee emphasizes the positive, and she has helped bring the team together. She really loves the game, and this allows us to love it even more."

Not only is it important to show leadership on the court, but equally important is leadership from the bench. This is, of course, what makes a well-rounded team. No one can relate to this fact better than Wendy Morrow. As a co-captain of the team, Morrow has a lot of responsibilities placed upon her. She is a mediator on and off the court between players, referees, and the coach. After slipping a knee cap, Morrow found herself a spectating member of the team for a few matches. It was then that she realized the importance of all members, both on and off the floor. "Sitting on the bench is just as important as court play. It was very tough to sit and watch. You want to play, but you realize that there is a lot of depth to the bench, and so you become confident that the other players can handle the job."

The team still needs to improve in some areas. Morrow said, "We

ADVISEMENT PROCEDURES

A Permit to Register must be obtained before you will be allowed to register for your classes. Find your major in the list below for specific information regarding advisement and procedures for obtaining your Permit to Register. Permits will be distributed from the appropriate offices beginning on Monday, October 28. If you are unsure of what major you are listed under, call the PASS Office at 232-1465, or the Registration and Records Office at 232-2121.

ALL FIRST SEMESTER FRESHMEN (EXCEPT STUDENTS MAJORING IN MARKETING & DISTRIBUTIVE EDUCATION, HOME ECONOMICS GENERAL, TECHNICAL EDUCATION, AND VOCATIONAL EDUCATION) WILL OBTAIN THEIR PERMIT TO REGISTER AT THE PASS OFFICE, AFTER THEY HAVE MET WITH THEIR PASS ADVISOR. IF YOU ARE UNSURE OF WHO YOUR PASS ADVISOR IS, CALL THE PASS OFFICE AT 232-1465.

APPLIED MATHEMATICS — OBTAIN PERMIT TO REGISTER FROM PROGRAM DIRECTOR OR FACULTY ADVISOR

Schedule appointment with faculty advisor.

APPLIED TECHNOLOGY — OBTAIN PERMIT TO REGISTER FROM PROGRAM DIRECTOR'S OFFICE - 206 FRYKLUND HALL

If you have questions regarding course sequencing, scheduling, or plan sheet evaluation, please schedule an appointment with the program director. An appointment calendar for sign-up is located in 206 Fryklund Hall or call x-1330.

ART & ART EDUCATION — OBTAIN PERMIT TO REGISTER FROM PROGRAM DIRECTOR OR FACULTY ADVISOR

Schedule individual session with assigned faculty advisor. If you are not sure who your advisor is, a list is posted outside of the Art Office, 323 Applied Arts Building.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION — OBTAIN PERMIT TO REGISTER IN THE LOBBY OUTSIDE OF 109 BOWMAN HALL

Students are STRONGLY encouraged to consult with their faculty advisor before registration, especially those entering their last one or two semesters of study.

A few courses of special interest that are either new or are offered only in the Spring semester are:

Extra! Extra!
It's working!
We're going to use it again.

DATE
Each student will be assigned a date to register. You may register after that date, but not before.

TIME
The time assigned is a two-hour block set aside for (turning in) (accepting) your registration in the Registration and Records Office, 109 Bowman Hall. No registrations will be processed from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m.

LATE?
What if you fall down on the way to register and turn in your Permit and Program Card after 9:30 a.m.? Turn it in and it will be processed immediately following those turned in on time for that day.

NUMBER 115
At 9:30 a.m. the registrations received for the current date will be put in order according to this number and then processed in that numeric order. Because there is a predetermined order for processing, there is no advantage to being first in line to turn in your registration.

We'll put them in order
By the number assigned.
For sure, there is no reason
For you to be lined.

Don't get up in the wee smalls,
You shouldn't be sleeping in our hallowed halls.

Turn in your form between 7:30 and 9:30

The results are the same
So why the hurry?

REVIEW AND CORRECT THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION
This information is your official university record. It must be accurate and current. Make any changes directly on the form prior to your registration. If you will not have a correct address until later, stop in Bowman 109 to update your record. All students must have a current address, local as well as permanent, on the student data base.

FEE PAYMENT
This is a new part of the early registration process and should be read carefully and understood by each one who registers for classes. It has always been (understood) (implied) that a student who registers for classes is guaranteed a place in those classes as long as he/she is not academically dismissed from school, and fulfills the financial obligations by the dates designated in the Timetable (Class Schedule Book).

VALID THROUGH 1/3/86
No need to panic here. You can still register for Spring 86 after January 3, but this piece of paper cannot be used after that date. A new Permit to Register will be issued after 1/3/86 for anyone who did not register earlier. The reason is in the next box, the HOLD STATEMENT.

SPLIT PROGRAM STUDENTS
Those enrolling in both Graduate courses for Graduate credit and Undergraduate coures for Undergraduate credit - please follow the directions in the fine print.

The HOLD STATEMENT concept is not new. It has been moved to a different spot in the registration process. Formerly, a student was stopped during the fee payment process for such holds as delinquent fees, library or parking fines, or academic dismissal. It is a University of Wisconsin System policy that a student be prevented from participating in any registration process while a major hold is on his/her record. HOLDS must be satisfied and signed off BEFORE the Permit to Register and Program Card is turned in to the Registration and Records Office.

Most students will not have a HOLD on their Permit at this point in the semester. A statement will be printed in the second area of the Permit notifying you that there are no HOLDS at this time if that is correct.

Clear your Holds
They will stop you cold.
Pay your bills
Before they grow old.

LEAVING TOWN ON YOUR DATE?
Turn in your registration before you leave. It will be held and processed according to the date and number. HOLDS listed on your Permit must be cleared. See HOLD STATEMENT.

FAILURE TO ATTEND CLASSES
I understand that failure to attend my classes does not constitute an official withdrawal and does not void this agreement or my financial obligations. Don't assume that if you do not show up on the first day of class that your instructor will automatically drop you and the world will know that you are not a student. If you do not notify the Registration and Records Office directly that you will not be attending, you will receive a bill and you will be keeping others from filling the place reserved for you.

We're out of the Fieldhouse,
But that's not enuff.
Please read what you're sent
It's all the right stuff.

NOTICE TO MAY GRADUATES

UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS completing the requirements for graduation are required to submit an Application for Degree Card to the Registration and Records Office WITHIN THE FIRST TWO WEEKS of the term in which they expect to graduate.

GRADUATE STUDENTS completing the requirements for graduation are required to submit a Graduate Application for Degree Card to the Graduate College Office within two weeks of the beginning of the term in which the student expects to graduate. An evaluation of the student's record will not be started until this card is on file in the Graduate College. This card is in the research packet which can be picked up in the Graduate College.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS EXPECTING TO COMPLETE THEIR MASTER'S DEGREE IN MAY

International students who anticipate completion of their graduate degree in May must report to the Commencement Secretary in the Registration and Records Office, Room 109 Bowman Hall, by March 1, 1986 to insure that a diploma will be ordered for you and that it will arrive on campus before you leave the USA.

ATTENTION SENIORS
A SPECIAL NOTE FROM THE GRADUATE OFFICE

A HEAD START ON YOUR GRADUATE WORK:

Graduating seniors who need from 1 to 15 hours to complete their bachelor's degree work and who apply for one of UW-Stout's graduate degree programs have an opportunity to get a head start on graduate work at Stout. It is possible to enter the Graduate College on a "split program" basis. This means that those students otherwise eligible for graduate work may take courses at the graduate level to bring their total load to a maximum of 16 credit hours during the semester in which graduation will take place. Split-program students are eligible only as program students.

Tuition for the senior semester remains the same as for other senior undergraduates. Start early by calling at the Graduate College, phone 715/232-2211, for information and various forms. These must be filled out to permit processing of your application. Upon completion of processing (about 30 days), you may obtain your Graduate Permit to Register and advice from the appropriate Graduate Program Director to select courses that will lead toward your graduate program.

Legislation requires a non-refundable application fee of $20.00 of all applicants for admission to graduate study in UW-Systems universities.

Applications for admission will not be processed until the application fee and all forms have been received by the Graduate College. Check or money order should be made out to UW-Stout and remitted to the Graduate College, University of Wisconsin-Stout, Menomonie, WI.

REGISTRATION INFORMATION FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS

FIRST: Permits to Register for eligible students will be available from their graduate program directors starting October 14. See your graduate advisor (program director) to obtain your Permit to Register and class cards and receive assistance in completing your schedule. This advisement may take place any time after the class schedules are announced. (Class schedule books will be available on October 18, 1985 in your residence hall or at the Information Desk of the Student Center). Graduate students may register for a maximum of 16 credits per semester.

Students for whom the program directors do not have a Permit to Register should stop at the Graduate College Office between 9 a.m. - 11:30 a.m. beginning October 21.

International students whose program directors do not have their Permits to Register must call at the Graduate College Office between 9:00 - 11:30 a.m. to see the Admissions Examiner.

(Issuance of Permits and registration dates do not necessarily coincide).

Be sure to review your degree progress according to the Student Progress Sheet which is on the inside cover of your Graduate Bulletin. Don't hesitate to call at the Graduate College if you need additional information and instructions.

Some graduate students are now at the point at which they should be applying for admission to candidacy. If you have completed 6 hours of graduate work, call at the Graduate College Office to obtain the information and forms needed to apply for candidacy. This should take place before applying for a Permit to Register.

Other students may be approaching the point of filing an Intent to Graduate. This should take place by the end of the second week of the term in which you expect to graduate.

THEN: Take your PERMIT TO REGISTER and SIGNED PROGRAM CARD to the Registration and Records Office according to the schedule below. (Your advisor will keep two of the program cards).

October 31 - December 6. Registration and Records Office (Bowman Hall).

Pick up a copy of your schedule in lobby of Bowman Hall. Students who found conflicts or closed sections in their schedules may make changes on the above dates.

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

"I can't believe this is the best women's tennis team ever," UW-Stout women's tennis team Coach Bob Smith declared. The Lady Devils are proving they are the best after knocking off UW-River Falls and UW-Milwaukee to be ranked third in the WWIAC.

Before the Lady Devils came away with their two impressive victories, the Devils were shutout by UW-La Crosse.

Stout 0—La Crosse 9

Although the score was 0-9 in favor of La Crosse, the Lady Devils were not blown out.

La Crosse is ranked second in the conference, and the Lady Devils, "Played them really close," Smith said.

Mary Malloy dropped a tough match 7-6, 6-4 at first singles, as did Jean Feyen at third singles; Her match went three sets, 4-6, 6-3, 2-6.

But perhaps the closest match of the day was the pressure-packed first doubles contest. Malloy and Lynn Papenfuss were battling for the doubles first seed ranking in the conference. They lost in straight sets to La Crosse, 7-5,7-6. Consequently, this loss for the pairing of Malloy and Papenfuss has pushed them into a three-way tie for the first doubles ranking.

Stout 8—River Falls 1

Without the services of Malloy at first singles, the Lady Devils notched a convincing win against River Falls with a score identical to their first meeting.

Malloy was sidelined due to tendonitis. The whole singles lineup moved up to compensate. The singles handled this inconvenience perfectly, winning five out of the six points.

Tara Stahel was especially awesome, blowing her opponent away 6-0, 6-0. The freshman netter commented, "My goal was not to give up any points. I kept the ball in play and let her make the mistakes."

The double pairings were also scrambled, creating unfamiliar doubles teams. At first doubles Lynn Papenfuss and Kelly Wickman had some trouble in winning their match 3-6, 6-3, 6-4. Also, Jean Feyen and Mary Pokwinski experienced some difficulty at second doubles, but managed to squeeze out a 7-5, 5-7, 6-4 victory.

Smith was pleased with the outcome and commented that the key to the win was the play of the freshmen coming through.

Stout 5—Milwaukee 4

"The play of the girls on the bottom," Smith said, was the winning element in the Lady Devils victory against Milwaukee.

In singles action both Malloy and Feyen dropped their matches to Milwaukee. However, these were the only losses in singles, for the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth singles matches were all captured by the Stout women.

Again Tara Stahel, playing in the fourth singles slot, was victorious, beating her opponent in yet another 6-0, 6-0 match. Also, Kelly Wickman, playing at fifth singles, breezed through her match 6-2, 6-0. Additionally, Mary Pokwinski had little trouble in beating her challenger 6-1, 6-3.

The doubles were not as successful, only winning one point out of three. This win came at third doubles where the pair of Stahel and Wickman scorched their opponents 6-1, 7-5. Fortunately, the Lady Devils only needed one point in doubles to wrap up the win.

This Lady Devil victory was especially sweet, because just a week before they dropped a 7-2 decision to the Milwaukee women.

These matches ended the women's tennis team's regular season play. Stout will host district play this weekend, where the Lady Devils will begin the quest for their first conference championship.

have to be more aggressive both offensively and defensively. Practice at getting a good pass to the setter, and from there a good set to the hitters is also important. Our hitters also have to attack hard and know when to hit and tip. A smart hitter will always vary their hits."

Reemphasizing this, Church said, "Our defense, tips, and diving to get the ball all needs work. We have been doing this, but it must still be improved. We also need to be effective off the block and improve our passing in order to set up the offense because we do have a great offense."

As for team direction and where they will be heading as they complete the season, the Lady Blue Devils will have to work hard to compete with their opponents. "We do have some tough matches coming up, but if we realize we can beat them, on any given day, we can. We just have to keep working hard at trying to better ourselves so we can come out on top," Morrow said.

Church felt the same way, and stressed, "We have suffered losses against UW-Eau Claire and UW-River Falls, but we know we can beat them and we will by the end of the season. We are the underdogs, and the desire is there to win badly. I believe that although there are some tough matches coming up, by working hard and practicing our skills, we can place in the top five in conference play — I want to be up there!"

You be the judge...

Homecoming at Stout is what you make it. Let's make this year's homecoming the best ever.

The fun of the weekend is too often overshadowed by offensive behavior. Be your own boss during the weekend. Don't be misled by someone who doesn't know when the party is over. Each year, students, mostly freshmen and sophomores, are arrested in wholesale numbers. Either those students don't know the laws or they ignore them.

One bad weekend can spoil a good year for you at Stout. Avoid the personal embarrassment and costly fines that an arrest and conviction can mean. For some students last year, the court fine was the last financial setback they could handle. It meant leaving school.

Not everyone celebrating the weekend is concerned with your welfare or the university's reputation. Many arrested each year are outsiders, not associated with Stout. They are just interested in a reckless spree. But at someone else's expense.

Know the laws. Most arrests at homecoming relate to unlawful assembly, disorderly conduct, and open containers. Avoid those situations.

Don't get caught up in the crowd. Don't break the law. Don't give your university and homecoming a black eye. What's the verdict? You be the judge.

A message sponsored in the student's interest by Stout's Office of University Relations.

Room 211 recipient of national award

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Room 211 in the Home Economics Building recently won a national award for its student advisement program from the National Recognition Program for Academic Advising. A certificate of Merit was presented on October 16, 1985 at the Awards Breakfast held in Kansas City.

Carolyn Barnhart, program director in Home Economics-General, said the award came about based on the eight-year record of the advisement program. "We go to conferences and other schools tell of future plans, and a lot of the things they are planning we already are doing here at Stout," she said.

The award was presented to 17 universities this year. Some of them include large Big Ten schools such as Iowa and Michigan state. Room 211 was unique because all of the others won the award for university advisement, and its award was for advisement within a single school.

"We do a lot for retention," said Barnhart. "That was one of the reasons for the award. Other programs we offer include scholarship workshops and round table discussions that are not common in other schools. Examples of these round table discussions include 'Would You Hire Yourself?' and 'Is What They Say True' that were held last spring.

The staff of Room 211 is a combination of program directors and three advisors. The three advisors are Jane Henderson, Mary Huser, and Barnhart. Special projects these people work on include recruitment, traveling career fairs and meeting prospective students. They are always searching for new ways to serve students. On November 12, they are going into the halls to discuss advisement to residents.

> I'm very excited about this award.
> —J. Anthony Samenfink Dean Home Economics

"The philosopy of 211 is to make students independent of us," said Barnhart. "You intiate the question and we respond. You the student make independent decisions."

211 doesn't close over noon hour as most offices due on campus. They also have a hotline if you can't make it to the office, or if you just have a simple question. The hotline number 232-2474.

"I'm very excited about this award. The idea was a baby of this office," said the Dean of Home Economics, J. Anthony Samenfink. "It is a place that students can go for help where the staff will help the student find their own solution. It's not just a clearinghouse for information, it's much more."

MORE THAN 211 GOOD IDEAS—

Rape victim withdraws from school

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

An 18-year-old women who was allegedly raped by three former UW-Stout freshman has withdrawn from the University.

The first semester freshman voluntarily submitted a completed withdrawal form last Friday, according to Assistant Chancellor of Student Services Samuel Wood.

Wood declined to explain the reason for the student's withdrawal from Stout but said that student services fully accomodated her during the withdrawal process.

Wood said, 'We don't like anyone to withdraw, but we try to make the process as easy as possible for them.' The University averages about one withdrawal a day, according to Wood.

Joseph Woods, 19, of Minneapolis; Dennis Green, 19, of Peoria Ill.; and Gino Collins, 18, of Burlington, Wis.; have been charged with first degree sexual assault and false imprisionment in connection with an alleged sexual assault in Woods' room in Milnes Hall on the Stout campus Sept. 6.

The three men withdrew voluntarily from the University soon after being charged. Woods and Green stood mute while Judge James Wendland entered pleas of not guilty during their arraignment in Dunn County Circuit Court Oct. 9. A preliminary hearing for Collins was scheduled for yesterday.

Dunn County District Attorney Michael Furnstahl said Tuesday that the woman's withdrawal from the University would have no effect in the status of the charges against the three men. The withdrawal may pose difficulty in contacting the woman from her hometown, said Furnstahl.

Large Homecoming alumni crowd gives fundraising campaign chance to increase fund

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Homecoming at UW-Stout this year marks the occasion that Stout begins the stretch run in the largest fundraising campaign in University history.

Stout Chancellor, Dr. Robert Swanson's interest in the campaign, titled Toward Century II, stems from the novelty of it at Stout plus the meaning of the campaign to Stout's future. "We've never really had anything like this before," he said. "To maintain the quality of our programs, and to advance that quality in some of our critical areas, we need to seek outside private support for the University from alumni and friends."

Homecoming this year presents a special opportunity to Stout, according to Dr. Swanson. He expects there will be more alumni on campus than ever before and he thinks that as they get acquainted with the students and with modern campus facilities they will see the importance of the work being done here.

The fundraising campaign started October of last year and is scheduled to run through December of this year. The campaign has a base goal of $1 million and a challenge goal of $2 million. Currently, more than $850,000 in pledges has been received. The program is set up for donors to pay their pledges over a three-year period.

According to the Director of University Development, David Williams, alumni contributions have far surpassed their expectations. To date they have received $450,000 in alumni pledges exceeding their challenge goal for alumni by $50,000.

Williams, pleased by the opportunity to dramatically improve on these numbers says, "We've barely started tapping the 20,000 alumni. The sky's the limit on that."

Why does a state supported university need a fundraising campaign? Williams understands this question and says it was answered by the response to a survey they

Belgians protest U.S.-made missiles

Brussels, Belgium- About 100,000 demonstrators protested the deployment of U.S.-made cruise missles in Belgium. Belgium has received 16 cruise missles with another 32 scheduled to be deployed by the end of 1987.

New Government to form in Italy

Rome, Italy- President Francesco Cossiga will ask caretaker Prime Minister Bettino Craxi to form a new government four days after the ruling coalition collapsed over the handling of the Achille Lauro hijacking.

Craxi's five-party, 26-month-old coalition government collapsed last Thursday because he had released the suspected mastermind of the hijacking of the Italian luxury-liner, the Achille Lauro, Oct. 7 by four Palestinians.

Artificial heart recipient progresses

Hershey P.A.- Anthony Mandia, the first recipient of a new type of artificial heart, suffered an hour of slowed speech Sunday but doctors said it was not a stroke and he bounced back with no signs of impariment.

A call for a donor heart went out on Oct. 14 when Mandia was transferred from a Philadelphia hospital to Hershey, suffering from coronary artery disease. Mandia is the tenth recipient of an artificial heart.

Hijack victim nominated for honor

New York, N.Y.- The body of Leon Klinghoffer, the crippled American slain by the hijackers of the cruise ship Achille Lauro, returned to U.S. soil on Sunday. Klinghoffer is being recommended for the Medal of Honor.

Klinghoffer, 69, of New York City, was confined to a wheelchair after a stroke. He was shot in the head and chest by Palestinian hijackers on Oct. 8.

State

Fuel aid drops by 21 percent

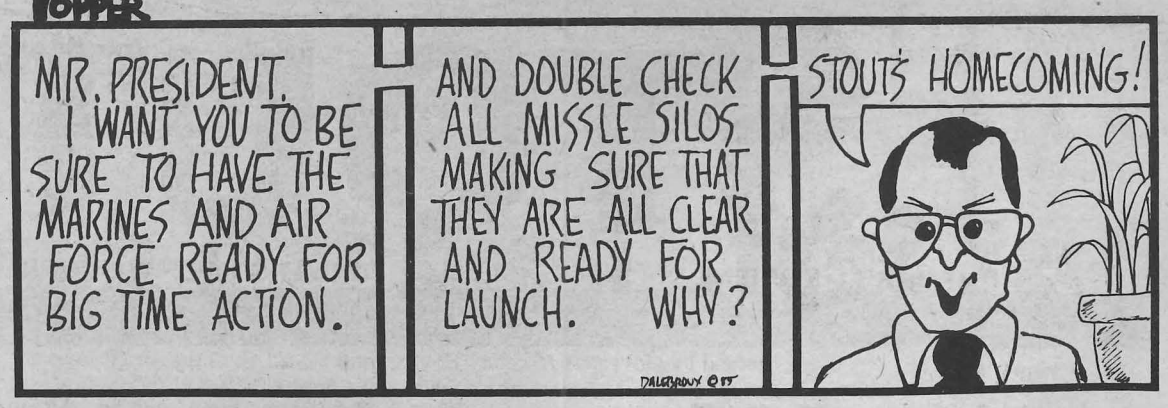
Madison- Energy assistance benefits for low-income households in Wisconsin will decline by 21 percent this winter. The average benefit from the federal Low-Income Energy Assistance Program will be an estimated $245 compared to $309 last year.

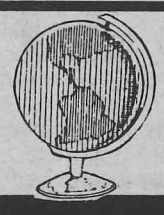
Alan C. Guyant, director of the consumer services bureau of the State Public Service Commission, said the reduction was caused by a combination of more receipts and fewer federal dollars.

Invitation policy OK'd on parade

Baraboo- The governing board of the Circus World Museum Monday adopted a policy to reject all invitations to take the Great Circus Parade out of Wisconsin, as long as the event is held annually in the state.

The motion was made and passed by the States Historic Sites Foundation Board after its members turned down an offer to stage the parade in New Orleans Sept. 28, 1986





Perspective

Religious oppression

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Although the Soviet Constitution guarantees some freedoms which are also contained in our own country's constitution, Russian police state oppression and censorship have made many of these so-called freedoms little more than Orwellian window-dressing.

Freedom of religion is guaranteed in the Soviet Constitution, yet their interpretation in no way resembles our own. All religious congregations are required to register with the state, refrain from "anti-Soviet activities", may not provide religious instruction to anyone under the age of 18, and are not to provide anything in the area of social service.

Many religious leaders have been confined in Soviet jails for anti-social or anti-Soviet activities. Others have been placed in mental hospitals for the treatment of "mental incompetence."

And the state vigorously attempts to confiscate any and all Bibles which tourists bring into the country.

The Kremlin is worried that the recognition of some very significant historical events and a possible Papal visit to a Soviet satellite-country may boost church attendance in not only their own officially designated atheist state, but in other parts of the eastern-bloc as well.

1988 will be the 1000th anniversary marking the time Prince Vladimir of Kiev presided over a mass baptism of his followers in the Dnieper River, establishing the birth of Christianity in the Soviet Union.

One of the Soviet's compulsory eastern-bloc allies, the nation of Lithuania in 1987 will observe the 600th anniversary of the adoption of Catholic doctrine.

Although Pope John Paul II wants to visit the country during the anniversary observance two years from now, the Kremlin will not allow such a visit. The Soviets fear a Papal visit could further expand the role of religion in the region.

And to make matters worse in the eyes of the totalitarian members of the Soviet Politburo, the Russian Orthodox Church is planning a multitude of millenial observances in 1988.

The Council for Religious Affairs, headed by Konstantin Karchev, monitors all religious activity within the Kremlin's sphere of influence. This department, in conjunction with the Ministry of Education, produces volumes of propoganda designed to discredit religious doctrine.

In addition to the spreading of misinformation, the state is diligently trying to stifle religion through the recent harrassment of not only the Russian Orthodox Church, but also Jewish teachers in Moscow, Baptists and Catholics in the Baltic Region, and Pentecostalists in Siberia and the Ukraine.

Yet even though there are less than 8000 churches left in the Soviet Union today as opposed to 100,000 before the 1917 revolution, church membership is estimated at 30 million and growing.

Post Sept. 1 starting date almost certain

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

What do you think about the idea of having to start school after Sept. 1 each year?

If the Wisconsin State Senate has its way, from now on it will be mandatory that "no center or institution within the University of Wisconsin system commences fall semester classes until after Sept. 1, beginning with the fall 1986 semester." Originally the bill used the wording "post Labor Day" instead of "Sept. 1," but this was vetoed by Governor Anthony Earl, so a Sept. 1 compromise was drafted.

The bill, Assembly -413, at the time of this writing, is under debate in the Senate Education Committee. If it passes out of committee, it will come up for a vote on the senate floor no earlier than Oct. 16, 1985.

If this bill passes it could mean any number of changes for Stout students. The change that will definitely happen is that the first semester will start after Sept. first. When the first semester will end is still up in the air. It is possible that it will still end before the Christmas break, but for this to happen, class periods will have to be extended to 60 or 75 minutes from the normal 50 minute periods we have now. If class periods are not extended, it is likely that fall semester will run one to two weeks after the Christmas break and that exams will be taken at this time. Extending the first semester will mean that the second semester may also be extended into late May or early June. A trimester plan such as the one being used at UW-River Falls is also a possibility.

The Stout Student Association and United Council are opposed to Assembly Bill 413 because all University system schools either start after Sept. 1 already, or have systems set up that allow for late registration, registration by mail, or registration by proxy. (Proxy means that someone else may register for the student at the time the individual is scheduled to register). Another reason is that it infringes on faculties shared governance rights to dictate campus policies.

Another bill of interest to students is Assembly Bill 473 (Anti-Dramshop Law). This bill deals with ending third person liability to bar owners and bartenders. In essence the bill exempts these people from being liable for damages caused by intoxicated patrons of their establishment. Assembly Bill 473 passed the assembly by an 89-10 vote and is currently in the Senate Business, Veterans Affairs and Insurance committee.

Library attempts to obtain justice for destroyed thesis

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

The Oct. 17 issue of The Stoutonia contained a letter to the editor from Library Director John Jax. Jax reported the deliberate destruction of master's thesis notes.

The letter states: "A graduate student studying on the fifth floor of the library was called away on a family medical emergency. He left his notebook containing all his work toward his master's thesis and his personal calendar sitting out at a study cubicle. He was unable to return until the next morning only to find his notebook containing his master's thesis work ripped up and destroyed."

Jax says that the unknown vandal "made a prodigious effort to destroy" the three-quarter-inch thick stack of notes. A library employee helping the student search for the missing material rescued the shredded bits of paper from a wastebasket before the custodian emptied it.

The notes represented "days and days and days of work," said Jax. The student's instructors have been helpful in replacing class handouts and reconstructing class notes.

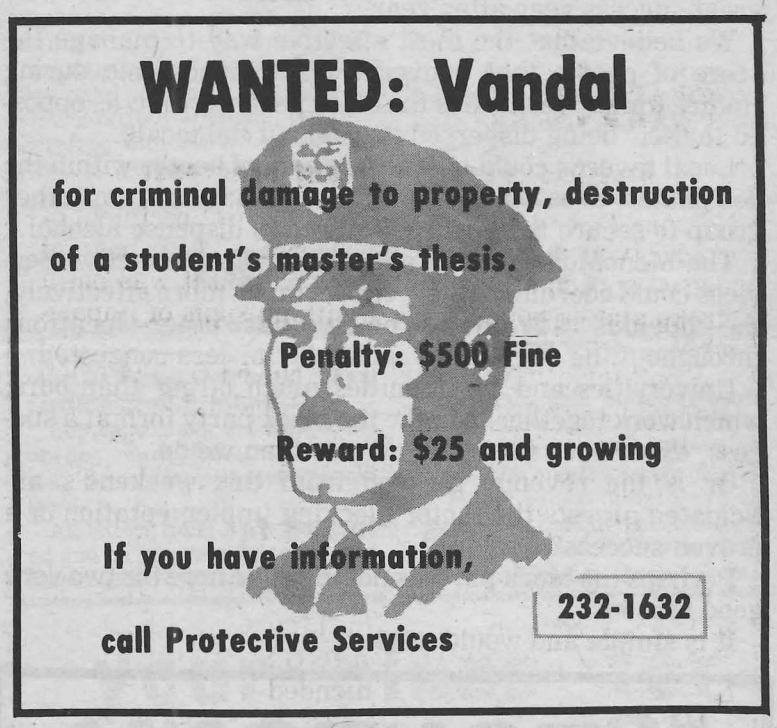
The incident was reported to Stout Protective Services and "is being treated as criminal damage to property," says Garold Buckley, Director of Protective Services. "We're beating our heads against the wall on this one; we have no leads at all."

Criminal damage to property is a Class A misdemeanor punishable by jail time and/or a fine; amounts depending on the damage done. In this type of incident, a $500 fine would be a possibility.

When asked if this type vandalism is a recurring problem, Library Director John Jax recalled several occurences last spring of breaking into study carrels, damaging paperwork and leaving "nasty little notes, such as Go Home and Clean Up."

Jax reports the victimized student, Stout senior Timothy A. Aderibigbe, "is quite upset." Jax states that the library staff feels sympathetic to Aderibigbe and wishes to help.They are offering a reward to anyone having information leading to the arrest and conviction of the perpetrator. As of Oct. 19, the reward fund totalled $25 and will continue to receive donations.

Jax urges anyone with information about the incident to call Stout Protective Services at 232-1632. The incident would have occurred between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Oct. 8 or between 7:45 a.m. and 10 a.m. on Oct. 9.



Residents voice opinions against new public library

Karen Schubert
News Reporter

Several Menomonie area residents picketed the Dunn County Courthouse Monday protesting the recent building of the new Menomonie Public Library. The demonstators called for an injunction to be placed on the library so the people could vote on a new referendum in November.

Demonstrators said the city is building the new library against the wishes of the residents of Menomonie. They went on to say that the City Council ignored a 1982 referendum which rejected constructing a new library by a 2-1 margin.

"We feel that at least four city council members are not representing the people and our wishes," Beverly Waller, Menomonie resident said while picketing outside the courthouse.

Other area residents present on Monday afternoon said they would like to see some of the money go toward preserving the Mabel Tainter Library instead. The people feel that is where Menomonie's heritage is.

"Any of us can use the University's library," Waller said. "Why do we need another one?" Waller asked.

In an interview on Monday, City Manager George Langmack said regardless of how the demonstrators feel, the question is if the City Council has the legal basis to seek this kind of action (stop construction) in the court of law. "In my knowledge it doesn't," he said.

On Monday evening the City Council met with the library issue on the agenda. A motion was moved to stop construction and it lost 3-4.

Construction of the library will go on as scheduled. The site is located north of the Lake Menomin bridge north of town.

Obvious solution ignored due to vested interests

Stout is recognized by its academic peers as a university which regularly formulates innovative solutions to an array of problems.

Yet one area which is ignored by administration, faculty, student and community problem solvers is the annual event called homecoming.

On Oct. 31 UW-Madison will hold their Seventh Annual Halloween Festival. The seven-hour event will feature five live bands, a costume contest, food and beverages. Those aged 19 and above may purchase beer.

Over 50,000 are expected to attend. A city block will be cordoned off to hold the event.

The "block party" format is used at UW-Madison and hundreds of other universities throughout the country with great success year after year.

We believe that the most effective way to manage the score of people that converge upon Menomonie during Homecoming Weekend is the block party format, as opposed to their being dispersed throughout the locale.

Local taverns could operate individual booths within the designated area, making it unnecessary for any other group to secure the license required to dispense alcohol.

The Menomonie Police and University Protective Services could coordinate their efforts much more effectively, the obvious advantage being that other locations throughout the community would be far less congested.

Universities and communities much larger than ours, which work together to make the block party format a success, experience far fewer arrests than we do.

Or is the revenue gleaned from this weekend's anticipated arrests the factor blocking implementation of a proven success?

Perhaps the block party is not in vogue here for two very good reasons.

It is simple and would work.

My final word

Let's think twice

Rich Langberg

Whenever a court hands down a non-unanimous decision, there is almost always a dissenting position written by one of the judges in the minority. History has shown that this serves a purpose, those dissenting positions later come to the foreground when the majority decision is reversed by another court.

It is a vital part of democracy that everyone's opinion is heard, that's why dissenting opinions are written. It is that person or person's opinion, just because he or she was in the minority doesn't mean that person believes any less in what they are saying.

In the last issue of The Stoutonia there was an editorial written which describes a new way for the Senators of the Stout Student Association (SSA) to be chosen. Since the publication of that editorial means that it was approved by a majority of the editorial board of this newspaper, I would consider myself writing a dissenting opinion.

Granted, there are flaws in the current representation on the SSA. There are, for what seems to be reasons of tradition, three members of Stout's tiny Greek community holding voting positions on the Senate. University Programming Board (UPB), whose eight-member groups get a large slice of the Senate-approved reallocation pie, have a vote in how that money is distributed.

Both of these need to be corrected. The Greek situation shows that they are grossly overrepresented on a campus that has a steady, if not even declining Greek population. Allowing the UPB representative a vote is a clear stacking of the deck in their favor. Whether that person says they put that aside or not is irrelevant. It is clear that option in voting is there.

I want to caution to people in reading The Stoutonia's description of the new plan to look closely at how those Senators are chosen. Having the top 25 vote getters the automatic winners of Senate seats jeopardizes representation of all groups of students on this campus.

The Stout student community is basically a very apathetic one. When only 600 people vote out of 7500 in the SSA Presidential election, more then just a small portion of the people didn't care enough to vote. Look closely at the percentage of the voters in that election. Most of them were on-campus students, even though a majority of the students here at Stout reside off-campus.

So maybe it's not only that they didn't care. The residence halls are historically more organized then off-campus students, mostly because of the relative ease of informing the residents. Do we want the chance of having 75 percent or more of the SSA senators dorm residents?

It is conceivable that could happen. The residents of the dorms could get together, whether through their governing body or by individual hall and saturate the ballot. It is, I think, a lot easier to campaign going door to door in a dorm then house to house in a student neighborhood. You may even have enough friends or friends of friends to easily reach the level of 100 signatures necessary to be placed on the ballot.

I would like to see the number of Senators divided up in a percentage similar to the percentage of where people live here at Stout. Since there is only a limited number of dorm rooms, it should be determined how many people actually applied to live in the dorms to ascertain the exact numbers.

The Senators would then be placed on committees that would individually address the needs of their specific group, for instance women's affairs or minority affairs. They would be placed according to knowledge and expertise, not just at random.

It is this way I think that the SSA election would result in an accurate representation of the Stout students, and not just a popularity contest among dorm residents. Restructuring the Senate is a long way off, but I think that all aspects should be carefully looked at before any steps are taken.

Consequences of over indulgence explained by SUDS chairperson

When I was asked to give my opinion on UW-Stout's Homecoming and alcohol, I thought to myself, "What a loaded question (no pun intended)." I think this upcoming weekend can be very enjoyable, but it could be ruined by not making wise decisions on alcohol consumption.

Guest

From past experiences, I feel the Stout students clearly understand the concept of partying at Homecoming. There are students who may choose not to drink, to drink moderately or go beyong their limit — to get totally smashed. My concerns are with all this celebrating, can we actually be responsible for our own behavior without hurting ourself and others?

As the SUDS (Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly) chairperson, I'd like to share some general facts from the U.S. Department of Health Education that hopefully will make you think twice about your level of consumption this weekend.

What is drunkenness? Drunkenness or intoxication is the temporary loss of control over physical and mental powers due to overconsumption of alcoholic beverages. Be honest with yourself. Do you want no control over your body and mind during one of the most exciting weekends of your college years?

Teresa Mitchell

What is a hangover? A hangover is the body's reaction to drinking irresponsibly, such as consuming too much alcohol at a time when you are tired or under stress. The associated miseries of nausea, gastritis, anxiety, and headache vary by individual case, but a universal characteristic of all hangovers is extreme fatigue. Again, be honest with yourself. Do you want to deal with a hangover at the Homecoming football game? Or even the following day?

What is drunk driving? A driver of a vehicle who is intoxicated to the extent that it affects the ability to handle the operation of an automobile. It happens every day of every year. Hundreds of thousands of Americans drink alcoholic beverages and then slip behind the wheel of a motor vehicle. According to Research Associates David Pacholczyk and Suzanne Stewart, as estimated 23,500 people are killed annually in alcohol related accidents, and 700,000 more are injured. Once again, be honest with yourself. Do you want to be the victim or the cause of this?

Homecoming is one part of your memorable college years, and your alcohol consumption could have a dramatic effect, if you let it. College is a time you start questioning what you've believed all along, and you make decisions that will probably affect you the rest of your life. Your peers influence you in these decisions. The question really isn't whether or not to drink anymore because by the time you reach college you've already decided whether or not you're going to drink, and your peer group influences these decisions. This weekend take a second to examine your alcohol consumption.

Homecoming weekend, like any other day, is what you make it to be. Just remember, be your own person, and make wise decisions on your alcohol consumption. I'm not asking anyone not to drink or to drink. I just want you to be aware of alcohol intake and be sensible. Respect yourself, your friends, and your peers. You don't have to get drunk to have a good time.

I would like to wish everyone a safe and fantastic Homecoming.

Sincere appreciation

The Nigerian Students' Association at UW-Stout wishes to express its sincere thanks for the coverage of the 25th anniversary of Nigerian Independence which took place on Oct. 5 and appeared in The Stoutonia of Oct. 10.

The Association is pleased with the coverage and hopes for more cooperation henceforth.

Ms. Landis' article of October 17 didn't really make much sense to me. Was she saying, "Let's attract people to the bars with bands so they won't drink"? OR; was the article actually a disguised advertisement for a couple of local bands? How could anybody seriously believe that by having a live band in a bar, drinking would slow down? If anything, the more carefree atmosphere would lend itself to increased drinking. Quite frankly, Ms. Landis' naivete' floors me.

Quality control questioned

We, as the "Safe House" coordinators, would like to commend the Stoutonia staff on the fine job they've done reporting on the Sexual Assult Prevention Committees/Projects. However, it is unfortunate that the Stoutonia staff lacks the necessity of quality control which is needed to publish an accurate, informative, and unbiased paper.

We would like it to be known that "Safe Houses" do not deal with unsafe housing as it was stated in the Oct. 10, 1985 issue of the Stoutonia. It is also unfortunate that the information was approved with error, by the editor, for publication.

Once again the Stoutonia staff deserves a round of applause.

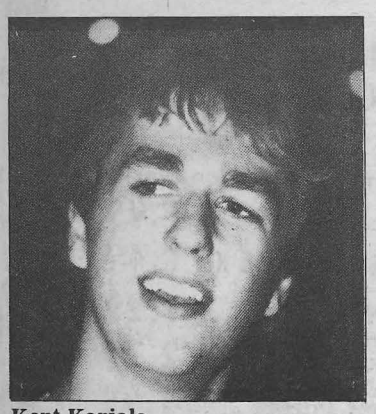
What are your plans for celebrating Homecoming?



Kent Karjala,
Freshman,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

I intend to consume mass quantities of beer and I plan to attend the football game. I'm going to have an awesome attitude. I'll just get paid right before homecoming; so hey, it's party time.

Kathy Bourbonbis,
Sophomore,
Home Economics in Business

I am going to have a great time partying at the Beach House. Friday I work until nine and then I will probably go to the Tap and have a good time and go nuts. I think it's (I-94 march) a great idea.

Tom Vite
Sophomore,
Marketing and Distributive Education

I think homecoming is the time for festivities. Drink a lot of beer, eat a lot and get wild. Go nuts with the women. Man, see what's going on. Jump up and down and check it out. See what the football game is all about. I have heard about it (I-94 march), and it's supposed to be the greatest time in the world, but Stout has had trouble with the people in the community.

Denise Caruth,
Sophomore,
Fashion Merchandising

I plan on having my twin sister up here. We're going to have a large amount of partying up in my room and go to the football game. We're going to stay out of trouble and have some fun.

Chuck Wilke,
Senior,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

I'm an assistant bar manager. The bars will stop serving alcohol at one o'clock. This will allow people to leave slowly and go to parties or wherever they want to go which will hopefully prevent the I-94 march. We want everyone to have a good, safe time, but we just don't want it to be out of hand because it reflects poorly, not only on the students, but on the bars and businesses throughout town.

Marriott donates $20,000 to Stout's H&R program

Rich Langberg
News Editor

With over 140 companies in attendance at the 1985 Professional Career Conference, the industry showed that they are interested in UW-Stout graduates. One company went a step further at the conference and showed they care about the students when they are still enrolled.

The Marriott Corporation, the largest lodging company in the United States, donated $20,000 to the Hotel and Restaurant Management program here at Stout.

Dr. Lee Nicholls, administrator for the Department of Habitational Resources, said, "It will be used in the Hotel and Restaurant program to better the front office laboratory and curriculum. Within the next few months, we hope to have a first-class front office lab."

The Dean of the School of Home Economics, Dr. J. Anthony Samenfink, said it showed how the Marriott Corporation feels about the H and R program here.

"I think Marriott is saying...'We enjoy recruiting Stout students, and we want to help,'" said Samenfink. "I'm happy because it shows the good work that our faculty, students and graduates are doing."

The renovation of the front office lab is in step with the overall laboratory renovation in the School of Home Economics. "The food production laboratory is being redone, as well as future improvements to the housekeeping, tourism and accounting and finance labs," said Nicholls. "The School is also adding a computer lab by 1986-87."

Nicholls agrees with Samenfink's assessment of Marriott's feelings towards the program here. "I think it is an acknowledgement of fine job that the faculty has been doing, and they hope to maximize learning in the future. The size of the donation is noteworthy, I hope there are ones like this in the future."

distributed in 1982 which asked about the most important needs at Stout.

Williams said the overwhelming response to the survey was that the biggest need at Stout is keeping faculty/staff members up-to-date. As a result, Williams said "$500,000 of the $2 million is earmarked for faculty/staff development. The major thrust of this campaign is faculty/staff development."

Williams said that there just wasn't enough money left over from the University's $50 million budget to help faculty members take time off to earn doctorates or simply explore the industrial field to learn the modern needs facing industry. As an example he said "The school of industry and technology has a $12,000 traveling budget for 100 or more faculty members. That could allow each of them a trip to the Cities."

Williams pointed out how valuable a large travel budget for professors would be to Stout. "These are faculty going out to industry, one day here, one day there, learning more about new techniques in industry, going to conferences and getting new ideas."

The second priority of the fundraising camapaign is keeping Stout up-to-date in terms of the instructional equipment being used on campus. To that end Williams said "$375,000 goes immediately toward the purchase of instructional equipment. Things that you as students would have access to in labs and classes."

Williams said the third priority of the campaign was investing in bringing Library Learning Center material up-to-date. "It's a beautiful facility," he said, "But, we don't have a very great budget for purchasing materials."

Williams pointed out how the library has been forced to cut back spending recently. "In the past five or six years the library has had to give up 100 or some periodicals. Periodicals tend to be the quickest way for people learning new technology."

The library should really be moving in the opposite direction according to Williams. "The curriculum moves forward all the time in applied technology and other areas. Without the material to keep up with those, you as a student are hampered in trying to keep up with current information."

Williams warned that "each student won't suddenly see a dramatic change in his/her courses. But, the faculty teaching the courses will have a far better chance of staying up with new technology. You should see a real diffusion of new materials in the library.

Crash and Burn

Brace yourself for Wildfest

Matt Kalina

It's that time of year again when the human zoo returns to beautiful downtown Menomonie for yet another freak show.

Everyone will appear for the carnival of plenty: police officers, students, back-up police officers, alumni, extra police officers, out-of-town roadtrippers and auxiliary police officers.

Some may remember the exciting smoke show put on in 1982 with the foggy images of tear gas and bands of police officers from all over the surrounding communities equipped with full riot gear, including night sticks and helmets with face shields arresting I-94 marchers by the bunch. Hey, the police pull out all the stops for the big show. The animal trainers roam the streets during the weekend bash waiting to disrupt any deviant behavior among the hoarde. Better walk straight that night, for the eye of the badge will be watching you.

I'm sure we have all heard about plastered party animals trashing traffic signs, trees and fellow party animals during the big top of the alcoholic circus.

The show is quite unorthordox to put it mildly. Maybe you will hear a knock at your door at 5 a.m. and open it up to reveal a gang of your friends with two cases of beer demanding your bar dice.

Who knows what the show has in store for you.

Perhaps you will be body-pased from one end of the Spot to the other. Or you may possibly have a tequila sunrise party that lasts through two sunrises.

And if you are in the immensely pleasurable situation of being an alumni breezing in on a road-trip with a mission of eternal chos, then my friend, you may forget where Bowman Hallis, but will remember exactly where The Tap, Marion, Meet Market, Flame, and Log Jam are.

Who knows what the show has in store for you.

Arrests at the big show do not follow a consise pattern. It fluctuates dramatically and unpredictably.

In 1978, 80 people were arrested with about 45 being Stout students. In 1979 84 were arrested including 33 students. In 1980 close to 100 were arrested including 16 students.

The full-blown 1982 show in which 235 people were arrested, including 103 students, was total chaos. A state of emergency was declared by city officials befroe actual bar-time, closing down taverns and forcing wild and lawless beasts onto the streets. This led to students marching on I-94 and police, not to be outdone, gave away "free tear gas" and "complimentary bus rides" to the fair grounds for mass processing of arrests. But this was more of a drunk crowd than an angry mob.

In 1983 a total of 84 citations were given out, 14 in which the perpetrator was transported to teh Menomonie Police Department for booking. Seventy citations were issued for traffic violations, open containers and urinating in the streets. Stout students were awarded 23 of the citations. No one was arrested for unlawful assembly.

In 1984 arrests were cut to 49. This is almost typical of an average weekend in Menomonie. A mere 14 open container citations on Friday and 16 on Saturday were written, and of these, 30, only one was given to a Stout student. Of 26 disorderly conduct charges, only five were made to Stout students. Most of the fines were incurred by alumni or visitors from surrounding communities drawn by Stout's partying reputation.

Unbelievably, the notoriously rowdy parties were actually quiet, having only one noise violation given out during the entire weekend.

I maintain that last year was mellow simply because of the miserably wet weather.

Again the ominous black cloud is hanging over Stout. I'm guessing that the University's administration is hoping for rain.

Going out on a limb, I somberly predict that no less than 74 people, including 37 Stout students, will be arrested during this weekend's show.

The Bottom Line

Male sluts return

Rich Brueckner

A few parts of my Late Night column got left out due to lack of space.

David: "Here is the part of the read-a-thon film that shows public figures reading something that has influenced their lives."

Paul: "Who is the fellow reading the lyrics of 2112?"

"Apparently he is a columnist for the Stoutonia. I think those people pelting him with rocks and garbage work for the local government. The next relic speaker is the president of the CENSORED. When he read that valentine from Rock Hudson — the entire audience was truly moved."

On to current events. Thank you DC'VER for proving that good time rock 'n' roll beer parties are still possible here at Stout. I'll bet even DOVER could not have pulled off a better show.

My condolences to those who will miss that Mick Jagger poster in the Student Center. A color television has now replaced it.

Someone recently made the mistake of telling me that the Stoutonia is mailed to Ronald Reagan on a weekly basis. I doubt that he will read this but I would like to commend him on the decision he made to intercept those dick-smokers. I like it when the military gets to "kick some terrorist-ass."

I couldn't help but comment on the front page photo in the Leader-Telegram of Reagan holding up a jacket saying "The Pack is Back...AMERICA is Back." The President has something in common with Forrest Gregg in that both would like to develop an effective strategic defense initiative against the Bears.

Politicians seem drawn to sports. If arbitrator Richard Nixon sides with the baseball leagues I could just see the striking umpires outside the stadiums next year with picket signs proclaiming, "LICK DICK IN '86!"

Speaking of profound statements, Attorney General Edwin Meese was recently quoted, "If suspects weren't guilty, they wouldn't be suspects." Well Edwin, I suspect you have been purposely standing downwind from all those pot plants you have been burning.

To continue in my "crude and cynical" vein, I would now like to report on some in-depth research into the traditional dating roles of Stout students. I uncovered an ancient document that was buried under the demolished house next to the Slaughtered Clam. It is a real eye opener.

MAGGOT CONSTITUTION

We, the international secret society of Maggots, wish to make our objectives and guidelines of maggot behavior known. The following articles must be adhered to at all times by those who wish to be considered true Maggots. All are subject to review by the current King Maggot, whose term shall run until he is out-maggoted by another member of the society.

(1) WHAT WE DON'T GET — WE TAKE.

All prospective Maggots must remember this as it will be the main force in their new life as a Maggot.

(2) MAGGOTS STICK TOGETHER.

A Maggot will say or do anything to support the activities of a fellow Maggot. This includes lying to whoever the female is that the fellow Maggot is being a Maggot to.

(3) MAGGOTS DO WHATEVER IS NECESSARY.

Specifically, a Maggot will say or do anything in order to accomplish the prime objective, as long as it does not conflict with any of the other Maggot guidelines.

(4) MAGGOTS WILL DO WHATEVER THEY CAN GET AWAY WITH.

This may include juggling several women at the same time and place.

(5) MAGGOTS GET THEIR VICTIMS DRUNK IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE.

Only in this manner will the next guideline be effective.

(6) MAGGOTS USE CAVE TALK.

This is the only sure-fire method prescribed by the current King Maggot. Cave Talk encompasses such expressions as, "Uh-huh," "Talk to me," and "Sure...," These monosyllable responses are meant to reflect to the Maggots quarry that his intentions are anything but intellectual in nature.

(7) MAGGOTS TRY TO SEDUCE ENTIRE HOUSEHOLDS OF QUEENS — ONE AT A TIME.

Highly sought-after queens are usually attempted first in order to give the other queens in the household the illusion that the Maggot has a class act.

(8) MAGGOTS LIE TO THEIR GIRLFRIENDS BACK HOME.

If they didn't, trips back home home wouldn't be quite the same. "I miss you," "I'm going crazy up here all by myself," and, "I'm so busy with classes now that I can't even go out at all."

(9) MAGGOTS PROMISE QUEENS THAT THEY WILL BE DISCREET.

This promise will usually last until the Maggot runs into a roommate on a trip to the bathroom during recovery periods.

(10) ONLY MAGGOTS KNOW WHO THEY ARE.

If their true nature were known they would be unable to Maggot-on highly sought after queens.

Apparently the original name of this organization was "Saw Brothers," referring both to Menomonie's logging history and an anotomical connotation.

After finding the document I was curious about whether the organization still exists. I soon found an individual that claims to be the new King Maggot. He did not know how many members currently comprise the society, due to the fact that "Maggotism is an idealology — not a governing body." I asked him if any Maggots are planning to sign up for the proposed escort service. He said I should leave that up to my imagination. He did say that the organization did support the Safe House program because, "Some Maggots have sisters, you know."

Since it is a secret society, I asked him if there are any clues that one could use to spot a potential Maggot. "All I can tell you is who are not Maggots. For instance, City Councilman Jay Schroeder, Don Dickman and the Menomonie School Superintendant, all who did not respond to invitations to the 'Safe House' community meeting Oct. 7th, are definitely not Maggots — no matter what one might want to call such area leaders who show such a lack of concern for potentially endangered citizens."

I detected a bit of compassion for the fair sex in that last statement, so I asked him if Maggots ever do anything without the consent of their partners. "Absolutely not. We are just experts at acquiring oral consent. We even believe in chivalry; where would a Maggot be without females?"

Maggots may or may not be everywhere, but I really don't think they are much of a threat. It has even been pointed out to me that female Maggots treat potential dates in the same manner that male Maggots do. Guys, at least now we know what we're up against.

University Notes

Voc-student recognized

Jane Young, a UW-Stout student majoring in vocational rehabilitation, is the recipient of the "Presidential Award" of the American Academy for Cerebral Palsy and Developmental Medicine. Presented recently at the organization's meeting in Seattle, it is in recognition of Young's contributions to better understanding and acceptance of people with handicaps.

A native of Rochester, Mn., Young has cerebral palsy. A scholarship accompanies her award, and she was nominated by Robert Goover, the president of the academy and also a Rochester resident. Past recipients of the award include Geri Jewell, a regular on the television series The Facts of Life, and William Sachter, whose life story was portrayed by Mickey Rooney in the movie Bill.

Senate OK's regent

The Wisconsin State Senate on Oct. 14 receded from its position of placing two students on the University of Wisconsin Board Of Regents and passed a bill authorizing Governor Earl to seat just one student. This puts the Senate in agreement with the Assembly version of the bill and passes it on to Earl for final approval.

The United Council, (UC) has been trying to get such legislation passed for the last 11 years, and applauded the move. "It looks as though students may finally have the input they deserve as major financial contributers to higher education," said UC Legislative Affairs Director John Wilson. "We commend the legislators for recognizing the value of direct student involvement in educational policy decisions."

Human Services Board

The Stout Student Association (SSA), led by Minority Affair's Senator Andrew Kumar is forming the Human Services Board, a committee that will address the concern of minority and women students within the Stout student community. The committee's chairpeople will be United Council Director Dave Kester, Womens Affair's Senator Tracey Lea Landis and Kumar. Anyone interested in joining should contact Kester in the SSA office or Kumar at 232-1062.

Chinese at Stout

As part of their tour of the United States, a delegation of eight administrators from post-secondary institutions in the People's Republic of China visited UW-Stout from Sunday, Oct. 20 through Thursday, Oct. 24. Members of the group are from institutes in China that deal with light industry and mechanical engineering.

Nicaragua slide show

In conjunction with National Peace with Justice Week, Len Cizewski, a public health nurse in Madison, and John Bernard, a postal worker and Vietnam veteran, will show slides and talk about their trips during the past year to Nicaragua with the group Witness for Peace. The meeting will be held in the Quaker Meetinghouse, 1718 10th St. in Menomonie. Everyone is encouraged to attend.

Witness for Peace is a religiously-based U.S. organization which maintains a observational presence in the war zones near the Nicaragua-Honduras border. It was a Witness for Peace delegation that was kidnapped by a contra rebel group and held for 30 hours last August.

UW enrollment grows

Led by UW-Madison, the University of Wisconsin system total enrollment grew by 2,509 to an all-time high of 164,445 students. Ten of the 13 four-year institutions and two-year centers reported increases over the previous year.

Madison led the way with an increase of 813 pupils, Stevens Point was up 488, 375 at Oshkosh and an increase of 364 here at Stout. Only Milwaukee, Parkside and River Falls reported no increase in attendance.

Ethnic Services Seminar

The UW-Stout Ethnic Services Center is sponsoring a seminar titled, "Dating: Crossing the Color Line" on Tuesday, Oct. 29. The speaker will be Tess Arenas, Consultant and Doctoral candidate at UW-Madison. The site will be the Maplewood room of the Memorial Student Center, with refreshments to be served at 7:15 p.m., and the seminar will run from 7:30 - 8:30.

Clinical Services offers experience to psychology graduate students

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Following Stout's tradition of "learning by doing", the Stout Clinical Services Center has been offering second-year graduate students in the school of psychology and family and marriage counseling, hands on experience.

The center, which is located in the Student Health Services Building, is co-directed by Gust Jenson and Charles Barnard. According to Jenson, the center, which started in 1970, "Began as a place to provide more in-depth training, diagnosis, and therapy experience for students than they could acheive in places away from the university."

Some of the services provided by the center include: drug and alcohol abuse counseling, anxiety/behavior management, chemotherapy, divorce adjustment, education, family, group, and individual counseling, hypnotherapy, marriage therapy, parent counseling, relaxation training, stress mangagement, and sexual counseling. The center is a fully certified, fully accredited outpatient clinic.

The center utilizes the services of between 40 and 45 graduate students and serves between 200 and 300 clients a year. The graduate students work under the close supervison of Jenson and Barnard. The clients, who may be self-referred, or referred by a doctor, the courts, a minister, and so forth, have their case reviewed by Jenson and Barnard. Their case is then assigned to a student who has had some background in the area of the client's concern.

Jenson noted that the center is essentially a "lab" for the graduate students, similiar to labs found in other majors, such as home economics or industrial technology. He admitted that "this is an expensive way to teach. It is cheaper and easier to lecture to a group of people than to provide supervision," but he also pointed out that the program "follows Stout's tradition of learning by doing."

In the future, Jenson would like to see an updating of the centers' neuropsychological lab to include the new ideas and techniques that have been developed in the past five years. He would also like to see the continued development of a counseling program for the children of alcoholics.

Jenson felt that the centers' program and the chance it gave students to develop their knowledge, added to Stout's strong psychology and counseling programs. He said, "We can count on the employers of our graduates to call up a year later and ask us if we have any more like them. Our graduates are our best representatives."

Cinema attendance down due to high expectations

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

The University Cinema Commission, the group that is responsible for bringing you newly released motion pictures, has been affected financially by lower than expected attendance figures. The Commission now shows the movies in the Great Hall, after moving from Applied Arts 210.

"The main problem," said Tim Hopkins, member of the Commission and UW Stout senior, "is primarily due to lack of publicity and the faulty expectations that there would be a larger crowd due to the move to the Great Hall."

According to Hopkins, after the first four shows the Commission lost money. However, Susan Tomesek, Chairperson of the Commission and sophomore at Stout, explained that they did not really lose money since they receive an allocation at the beginning of the year to be used for first semester. The money "made" first semester is used on purchasing the movies for second semester.

Lucy Nicolai, Student Activities Advisor, feels that the lower attendance figures may be due to higher expectations after moving into the Great Hall. The attendance is actually close to that of last year. The Commission felt that the new, improved facilities would increase figures.

Hopkins and Tomesek agree that upgrading publicity and a public relations push will help and has already improved attendance figures. The Commission is putting more money into their advertising by using weekly table tents, larger posters, full page advertisements in the Stoutonia and new creative flyers. A border is also being used consistently on their advertisements so people will associate it with the Commission.

The Commission offered season passes this year that did not sell well, due to lack of publicity, according to Hopkins. These passes were $8.00 for 13 movies. However, the passes will be offered for second semester at a cost of $5.00 for eight movies and will be marketed for use possible as Christmas gifts.

"We are competing with HBO, Cinemax and video cassette recorders," said Nicolai. "Our survey at the beginning of the year showed that Sunday is still considered the best night, and the price is great at $1.00." In an effort to compete with these other media, the Commission has already shown an older movie, Rebel Without a Cause and is planning on continuing this pattern for some of the movies during the second semester.

Clarification

The Oct. 10, 1985 issue of the Stoutonia contained a story regarding a proposed Safehouse Project for this locale. SSA Senator Lee Michaels is quoted as stating that City Councilman Jay Schroeder was invited to the Safehouse Committee Meeting but failed to respond. Councilman Schroeder maintains that he never received an invitation.

A blue haired masked marvel called the University Student Senate to order Tuesday night. Who was this masked marvel? None other than Senate President, JoAnn Prange. In an effort to psyche the senate up for Homecoming, Prange came attired in blue "Blue Devil" hair and a blue mask.

University Programming Board (UPB) spoke to senate during Open Forum. The eight commissions each came foreward with a representative to acquaint Senate with what they do, and the different types of programming they offer students here at Stout.

One of the highlights came when Contemporary Music Production (CMP) members danced around Senate to the song "Shout" inviting and sometimes dragging senators onto the dance floor. CMP brings major concerts such as Night Ranger and mini-concerts such as this semester's Bad Boy/Ron LaSalle show. CMP's next mini-concert is Milwaukee's "South Side Snake," and "Dogwood," also known as "The Booze Brothers Revue" on Thursday, November 14, 9 p.m. in the Great Hall.

Quarterly reports were handed out by executive board members informing the senators on what they have been working on this past quarter.

In her President's report Prange reported on the Alchol Awareness conference she attended last weekend at UW-Whitewater.

"We heard some great speakers and saw an excellent one-act play entitled 'Please Remember Me.' In this play a woman re-enacted her last night as an alcoholic. We're looking into bringing this play to Stout possibly Parents Weekend," Prange said.

Vice President of Financial Affairs Tom Schwalbach informed Senate that budgets from all SSA funded organizations are due the first week in November. Hearings will begin the following week.

United Council (UC) Director Dave Kester reported on the UC Leadership Conference held last weekend in Green Lake, Wisconsin. "There were four sessions with four workshops each session. Stout was so well represented that we hit every workshop in every session. I would like to thank everyone who attended," Kester said.

Kester also informed senate that we won an award at Green Lake for having the most delagates in attendance at the conference.

Under Old Business several motions pertaining to SSA Constitution changes were tabled for one week due to lack of quorum.

Motion USS-16-78 was brought up which would take away faculty vote in student elections, automatically failed due to lack of quorum.

Bathtec concept is a leap in technology

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

"The system we live in is a hardware system, not a human system," –Jim McCormick, Industrial design instructor.

Let us consider The Modern Bathroom. Whose idea was it? Why is it more of a practice chamber for a contortionist than an aesthetically pleasing, functional design. Why is it so poorly arranged?

The answer to these questions is based in our whole outlook at the relationship of the human to a commercial and industrial network.

The fixtures in the average bathroom involve something of a modern anything-but-holy trinity: the sink, shower/bathtub and the toilet.

Using the sink requires a degree of back-strain. There are numerous serious accidents in showers and tubs every year. And toilets, besides wasting water and being unnecessarily hard to clean, constrict the anatomy rather than assist elimination. Now imagine that you are handicapped or aged. The bathroom can become a torture chamber. Is this the best we can do?

The UW-Stout Design Research Center,(DRC) has created a total bathroom design known as Bathtec. This is not just a cosmetic facelift but a complete re-evaluation of the form and function of the complete bathroom system.

The Design Research Center's Bathtec model is scheduled to be delivered to the Euro-Bathtec Exhibition in Milan. This is the major European exhibition of bathroom technology.

The marketing trend for bathroom design is toward spa-like luxury spaces. "Our approach is to make it more functional," according to Jim McCormick, Stout industrial design instructor. McCormick will accompany the Bathtec model to the Milan Euro-Bathtec exhibition.

"It was designed in the beginning to address the problem of older people because they are not dealt with today," McCormick continued. "You adapt right now to get into the tub. As you get older, it is much more difficult for you to do so."

The vice-president of marketing for American Standard Plumbing Co., Bill Sigafoos, called the DRC Bathtec the most innovative concept that he had seen to deal with the problem of older people and handicapped,' according to McCormick.

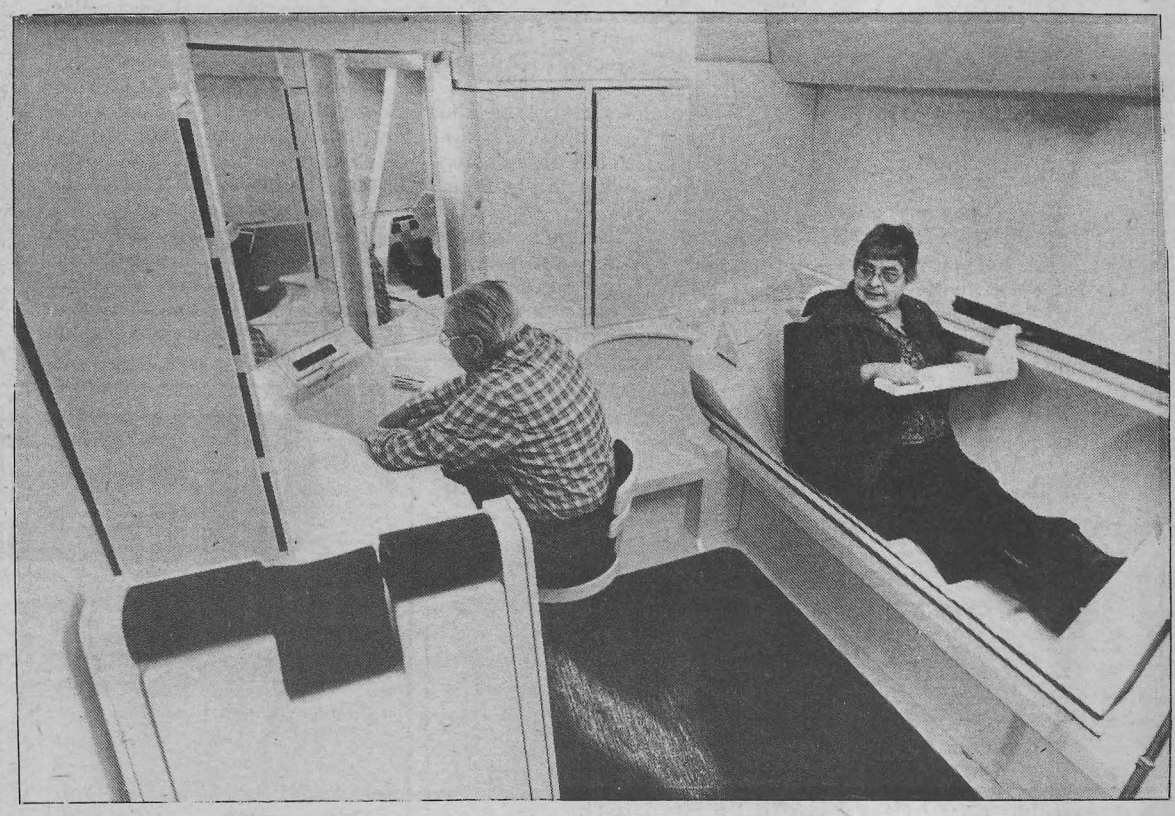
American Standard is funding the shipment and presentation of the DRC Bathtec at the Milan expo, which begins Feb. 5, 1986.

The design was created more than two years ago by 13 students and two faculty directors. The students were a mixed team of graphic, interior and industrial designers. They created the design, built the model and completed the brochure in one semester and part of the following summer. The project incorporated students but cannot really be termed a "student project."

This is not the only project the DRC will be looking at. Another major research project will involve food preparation spaces and other living systems for the elderly.

The future of Bathtec is uncertain. "The Milan show is another example of recognition and a contribution to the international look at design," according to Gene Bloedorn, art department chairman.

Further commercial applications and design show offers are likely but nothing has been confirmed.



NEW WAVE WATER-CLOSET — The Design Research Center's Bathtec model is demonstrated by two volunteers. The model will be sent to the Milan Euro-Bathtec Expo later in November.

"It is unlikely to end here," Bloedorn said, "there are other opportunities of a grander scale than what we are looking at now. On the other hand, we are encouraging the start of other research projects..."

"We do not perceive ourselves as developers and manufacturers," McCormick added. "We see ourselves as addressing problems that can not be addressed by industry, for many reasons. We would be very happy if somebody took this thing [Bathtec] over. We would have influenced where they should be. If you consider it in terms of the university's function, our role is really to try and influence the world in a better way."

The Bathtec concept could be taken by a manufacturer or other agency and further refined and developed into full-scale industrial production.

McCormick expressed an interest in having access to a functioning prototype for further research and developement. This would require the model to be constructed by a manufacturer. A new DRC team would evaluate and adapt the system within their new understanding.

Many smaller design companies and caring agencies for the elderly have already expressed a desire to use the Bathtec system. At the

LUCKY LIFE — Poet Gerald Stern read to an enthusiastic audience last week. Stern survived a bullet-wound from an assailant earlier in the month. (Photo by Lary Derrah)

Stern's poetry effective in giving everyday life emotion and feeling

Suzette Kramer
Arts Reporter

On Oct. 17, UW-Stout brought to its public a nationally known and accredited poet, Gerald Stern. Stern, who has been an active writer of poetry since the age of 46, has published three well known books of poetry: "Lucky Life," "Red Coal," and "Paradise Poems."

Stern's poems create a wide range of emotion and feeling, and cover a variety of subjects including such seemingly trivial things as trees, squirrels, and soap. Yet through attacking these basically meaningless objects, Stern has accomplished what many unsuccessful poets dream of.

In 1977 Stern received the Academy of American Poets' Lamont Poetry Award. He also has been the recipient of the Poetry Society of America's Melville Cane Award, and two writing grants from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Born in Pittsburgh, Stern was educated at the University of Pittsburgh and Columbia University. He served in the United States Army Air Corps in 1949 through which he traveled widely in Europe. There he also tutored and taught high school English.

In the United States he has taught at various colleges and universities, including Sarah Lawrence, Somerset County College, Temple University, the University of Pittsburgh, and the University of Iowa, where he joined the faculty of the Writers' Workshop in 1982.

Stern came to poetry relatively late in life. He was 46 years old when his first book was published. Now at the age of sixty, however, he feels the wait has proved to be worthwhile, for in the past few years, Stern has grown quite unique in his ways, and in turn has become quite well known.

While attending Stern's poetry reading last Thursday evening, I grew aware of the surrounding silence, the aura of

Classic film features master of makeup

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

The Phantom of the Opera, a classic silent horror film, will be shown at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Oct.29 at the Pawn in the student center.

Musical accompaniment of the film will be provided by Philip Brunelle of the Minnesota Opera.

The Phantom of the Opera is based on the French novel "Le Phantome de l'Opera" by Gaston Leroux.

The film was produced in 1925 by Universal Pictures. It was directed by Rupert Julian and stars famous silent film actor Lon Chaney as the Phantom. The film also features Mary Philbin, Norman Kerry and Arthur Edmond Carewe.

The film created quite a sensation in its day. Audiences, who were used to viewing mostly detective thrillers and serials, were not prepared for this adventure into the world of the macabre.

The Phantom of the Opera tells the story of Christine, a young and beautiful soprano, who is coached by a mysterious man speaking through her dressing room wall at the Paris Opera.

Christine believes this man to be the "spirit of music." With his coaching, her voice begins to improve tremendously.

After the man terrorizes the lead soprano into cancelling her appearance, Christine is able to step in and give the audience a brilliant performance.

Meanwhile, Christine's fiance, threatened by her success, is pressuring Christine to leave the theater so they can marry. But Christine, compelled by the "mysterious spirit," continues her career with the opera.

Christine finally meets the mystery man, but instead of being amazed by his talent, she is frightened by his masked appearance and strange mannerisms, such as maintaining a coffin in his bedroom.

When Christine unveils the "Phantom," she finds that his face is that of a corpse. This unveiling is considered by many to be the greatest moment of shock in silent film, due to Chaney's expertise with theatrical makeup.

Although the Phantom desperately seeks Christine's love and understanding, he releases her after seeing her fear. His only wish is that she break off the relationship with her fiance.

Christine disregards the Phantom's request and later meets her lover at a masked ball. The phantom appears at the ball as a figure of death and threatens Christine and her partner.

Although Christine is heavily guarded after this unsettling incident, the phantom manages to sweep her from the stage during a late night performance.

Her fiance and members of the police force follow in persuit as the film builds to a spectacular climax.

The Phantom of the Opera is Chaney's most famous film. His electrifying performance is responsible for the films enduring appeal.

Chaney was a master of the art of makeup. He wrote several articles on the subject, including the one that appears in the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Although many of his makeup faces, including the Phantom, involved acute pain through prolonged distortion of muscles and limbs, Chaney refused to use easier, less realistic substitutes.

As the Phantom, Chaney used clamps to hold back his lips, wedges to reshape his cheeks and pins to extend his nostrils.

Chaney was a specialist in the grotesque. He created characters who were the ultimate in physical ugliness, yet very deep in human emotion.

He was also a master pantomimist, adept at creating via pantomime, pictures of escapades and adventures. Chaney's parents were deaf-mutes and it was believed that he developed his elaborate pantomime talents to converse with them.

Filmgoers are given last laugh on police

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

Viewing Police Academy II: Their first assignment compares with the experience of eating an anchovy pizza. You either love it or hate it.

Preview

The University Cinema Commission will present this, the top-grossout film of 1985, Sunday Oct. 27 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Union at 7 and 9:30 p.m.

Police Academy II tries to follow in the footsteps of Animal House, the number one grosser of grossout films to date. In case you're concerned that the film might be over your head, worry no more. The film's director Jerry Paris has no qualms about the audience he's appealing to. Paris said in a Time magazine interview that "children love dirty and they love the silliness of this kind of comedy."

Police Academy II starts where Police Academy left off. Steve Gutenberg and Bubba Smith star as the leaders of this group of screw-ups specializing in law enforcement. Since they quelled the riot at the end of the last picture they've been assigned to maintain order in the worst crime district in the world.

Where Police Academy II comes up short is the fact that you really could care less what happens to any of the characters involved. It's too incredible to even allow the audience to become emotionally involved in any way.

If readers can remember back to Jerry Lewis films such as The Disorderly Orderly they will remember films of total buffoonery matching that of the grossouts today. The major difference between gross-outs such as the Steve Gutenberg character in Police Academy II and Jerry Lewis' comic characters was that Lewis tried to do his best throughout, yet he always screwed up because he was so nervous about possibly screwing up. Steve Gutenberg in Police Academy II simply wants to screw up and it's impossible to feel sympathetic toward such a character.

Steve Gutenberg seems to have redefined the idea of being a rebel without a cause. The funniest material in Police Academy II, judging from audience response, occurs each time he defies the rules, continually ending up making the authority figures look ridiculous.

Gutenberg's skill in this film results from his ability to say to characters what you wish he would say. His audience appears to be the silent majority of teenagers who time and again find themselves making a courteous response to authority figures when they'd really like to say, "Put a sock in it bud."

Filmgoers wanting to have the last laugh on authority figures ought to enjoy Police Academy II as a harmless sort of escapist humor.

UW-Stout Come Home

Royalty competition, a casino night and a parade are among events scheduled for this year's homecoming at UW-Stout.

There are 17 homecoming candidates competing throughout the week for the title of king and queen. Winners and first and second runners-up will be announced Friday, Oct. 25 during a coronation dance scheduled for 9 p.m. in the Student Center's Crystal Ballroom. Entertainment that evening will be provided by the band Bacchus Lotus from Sheboygan.

The Homecoming Parade begins at 11 a.m., Saturday, Oct. 26. Beginning at the Dunn County Recreation Park, the parade will proceed west on Wilson to Third St. and south on Third to Nelson Field.

Saturday night there will be a Las Vegas casino night in the Student Center's Grand View Terrace, reflecting this year's homecoming theme "Take a Chance."

Returning alumni are encouraged to register during daytime hours Friday and Saturday at Louis Smith Tainter House or at the Student Center's Service Center. From 5 — 7 p.m., Friday, Stout staff members with 10, 15, 20, and 25 years of service to the institution will be honored at an alumni-faculty reception in the Student Center Ballroom. Reunion dinners that evening will be for the classes of 1945, 1955, 1965 and 1970.

Saturday alumni activities will include a "Blue Devil Country 5K Run" for alumni and wheelchair competitors . Sponsored by Coca Cola and the Stout Alumni Association, the race begins at the Vocational Rehabilitation building.

The alumni homecoming banquet at 7 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom will honor those returning for class reunions. Stout's 1985 alumni awards will also be presented. A dance will follow at 9:30 pm. in the Great Hall, featuring the Jerry Way Express.

Information on other alumni activities can be obtained from the Alumni Office, Louis Smith Tainter, phone 232-1658.

Exploring Norway

"Exploring Norway" will be the title of a presentation at UW-Stout at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 24 in the Great Hall of the Student Center.

The session by Jim Forshee opens a travel and adventure film series at the university. Tickets for the single presentation are available at the door. Cost is $4 for the general public and $3 for students.

Forshee has lived in Ann Arbor, Mich., all of his life. He studied at the Henry Ford Community College and Wayne University.

After graduating from the Henry Ford Trade School, he entered the United States Marine Corps. It was while he was in the Marines, serving in Japan and the Pacific, that he became interested in cameras as a hobby. After World War II, he entered the automobile industry as an engineer. He bought his first movie camera in 1950, which marked the beginning of his career in photography.

Chaney, the legendary "Man of a Thousand Faces" with Chaney's most famous film, The Phantom of the Opera (1925).

Chaney specialized in fantastic roles, and as Erik, the mysterious denizen of the catacombs below the Paris Opera House, he gave one of his most vivid portrayals. No other version of this gothic melodrama has surpassed this lavish production, which contains the most celebrated "unmasking" sequence in film history.

The program lasts approximately 95 minutes and can be seen on Tuesday, Oct. 29 in the Pawn-Student Center at 8 p.m.

THE FANTASTICKS

Two Stout students, Tom Knudten and Tim Korsmoe, have been cast in Menomonie Theatre Guild's production of "The Fantasticks", a musical comedy to be presented Nov. 1-3 and 7-9 at the Mabel Tainter Theater.

The story is based on the notion that a girl and boy can fall in love only if their feelings are expressly forbidden by their parents. The score also includes three lovely ballads, "Try to Remember" which is full of nostalgia, "Soon It's Gonna Rain" which creates a delicate romantic mood, and "They Were You."

In addition to the songs, the characters are introduced by music, and music punctuates much of the dialogue.

"The Fantasticks is fantastic," Newsweek magazine said in May of 1960 when the musical first opened. It became the longest-running New York stage production in 1968 and is still playing at the same Off-Broadway theatre. It also has had thousands of productions all over the world.

"I am convinced," Tom Jones, who wrote the book and lyrics, said, "that the simpler you do something the better off it is going to be. All too often in the musical theatre a great deal of effort is expended on things that have only a momentary effect without producing a genuine response. The proper words and music can evoke a spectacle in the mind that's so much more satisfying than anything the most skillfull scene designer could possibly devise."

Art Gallery Dedication

Ceremonies dedicating a UW-Stout art gallery to John Furlong will be held at 4:30 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 26 in Room 104 of Ray Hall, where the gallery is located.

Furlong, who was assistant to the chancellor until his retirement this summer, was instrumental in establishing the art department at Stout. The dedication is being held in conjunction with an alumni exhibition at the gallery, marking the art department's 20th anniversary.

In a related matter, the Stout University Foundation Board of Directors announced an annual contribution of $500 which will be used to establish a permanent art collection at Stout in the name of Furlong. He had served as the first executive director of the Foundation when it was established in 1962.

"John Furlong has given many long years of service to this university," Webster Hart, an Eau Claire attorney and president of the foundation, said. "But in addition to that service, he was instrumental in the very initial existence and development of the foundation, we thought it fitting to establish a permanent fund to be used for the purchase of art works for Stout's permanent collection."

Besides establishing the art department, Furlong has been an active supporter of the Stout art program. He and his wife Fritzi sponsor an annual scholarship for art students at Stout.

Furlong joined the Stout staff in 1962 as assistant to the then President William J. Micheels. He also held the titles of Vice President for University Relations and Development and Assistant Chancellor for Special Services, in addtion to serving as assistant to the chancellor.

Water Crisis in Region

The growing concern over ground water pollution in West Central Wisconsin is the topic of this week's expanded edition of SPECTRUM 28. Expert guests, a studio audience and open phone lines will give viewers the opportunity to learn how serious the water crisis has become in our region. The one-hour program will be broadcast live on Friday, Nov. 1 at 9:30 p.m. with a taped repeat scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 2 at 9:30 a.m. on WHWC-TV/28 Menomonie.

Anyone wishing to join the studio audience should contact WHWC-TV/28 to reserve seating. Viewers will also be able to joing the discussion via telephone during the program.

"The recent discovery of dangerous chemical pollutants in the water of area communities such as Chippewa Falls, Rusk, Hallie, River Falls, Hudson, Menomonie, and others convinced us of a need for this wide-ranging public discussion of the water crisis in our region," SPECTRUM 28 Host Max Herbach said. "We want to examine how serious the problem really is and hope to explore some reasonable solutions for reversing the contamination of our water supplies," Herbach added. Among the expert panelists who will appear on the program are representatives from the DNR and Wisconsin Agriculture Department. A leading toxicologist specializing in water contaminants and a public health official will explain the health hazards posed by public use of contaminated water.

"We take our water quality for granted," Herbach stated. "But the fact is that organic compounds and toxic substances such as pesticides, fertilizers, nitrates, and solid wastes have filtered into the ground water and have begun to threaten ourselves and future generations. The water crisis must be confronted immediately," he concluded.

Season tickets are available at a 25 percent savings over regular rates until Oct. 25 only.

For ticket information write MTG Box Office, Box 325, Menomonie, WI 54751 and request either the season ticket brochure or the single show brochure.

Homecoming varies from 50 years ago

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Tomorrow marks the beginning of Stout's Homecoming weekend. Friday and Saturday will be filled with parties, a parade, football game and a variety of other traditional activities.

How will you celebrate homecoming this year? Will your celebration of homecoming be anything like those of years past?

Although some of the traditional activities have survived over the years, today's homecoming has lost much of what Stout alumni refer to as "good clean fun." Back in 1935, students and organizations participated more in the overall planning of the two-day event.

Each class president was assigned a responsibility for his class in preparation for the homecoming events. Seniors decorated the cafeteria, juniors decorated the Home Economics Building, and sophmores decorated the gymnasium. The freshman class was usually in charge of decorating entrances to all buildings and the goal posts on the football field.

It was also the responsibility of the freshman class to put on the annual bonfire. "The bonfire was one of the major events," said 90-year-old alumna faculty member, Gertrude Callahan. "And oh it would be big. For weeks beforehand, students would be collecting rags, paper, and wood for the fire."

Traditionally, the bonfire took place on Friday night. There was always a play early in the evening, and afterwards students and alumni, led by the band, would march to the Stout field for the bonfire and pep meeting. There would be stunts performed by the cheerleaders, along with a speech from the football coach.

So, whatever happened to this tradition? Alumnus and area resident, Dr. Dwight Agnew feels that, "The bonfire tradition may have halted because of too much appropriating by the students. They would often find an outhouse to use for the fire; but sometimes the owners were not through using it. But the students would take it upon themselves to take it anyways." Agnew, along with other alumni were sorry to see the traditional bonfire discontinued because the students really enjoyed it.

Another activity of past homecomings were the breakfasts. On Saturday morning the various organizations put on breakfasts in honor of the returning alumni. This took place at around 10 a.m. and was followed by a field hockey game between the freshmen and sophmore women.

> Prizes of $5, $3 and $1 were offered for the best floats
> —Gertrade Callahan 90-year-old alumni

After the breakfast and hockey game was the parade. Although this event still takes place today, it has changed a great deal over the years. In past parades, all organizations participated in the parade. "All the clubs had floats," said Agnew. "They put a tremendous amount of work into the floats and really did a remarkable job. These floats were not suggestive like those you often see now." Prizes of $5, $3, and $1 were offered for the best floats.

The football game was always well attended. The faculty was expected to attend the game and help cheer on the team. The game was followed by an afternoon tea, sponsored by the Home Ec. Club.

The final activities of Homecoming were the banquet and dance on Saturday night. The banquet, which was held in the cafeteria, began at 6:30 p.m. Tickets were reserved for alumni, and students could purchase tickets for 50 cents each.

The banquet was not a typical cafeteria-style meal. The dinner usually included a fruit cocktail, a meat entree, such as baked ham, a potato, vegetables, rolls, dessert and coffee. "The banquet was wonderful," said Callahan. "Alva Brekke, the pastry cook, believed in home-cooked quality. The food was delicious—similar to that served in only the best of homes."

When dinner was over, students proceeded to the gymnasium for the homecoming dance. This was not a formal-style occassion. Men usually wore casual clothing and women wore skirts. As the years went by, the dance became more formal, and men were required to wear ties and jackets. A band, such as "Ted's Blue Jackets" played until midnight and it was "just good wholesome fun."

Though some of the homecoming activities have survived the last 50 years, some people feel that much of the spirit has been lost. So, when you're thinking of alternative ways to celebrate homecoming this year, why not come up with something that can be carried over the years. Who knows, maybe in 50 years it will be considered a traditional event.

Bathtec

Milan expo, the audience will be primarily architects, and designers who could influence the market to incorporate Bathtec into the existing hardware.

The types of innovation in the Bathtec design are far more comprehensive and fundamental than the typical ramps and handrails concept.

"New ideas take a significant amount of time to get going, regardless of what they are," McCormick said, "and this was really quite a radical approach."

"The whole principle of tubs, for instance, up to now, have been essentially the same thing as the washing tub...you put water into it and sat down."

"The whole concept of this, was that in some way, you could sit down and the tub could enclose you," McCormick added. "That is a drastic difference. It said that you were the important thing, not the tub. Then, you have many ways of approaching that, we show one...Once that concept came into being, you had a chance to accommodate people better."

The tub incorporates a half-cylinder tub shape that pivots on the ends. It is on a raised foundation that eliminated the need to sit down into what the brochure calls "a wet, slippery hole."

The user sits almost laterally, on a padded, insulated seat to conserve body heat. It also incorporates heat lamps to add warmth. Water controls are located in the grab bar, and are slide controls rather than the standard handles that require gripping.

The other arrangements, lighting, storage, sink and toilet concepts are equally advanced.

The Bathtec concept is a dramatic leap in technology. It is an exceptionally intelligent advance in design over the current contraptions in use at the present time.

Dedication of art gallery is given to Furlong for his years of service

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Ray Hall will no longer be the home of a nameless art gallery. It will be the home of a gallery dedicated in honor of Dr. John Furlong, a man who has contributed many years of his life to the advancement of UW-Stout.

During the spring of 1963, Furlong was hired for the position of assistant to the president. During the spring of 1985, after 22 years of hard work, he retired from the position of assistant to the chancellor. In those 22 years of service he not only saw the changes of Stout take place but was instrumental in its development.

When Furlong came to Menomonie, there were approximately 1500 students at Stout. Art was offered as a minor and Furlong's first assignment was to start an art major at Stout. "Art was always very important, even to Senator Stout. He felt creativeness of art should be tied together with the technical and practical studies," Furlong said.

This assistant to the president served as chairperson of the art department for a year to set up the curriculum. This curriculum was approved by the state in 1964.

Furlong's next assignment was to find a person to chair the art department, "to have the ability to develop and have a departmant as high quality and well known as the the home economics and industrial education programs." After much traveling, searching and interviewing Furlong brought Dr. Orazio Fumagalli to Menomonie in order to build an art department second to none.

Visiting artists began to come to Stout, practical experiences for art students were provided and community workshops began. Starting the program was not easy. A building called the Old Farmers Store was the facility where art students began their studies. Funds were low so a kiln was built by the students in order to complete their works.

A building was needed for the art department. Furlong said; "We stressed the applied arts concept that takes the best of the fine arts and welds it together with the best of the technical fields." Staff and students worked together with achitects to build what is now the Applied Arts Building.

> Art introduced a totally new dimension to Stout.
> — Chuck Buelow
> Dir. of University Relations

According to Chuck Buelow, Director of University Relations, "Art introduced a totally new dimension to Stout. The guidance John Furlong provided in the formative years made this a different university. It is a beautiful blend of art and technology."

Furlong is thrilled to have the art gallery dedicated to him and his wife. They have provided much to students by way of their involvement at Stout and by their scholarship fund. Each year a student studying art is awarded a $500 scholarship through the Foundation office.

"We all have to take the responsibility to help those less fortunate than we are. Somebody helped me get an education and I feel I have the responsibility to help somebody else," Furlong said.

This man is very proud of the students and staff at Stout. "In my opinion we have some of the finest art staff anywhere who have made their mark with works of art," Furlong said. Staff members who teach here keep up with their own skills in order to better instruct their students.

Outside of the development of the art program, Furlong has been instrumental in the nurturing of a number of departments and programs on campus. He worked as the commencement chairperson during the 1960's when much change took place. He was the first alumni director and executive director of the Foundation Office.

Now that Furlong has retired from his position at Stout, he has taken on another duty which requires much time. He has been elected the Supreme Governor of the Loyal Order of Moose. This international organization has over one million members and homes orphans in Mooseheart, Ill.

Furlong considers this position quite an honor. He travels to lodges and conventions. During his talks he promotes the organization and puts in plugs for Stout whenever possible.

Over the years Furlong has been impressed with the abilities and talents of people. Thursday, Oct. 24 at 4:00 p.m. the art gallery in Ray Hall which exposes such talent will be dedicated to a dedicated man.

enlightenedness shared by the members of the audience. It was not uncommon to hear exhilerating words of praise from the listeners as Stern completed his original poems.

Stern's style of taking simple objects and creating them into complicated yet imaginable ones, leaves most with a feeling of effectiveness as well as culture. His reading voice emphasizes well every hidden message in his poems; every literary influence.

In an interview published in "American Poetry Review" in 1984, Stern offered a personal explanation for his voice. "Everything depends on your signature, your breath, your person. Maybe your rhythm. Your peculiarity, your uniqueness. Your crankiness. That thumb print of yours."

Gerald Stern is a very original man. The combination of his wit and his natural humanity and caring have provided him with his talent of poetry. Through his poetry he shares his anxieties and his frustrations as well as his humanity and caring. His poems are creative and well worth reading — not to mention well worth the price.

AVOID THE HIDDEN COSTS OF HOMECOMING

Save money. Learn the laws before homecoming. It's cheaper. Experience shows that it's the campus newcomer that gets in trouble. Mostly freshmen. Sometimes sophomores. Either they don't know the laws, or they decide to ignore them. Don't learn the hard way. All laws are strictly enforced at homecoming. Remember that. Have fun, but respect the rights of others. Know the following laws:

Open Container. Possesion of an open alcoholic drink outside a bar or restaurant is a violation.
Fine - $49.50.

Noise Ordinance. Noisy parties and loud music upset the neighbors.
First offense - $130.

Sale of Intoxicants. You can't sell beer or other intoxicating drinks without a license. Clever schemes to get around the law don't work either.
Fine - $130.

Disorderly Conduct. This charge covers a multitude of violations. Generally, if you are causing a public disturbance, including unlawful assembly, you may be arrested.
Fine - $273 or higher.

Criminal Damages to Property. Vandalism takes a heavy toll in physical property. Thoughtless action can result in a severe fine and jail term.

Littering. Fine - $49.50.

Spikers compete in Winona tournament

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's volleyball team completed a tough 10-team tournament at Winona, Minn. this past weekend. The team managed only one win throughout the weekend. The teams competing in this event, however, were not all Division III schools which meant the Blue Devils would really have their hands full — and they did.

In the first match against Gustavus Adolphus, the spikers lost in straight games 2-15 and 2-15. Stout Coach Lynda Lee commented, "We weren't warmed up for our first match due to travel delays so we played kind of lackadaisical — our spirit just wasn't there."

The second round pegged them against Southwest State in which they lost 6-15 and 8-15. Lee felt it was here that her team started playing more consistently and was beginning to warm up.

The Lady Devils then faced St. Mary's, a team they had beaten twice before, but this time failed to conquer despite their effort scoring 10-15 and 9-15. Lee remarked: "St. Mary's was really fired up, and although the teams were competitively the same, their enthusiasm carried them through. The loss was very disappointing due to our previous victory over them and we were counting on a win at that point."

The team then regrouped, and knowing they would have to produce a win in the next match to go on in the tournament, the Blue Devils played hard and won against the University of Minnesota-Morris scoring 12-15, 15-7, and 15-7. Lee said, "The team was playing better with their heads, and by working with student coach, Judy Nelson, some technique moves were improved to create some smart plays."

McCallister was the last team they faced in the tournament, and again the Stout Blue Devils lost 11-15 and 7-15. About this game, Lee commented, "They were a good team, and although we played good by moving and communicating well, they were able to put their hits down which was something we couldn't do."

Reflecting on their losses, Lee said: "Some of our losses weren't because of our mistakes. These were good schools and they had smart plays. Some teams just outplayed us." As far as strategy was involved, Lee added: "We were doing a lot of little things wrong that were costing us the matches. Specifically, we have to work on the block and try to adjust so more than one person is up on it. We also have to improve our court movement, coverage patterns, and most importantly, we've got to communicate at all times."

Some added complications came as a result of some injuries sustained earlier in the season by senior hitter Karen Mickelson, who played in and out due to complications from a previously sprained ankle. Also suffering from injury was junior setter/hitter Val DeVries, who played only half way around in the tournament due to a strained knee.

The team right now is placed seventh in the WWIAC Conference, and in order for them to compete in the conference tournament they will have to move up one more place to sixth. Lee said: "Right now we need extra motivation because the season is getting stagnant. The team doesn't yet have its sights set on the conference tournament because it's too far ahead. We have to concentrate right now at working to get there."

Lee stated that once her and her team get to the tournament she will have both some statistical and personal goals she would like to reach. "Once we get there I would particularly like to beat UW-Platteville and UW-River Falls. River Falls is an old rival and they are good, but their momentum swings sometimes gets them in trouble, and if we play good offensively we can get them there."

As for personal goals, Lee stated: "I would like for each one of my players to reach the goal of playing to their best ability. Not only will that make them extremely satisfied, but it should help the team come out pretty well."

Looking ahead to Friday's home match against Luther College and Saturday's tournament at St. Paul, Minn., Lee said: "Our team, when faced with important matches and against teams they know, can really produce. Right now we are doing well, and I want the players to believe in themselves and in me. The team is a good team in many aspects of the word, and that's not just skill-wise." Closing, Lee expressed, "Win or lose, the team has a program they can be proud of."

SPORTS BEAT

Sports Quote of the Week- "What did Duke and Georgia Tech and North Carolina drop basketball?" Digger Phelps, Notre Dame basketball coach, responding to Playboy magazine ranking the Fighting Irish number one in its preseason college poll.

Menomonie Man Makes Sports Illustrated- Rand Ziemke Rasmussen of Menomonie had a letter published in the Oct. 14 issue of Sports Illustrated.

Flying in the Face of Deford-Allow me to express my extreme displeasure at Frank Deford's Movietalk on American Flyers. It is not his critique of the movie itself that I object to, for that is a matter of taste. What I take issue with is his denigration of bicycling as a spectator sport. Statements like "Watching the other people ride is borrring" reflect a narrow-mindedness common to many sportswriters in this country. Perhaps Deford is not aware that bicycle racing is second in the world only to soccer as a spectator sport. I think you owe your cycling readers an apology.

Packers Move to Madison for Game- The Green Bay Packers and New York Jets will play an exhibition football game on Aug. 9, 1986 at the University of Wisconsin's Camp Randall Stadium.

The game will mark the first time the Packers have played an exhibition or regular season game in Wisconsin outside of Milwaukee or Green Bay.

Wisconsin Athletic Director Elroy Hirsh said the game will generate needed income for the school's athletic department. The two National Football League teams and the school will split the gate receipts.

Reach Out. Put the Touch on Someone-Clemson fullback George Smith evidently would rather phone than write. But according to the telephone companies, Smith would rather not pay his phone bills. He's been charged with attempting to avoid payment of 340 long distance calls totalling over $1,557.

Smith is facing misdemeanor charges that carry a maximum fine of $1,000 and up to one year in prison.

Stevens Point gridders top Stout, 17-14

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

Last Saturday in Stevens Point, the UW-Stout Blue Devil gridders let victory pass by as UW-Stevens Point was victorious in a WSUC game, 17-14. This was a big loss as Stout rushed for over 300 yards and held the ball three-quarters of the game.

The Blue Devils' quarterback, Glen Majzsak, was hurt on the sixth play of the game with an injured right shoulder. This prevented the offense from utilizing their passing attack as Majzsak continued to play in the game because back-up quarterback Rob Lindberg was still injured from the game against UW-Whitewater.

Head Coach Bob Kamish said, "The game was a disappointing loss. Unlike the Eau Claire game, which we lost 24-0, we were in this game all the way to the end."

The first score of the game was by the Blue Devils, a three-yard run by Kyle Gunderson. That was set up after Stout punted the ball and Point fumbled it on their own 19-yard line.

Stevens Point came back with a drive of their own. Late in the second quarter, quarterback Dave Geissler hit Jim Lindholm on a 68-yard pass to tie the score at 7-7.

The second half started with Stevens Point having the ball deep in their own territory at their 17-yard line. On the third play of their drive, Geissler tossed another big pass, this time to Mike Christman for 69 yards and Point's second touchdown of the game.

Stout was unable to come back on the next drive and Rob Teske punted the ball away. On Point's next possession Geissler took Point down to Stout's 22-yard line to set up a Kim Drake 38-yard field goal to increase the Pointers' lead to 17-7.

After the field goal Stout ran the ball 19 times, travelling from the Stevens Point 24-yard line down to the other end of the field for a Blue Devil touchdown. The drive was a combination of running by Chuck Carr, Ron Wise and Glen Majzsak.

The Stout defense stopped Geissler and the Point offense to set up Stout's second-last drive late in the last quarter of the game. The offense used the same running combination as before. Advancing down field in 18 plays, the Pointers stopped the Blue Devils on the 17-yard line on fourth down.

Stevens Point moved the ball from the Stout 17-yard line to their own 40 before they punted the ball down to the Stout 12-yard line.

Here the Blue Devils tried something new and different when Ron Wise moved from wide receiver to quarterback, but this was short lived as he completed two passes for just nine yards as the Devils came up short of a first down.

The offensive player of the week was Chuck Carr. Carr ran 32 times for 156 yards and returned three kicks for 48 yards. Coach Kamish said, "He did everything with great intensity." Kamish added, "Chuck played a super game."

The defensive player of the week was Doug Cwidak. Cwidak had five solo tackles, one assist, two broken-up passes and a saved touchdown. Assistant Coach Steve Terry said, "Doug played the game with a lot of hustle and guts."

The Blue Devils' next opponent is UW- Platteville at Nelson Field this Saturday for Stout's Homecoming game. Kamish said, "Platteville has a new defense that we haven't seen." He believes this game will be strong on defense by both Stout and Platteville.

When asked about the effects of the homecoming game Kamish commented, "There will be a lot more pressure on the players and I hope the pressure does not turn against them." Mark Horbinski, special teams player, said, "Everybody is getting all pumped up for this game."

Kamish also added that Rob Lindberg should be able to play this game and thinks Glen Majzsak's shoulder should allow him to play against Platteville.

Soccer Club defeats Eau Claire to win 3-team Chancellor's Cup

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

In an almost repeat performance of a previous game, UW-Stout soccer club defeated UW-Eau Claire in a penalty shoot-out to win the Chancellor's Cup last weekend.

The competition, which was to be played over two days, was completed late on Saturday afternoon. With only three teams competing (UW-LaCrosse failed to appear), the competition was concluded in one day.

The Blue Devils played against UW-River Falls in the morning. The Blue Devils scored a 7-2 victory over River Falls. Dan Nelson was outstanding in that game as he scored a hat trick of goals.

"He was looking to score one even before the game started," Stout Club President Dan Stoffregen said.

River Falls then had to play Eau Claire with the Blugolds achieving a convincing 7-0 victory. The game between the Blue Devils and the Blugolds was to be the decider for the winner of the competition.

The game kicked off very late in the afternoon. It was in the first 10 minutes of play that the Blue Devils scored. Nelson chipped the ball over the Blugolds' goalkeeper and it went in off the goalpost.

"I knew after that had happened that we were going to win," Stoffregen said. "That is just the way our games are with Eau Claire. They are usually so tight that it takes a bit of luck to decide which way the game will go."

Stout led 1-0 until halfway through the second half. A controversial penalty decision was made for an incident involving Jorg Skowranek. The referee penalized Skowranek for obstruction although, according to the Blue Devils, he was nowhere near the ball. The kick was taken however, and the score was evened up at 1-1.

The game was played very competitively, with both teams having a good deal of scoring opportunities. The Blue Devils played well in midfield with Steve Abrahamson and Eric Saggerstrom making good contributions. Tom Benson, playing in defense, was given the honor of most valuable player by Stoffregen.

"He played really well and was largely responsible for controlling the shutout of the Eau Claire offense. He is also always consistent in that position so I think he deserves some recognition," Stoffregen said.

After regulation time two 10-minute overtime periods were played as the score was tied at 1-1. There was no further score but the Blugolds put the Blue Devils under a lot of pressure with some well-struck shots and volleys on goal.

"The game was real exciting to watch," Stoffregen commented. "It could have gone either way and both teams put in a lot of effort and good plays."

The penalty shoot-out that followed was also a thrilling affair. After each team had taken five penalties they were still tied.

Another five from each were picked which meant all the players had a chance to shoot on the goal.

"The intensity was great," Stoffregen said. "It was also getting very dark so we were racing against time."

The Blue Devils were eventual winners and Stoffregen said that a lot of the credit should be given to Doug Hall, the Stout goalkeeper.

"Doug had played a tough game all around," Stoffregen added. "Along with making good saves throughout the game, his two penalty saves in the shoot-out were very crucial."

The Blue Devils have remained undefeated against the Blugolds this season. Two previous encounters resulted in ties and one of these was also decided on a penalty shoot-out. The Blue Devils won then too.

The Chancellor's Cup Tournament was started by Stout 11 years ago in honor of Chancellor Bob Swanson. Normally there are four teams that take part, including UW-LaCrosse and UW-Stevens Point. Stevens Point have been unable to field a team so far this year so River Falls took their place.

Stout soccer club has only two games remaining in the outdoor season. It plays today against River Falls at Galloway park. The last game is on Tuesday with Northwestern, again at Galloway. Following the close of the outdoor season the club will then be competing in an indoor league. Fixtures for this have yet to be finalized.

Ruggers capture conference title with 20-12 victory over La Crosse

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

A battling UW-Stout Rugby Club scored a 20-12 victory over UW-La Crosse to capture the conference championship last Saturday.

With about 150 people watching from the sidelines, the Blue Devils played with aggression to restrict the plays made by the La Crosse team. This was the last game of the conference and a win was important as well as going for a high point total.

"Three teams will be tied in first place if we win this one," player/coach Brian Debelak said before the game. "Then it will be decided on a total points score as to who is overall winner. It's very important that we get a decent score in this game and also to keep the La Crosse score down."

Unfortunately Debelak was unable to participate in the game. The previous week he had sustained a serious ligament injury in his left knee. After having surgery he is now on crutches with his leg in a brace and had to watch the game from the sidelines.

Another player missing from the Blue Devils' squad was Mike Krudwig. Krudwig, who usually plays at scrum half position and is a key member of the team, broke an ankle the week before. His place on the field was taken by George Stracey. Stracey proved to be a capable deputy for Krudwig.

"He was very nervous in the first half and made a lot of mistakes but he is doing a fine job now," Debelak said during the second half.

Interesting to note was the fact that all of La Crosse's points came from penalty kicks. This was a result of some careless defensive plays by the Blue Devils, giving away unnecessary offsides within 20 yards of their own touchline.

> Dan (Weber)...is a very strong player and someone that we can depend on to do his best in any game.
> — John Wangen Club President

In contrast the Blue Devils' 20 points were made from five tries. The most notable of these was one made by Dan Weber in the first half. Collecting the ball near his own halfway line, Weber weaved his way to the La Crosse touchline to score a well-earned try. Weber scored two other tries which was why his performance was seen to be the most outstanding.

Commenting on Weber's contribution, Club President John Wangen said, "He did really well for us today, but then again, he always does. Dan is a very strong player and is someone that we can depend on to do his best in any game."

Another notable performance was put in by second row man, Jeff Hayes. Hayes scored a tremendous try late in the second half.

"We had a penalty awarded near the La Crosse touchline," Hayes said. "We made the play and I think it was Stracey who handed me the ball. I just struck out for a touchdown."

Mark Miller was the other scorer for the Blue Devils with a try in the first half. Miller and Hayes, along with Weber, are also consistent players. Wangen said that the team was initially very strong and that it was always "the same guys who come through for us."

One player who didn't have a very successful afternoon was Jay Fraser. Fraser's task was to take all the kicks and he was very disappointed with his own efforts. Although it was a very bright, sunny day there was a fairly strong crosswind which hindered Fraser's attempted kicks.

Stout also fielded a B-team in a game that was played following the first one. They unfortunately went down 0-12 against a strong La Crosse B-team. Wangen expressed his pleasure, however, at the fact that the rugby club was able to field two teams.

"We have got a lot of interest in the game, especially as you can see by how many people have turned up to watch," Wangen said. "We have a lot of fun at practice although it is still intense. We had practiced very hard all week for this game as we really wanted to win it. I think we proved that in the match."

Wangen also felt that it was important for the team to have support from the students. "The need for good publicity is what boosts the club," he said, "and it also helps the players to feel they are in fact a college team."

The President of the Rugby Association was present at the game. After the match he was able to inform the Blue Devils that they had won the conference with an overall better points score. The rugby team will now travel to UW-Madison for a championship game on November 2.

The Armchair Quarterback

Hawkeye mania

Tom Roth

"How about those Hawkeyes?" Not only were the loyal black and gold supporters from Iowa talking about the Hawkeyes last-second victory over the nations number two team, Michigan, but the suspenseful game was the topic of sports fans around the country last weekend.

The two Big Ten rivials kept the 66,000 plus record crowd intact, the ones who could still stand-up of course, for the whole game. At the same time millions of viewers stayed glued to their seats next to their television sets for the national televised match-up between the nations top two teams.

Michigan's well-known coach Bo Schembechler just walked off the field shaking his head after transfer kicker Rob Houghtlin booted the game winning and fourth field goal of the day through the uprights for what Iowa coach Hayden Fry called the Hawkeyes "biggest victory."

After Houghtlin's game winning kick, Hawk mania exploded onto the field as thousands of fans surronded their Hawkeye gods that they worship for 11 weeks every fall more faithfully than the harvesting of fall crops. While the aggresive Iowa fans stormed the field cheering for their team and dismantling the goalpost, the remaining fans in the stands stood and cheered for almost a half an hour after the game was completed.

The only fans to sneek out of the stadium immediately after the game were the few hundred Michigan fans sandwiched in between the thousands of Hawkeye fans displaying Iowa paraphernalia all over their bodies.

Hawkeye fans left no doubts in the ears of Wolverine players that they can make just as much noise, if not more than their own 100,000 plus fans in Ann Arbor. Several times the Wolverines quarterback stepped away from the line of scrimmage because his teammates could not hear his signals, which only prompted the boisturous Iowa fans to yell even louder. One time Schembechler became so furious at the Iowa fans and referees that he threw his headphones hard to the artificial carpet and stormed onto the field.

After the diehard Hawkeye fans had finally filed out of the stadium the tailgate parties continued right where they had left off before the game. Due to the drizzling rain the tailgaters were forced to celebrate in a parking garage across from the stadium. The garage was literally shaking and charcoal smoke filled the garage from top to bottom.

Iowa's footballers have proven they're the number one team in the country up to this point and their fans are doing just as well by showing everyone they are the number one fans across the nation as Hawkeye mania is alive and well!

Quarterback's Picks

UW-Platteville at Stout-The Blue Devils suffered a tough defeat last week and Platteville is coming off a 33-0 victory over UW-Superior, but if the Devils can find a healthy quarterback for the game, the Devils should be able to pull out a close homecoming victory. Stout by 3

Green Bay at Indianapolis-If the Packers don't win this one, they should hang-up the pads for 1985. Packers by 13.

Minnesota at Chicago-The Vikings will be looking for revenge after their earlier loss to the Bears this season, but the Bears have proven this season that they are just unbeatable. Bears by 10.

Wisconsin at Illinois-After a Badger loss to the lowly Wildcats of Northwestern last week, I've lost all my faith in the Badgers. Illinois should keep the Badgers in their dizzy spin. Illinois by 18.

Ohio State at Minnesota-This will definitely be the Gophers biggest game of the year and they will have to control the Buckeyes All-American tailback Keith Byars to keep Ohio State from running away with the game. If the Gophers can open-up their offensive attack more and control the Buckeyes powerful offense, the game should be a dome-burner. Gophers by 2.

Southern Cal at Notre Dame- I think this is the game that will sink the Irish ship and Gerry Faust will no longer be with Norte Dame after this season. Southern Cal by 9.

Texas at SMU-Another great SWC battle and the Longhorns should pull another close game out if their offense is productive. Texas by 6.

Princeton at Harvard-Oh my, what an Ivy League battle this one should be. I'll go with the more intelligent school. Harvard by 4.

HERE'S THE SITUATION: Mark Reichenbach, 6'3", sandy brown hair, hazel eyes; your basic All American boy is getting married. He's 23 years old, and a recent graduate of the University of La Crosse. He studied physical education and is currently working in the Twin Cities as an assistant at a local health club. This week-end is his bachelor party. A bachelor party is a time for reflection and contemplation. Ironically, it is also a time to get plastered and go crazy. Now, his fiance, Sharon, is fantastic and she will undoubtably make his life very happy. But, marriage is a big step. The time for interaction is now!

HERE'S THE QUESTION: Is there a young lady out there processing a dominating, charasmatic personality, who is unrestricted by contemporary social norms, who could interact with Mark (be it on a purely platonic level, or otherwise) so that he might wake-up and die right? If so call the P.I.G. House at 235-5096 and try to get your message thru to him. He'll be arriving on Friday evening and be here until Sunday. Please remember: THE TIME FOR INTERACTION IS NOW!

Runners reach personal records; prepare for two remaining meets

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

Two important meets remain for both the UW-Stout men's and women's cross country teams, conference and NAIA Nationals. Conference will be held at UW-Whitewater on Nov. 2 and NAIA Nationals at UW-Parkside on Nov. 16

Based on Saturday's performance at the La Crosse Invitational, Head Coach Lou Klitzke was pleased with the fourth and fifth runners from each team. Freshman Leslie Drall, running at the fifth position for the women, ran a personal record taking off 40 seconds from her old time while Mike Bennett moved from his consistent fifth spot to fourth. Bennett also ran a personal record by shaving nearly a minute from his old time. Both runners were voted runners of the week for their performances.

'The La Crosse course is very difficult and personal records set at this course show a considerable improvement.'
Lou Klitzke
Head Coach

Team Captain Sheila Geere also ran a personal record as well as Karen Schubert. Geere ran seven seconds faster and Schubert a minute. Klitzke said no one ran poorly of the entire women's team. "The La Crosse course is very difficult and personal records set at this course show a considerable improvement," Klitzke said.

Contrasting this course with the conference course at Whitewater, Klitzke said times should come down roughly 25 seconds as the conference course is not as difficult and hilly.

North Dakota State won the women's division followed by UW-Eau Claire and South Dakota was third. Stout finished 11th out of the 13 schools competing.

Geere led the way for the women finishing 29th. Geere, finishing off her cross country career this season, has never run a personal record on the La Crosse course and was satisfied with her time (19:07) as she hopes to break 19 minutes at conference.

Sue Meyer was second for Stout and ran a fair race by finishing 42nd overall. Right behind Meyer was Ann Meyer at 47, Liz Lund at 71, Drall at 124, Schubert at 130 and Klokow at 134.

In the men's division, considerable improvement was seen by Junior Eric Bretl. Bretl finished first for Stout at 60th. "Bretl also ran a personal record and it shows he is coming around," Klitzke said.

Senior Captain Matt Christenson was nursing an injury this week and had an off day. Christenson finished second for Stout and 82nd overall.

Sophomore Bob Hackley, back in competition from his ankle injury, finished at 104, followed by Bennett at 134, Ben Haney at 139, Todd Zuerlein at 141, Dave Polshinski at 178 and Tim Stordahl at 180.

St. Thomas won the meet followed by Club Sota out of Minneapolis and third was La Crosse. Stout finished 13th of the 16 schools competing.

Both teams have two weeks to train before conference. Klitzke has planned three hard workouts and the other days as activated rest. "These [activated rest] workouts include lots of stretching, low mileage and encouragement to eat sensibly and get enough rest."

Klitzke feels the men's team especially needs rest. According to Klitzke the men actually need more rest because their race is longer than that of the women's and they also need to pull back more.

Looking ahead to the conference meet, both teams are aware that their performance and placing also decides if they compete in NAIA Nationals.

UW-Milwaukee and UW-River Falls will be the teams to beat for the men. "On a good day the men can beat River Falls and our times are comparable to Milwaukee's," Klitzke said.

The women's division will be tough. The top four teams advance. La Crosse and Milwaukee along with Stout will be competing for the fourth spot. Times are fast and the women are looking for their best times at conference.

At the NAIA District 14 Tennis Championship held last weekend at Stout, the UW-Stout women's tennis team finished in a disappointing tie for fourth place.

Analysis

In singles play the women faced a field of good tennis players. Mary Malloy, seeded number one on the Stout team, breezed through her first match against the number four player from UW-Oshkosh, 6-1, 6-2, but then was defeated by the District 14's eventual singles champion, 2-6, 2-6.

Seeded number two for Stout was Lynn Papenfuss, who played an excellent match against the number two La Crosse player beating her 2-6, 6-3, 6-4. "I was a little nervous going into the match because I've played her three times before, and she had won two out of our three meetings," Papenfuss said. "But Coach Smith gave me a pep talk and told me I could beat this girl." Unfortunately, Papenfuss could not carry this confidence through to the next opponent she faced. She lost her next round 5-7, 1-6.

"They did the best they could do. The girls who beat them played well."

Bob Smith
Head Coach

Kelly Wickman, seeded number five on the Stout team, also played well in her first match, crunching the number four player from UW-Milwaukee, 6-2, 1-6, 6-2. In her next round of play she fell too, this time to the number six player from UW-Eau Claire, 0-6, 1-6.

In doubles play the Lady Devils could not hardly muster up a win. The number one doubles team of Malloy and Papenfuss lost to the number one doubles team from Oshkosh, 2-6, 4-6. This was especially disappointing because earlier in the season they had beaten the same team.

Jean Feyen and Mary Pokwinski made up the number two doubles team for Stout, and captured a first round win defeating their opponents, the number two doubles team from Oshkosh, 6-2, 6-3. This victory was short-lived, for they were defeated mercilessly by the number two team from La Crosse, 1-6, 0-6.

Also, Kris Anderson and Karen Blau, representing Stout in the number three doubles position, simply were outpowered by the number one La Crosse pairing in straight sets, 1-6, 1-6.

Coach Smith commented, "They did the best they could do. The girls who beat them played well."

The last challenge for the Stout women netters is this weekend where they will compete for the conference championships. "We should do OK," Smith said, "I'll be happy if we can place in the top four."

Stout's Oertel wins regional title; advances to Florida net tourney

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Rob Oertel, a member of the UW-Stout men's tennis program, won the First Annual Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association Rolex Midwestern Small College Regional Championship held at Gustavus Adolphus College the weekend of Oct. 11-13.

Feature

The tournament consisted of NCAA Division II and III singles players.

Oertel, a junior Business Administration student at Stout, was seeded number one going into the tournament. It was asked if this high ranking before the tournament hindered his play. "It didn't bother me," Oertel said, "I felt confident I could win because I had beaten the number two seed two weeks earlier."

He had no trouble advancing to the second and third rounds of play, but in the fourth round he did run into a slight obstacle named handed, which tends to give some right-handers problems because all of their shots spin the opposite of right-handers. It took Oertel two sets to figure out his shots, but it only took him one set to finally put Arvold away. Oertel beat Arvold 6-3, 5-7, 6-1.

He advanced to the finals and faced second-seeded Kruger, and experienced little trouble in defeating the Gustavus ace to capture the championship.

Oertel now advances to the 1985 Rolex Small College Championship hosted at the Sanibel Harbour Resort in Fort Meyers, Florida. If he wins this one, he will gain an automatic berth in the Rolex National Indoor Intercollegiates in Houston, Texas.

Presently he trains with the other members of the men's Stout tennis program, and also volleys with Stout men's and women's tennis coach, Bob Smith. Oertel speaks highly of Smith and said: "He knows how to motivate people. He could take any program here and make it a winner, just because he's a good coach."

Was winning this tournament the highlight of Oertel's collegiate tennis career? "Winning conference was," Oertel said, "but if I'd win in Florida it could be the highlight."

Survey reveals opinions of teachers

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

Over one-third of the men and women who stand in front of you every day, jotting notes on blackboards and lecturing from course materials, want to be somewhere else five years from now.

This figure was reported in the Oct. 15 edition of the Wisconsin State Journal. The newspaper was referring to a study of the quality of undergraduate education, soon to be published by Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

The foundation surveyed 5,000 teachers last year. A few of the resulting statistics are:

- 38 percent are thinking of leaving the teaching profession within five years.
- 21 percent wouldn't choose teaching if they could start over.
- 52 percent would consider another academic job.
- 40 percent said morale in their departments was worse than five years ago.
- One-third believe abolishing tenure would improve higher education.
- Two-thirds said it is harder to get tenure than it was five years ago.
- 75 percent feel their pay hasn't kept pace with inflation.
- 60 percent believe their salaries are fair or poor.

Boyer said the survey shows faculty members are concerned about job security, salaries, student quality and the conflicting demands of research, teaching, administrative duties and advising students.

How about at UW-Stout? Dr. John Entorf, Associate Dean of the School of Industry and Technology, said that in 10 years, 50 percent of Stout's Industry and Technology teachers will be replaced. "Not because they're unhappy with teaching, but because they will be 65 or older and ready to retire," Entorf explained. "The newspaper article doesn't say how old the teachers are who were surveyed. I would think that would have an influence on whether or not they are going to leave the profession."

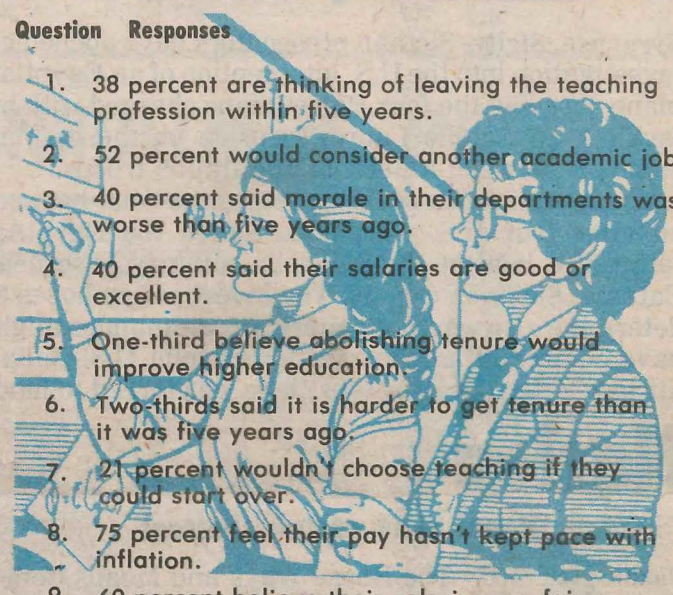
"I think the 38 percent figure is probably correct, but what about other professions" Entorf continued. "I think often when people get out of school and into professions, they find it isn't what they thought it would be, and decide to look for something else. I don't think this is unusual. I would be interested in seeing this survey done with other professionals, not just teachers. I would venture to say that the results would be similar."

Referring to job dissatisfaction and low morale, Dean Gerane Dougherty said, "We don't find that in the School of Liberal Studies." The Wisconsin State Journal article quoted the American Association of University Professors as saying average 1984-1985 salaries were: $39,870 for a full professor, $29,910 for an associate professor, $24,610 for an assistant professor, $22,020 for lecturers and $19,150 for instructors.

When told of these figures, Dr. Dougherty said, "We don't make that here at Stout, but in every job there are things to work on. I still don't feel there is the type of unhappiness described in the survey. There are things not explained in the article, such as the age of the teachers and what they are teaching."

Dr. J. Anthony Samenfink, Dean of the School of Home Economics, agreed with his colleagues. "I think when reading this article we have to remember that we are an instantaneous society. Things are based on rapidity and speed. We feel that the next thing is going to be better. We are always hearing about change being a good thing, so I don't think it is a particularly dramatic remark that 38 percent of teachers or of anyone else plan to leave their profession in five years."

ARE INSTRUCTORS HAPPY WITH THEIR TEACHING JOBS?



Question Responses

1. 38 percent are thinking of leaving the teaching profession within five years.
2. 52 percent would consider another academic job.
3. 40 percent said morale in their departments was worse than five years ago.
4. 40 percent said their salaries are good or excellent.
5. One-third believe abolishing tenure would improve higher education.
6. Two-thirds said it is harder to get tenure than it was five years ago.
7. 21 percent wouldn't choose teaching if they could start over.
8. 75 percent feel their pay hasn't kept pace with inflation.
9. 60 percent believe their salaries are fair or poor.

FRYKLUND FIRE —

Shortly before noon on Tuesday workmen, who were using an oxyacetylene cutting torch to remove pipes during the course of performing renovation work in Fryklund Hall, produced sparks which ignited paper products.

The Menomonie Fire Department, which responded to the scene in minutes, had the fire under control in a very short amount of time.

No serious injuries resulted from the mishap.

Priceless French art stolen

Paris, France- At least five men brandishing revolvers invaded the Marmottan Museum, forced guards and visitors to lie on the floor and in five minutes stripped the walls of nine paintings on Sunday, Oct. 27.

Curator Yves Brayer called it "the theft of the century" as the stolen works of art carry a value of about $12.5 million. Among the stolen pieces was Monet's "Impression Sunrise" which has no price because of its historic value.

Italians investigate U.S. actions

Syracuse, Sicily- Sicilian prosecutors have opened an investigation into the U.S. interception of an Egyptian plane carrying the four Palestinians charged with hijacking the Achille Lauro, focusing on the ensuing stand off between American and Italian troops.

The investigation seeks to determine what happened after four U.S. warplanes forced the EgyptAir jetliner to land at the Sigonella military base near Catania, Sicily on Oct. 10. The investigation hopes to determine also whether American commandos might have committed any crimes at the joint U.S.-Italian air base after the Egyptian plane was forced to land.

Panel aims at tax shelters

Washington D.C.- The House Ways and Means Committee wrapped up a "make or break" tax revision over the weekend. House leaders have tentatively scheduled floor consideration of the tax bill for the first week in December.

The committee approved rules designed to eliminate the establishment of trusts to evade taxes. The panel voted to tax the income from trusts at the tax rate of the grantor of the trust. Also tightened were loopholes that allow a parent to transfer assests to minor children and have the income taxed at a lower rate.

Japan buyer when U.S. sells oil

Washington D.C.- Japan is expected to be one of the buyers when the U.S. becomes an oil exporter, probably next year, a Commerce spokesperson said.

President Reagan is expected to seek Commerce Department approval to export Alaskan crude oil from the Cook inlet area. The amount would be only 6,000 barrels per day, generating approximately $61 million in annual revenue.

Insurance balks at wood stoves

Madison- Two major insurers of homes in Wisconsin have begun what they call "moratoriums" on the writing of new house insurance policies if customers have wood burning stoves. Other companies are placing surcharges on such policies, or writing them only after inspections of the homes and the wood burning units.

Action by the companies stems from rising risk claims and what the industry sees as a high rate of risk on homes with wood burners. In 1984 2,799 residential fires were attributed to wood-fuel heating.

Perspective

Intimate awareness

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

The sexual revolution initiated by the 1967 introduction of the birth control pill is experiencing a self-imposed setback on college campuses over fears of contracting acquired immune deficiency disease (AIDS). This newest form of sexually transmitted disease (STD) is also making students more aware of the better-known afflictions such as syphilis, gonorrhea, herpes and chlamydia through educational programs which are springing up on the nation's college campuses.

Some universities are implementing bold approaches to educate students on ways to decrease the chance of contracting a STD. Tulane University has produced a film titled "Condom Sense" which explains the protection that prophylactics offer. The University of California has atttempted to achieve the same results with a "Condom Awareness Day."

The University of California at Berkeley, which has the second highest incidence of AIDS in the state, has experienced the loss of two students and a staff member by what has now been decreed the top priority health concern on campus. Informational pamphlets, lectures, discussions, counseling groups and an ad campaign are all components of a $60,000 Berkeley AIDS program being funded by the University and the State Department of Health.

But the loss of a professor at Columbia University, and three staff members and two students at New York University have produced slower responses by these eastern academic institutions. The appointment of advisory committees has been the only official response thus far.

The Gay/Lesbian Cooperative at Yale University publishes pamphlets which divide sexual relations into three distinct categories: safe (dry kissing, hugging, body massage), possibly safe (intercourse with condoms) and unsafe (intercourse without condoms).

The American College Health Association (ACHA) has announced that AIDS constitutes a "major concern on college campuses."

An anonymous female graduate student at Columbia University, quoted in the Oct. 28, 1985 issue of Newsweek magazine, echoed the concerns of many. "Three years ago it was herpes. These days it's AIDS, because it kills. My doctor told me: it's no longer a question of just you yourself. It's now a question of the commitment of the person with whom you're involved. If he switch-hits, or if he ever has in the last three or four years, it could be a real problem."

Although college has typically been the time when students become more aware of their individual sexuality, it is increasingly also the time when they are made aware of the possible consequences.

Controversial assault comes to a close

Rich Langberg
News Editor

In the latest and possibly final development in the alleged rape case involving three former UW-Stout undergraduates, the three pleaded no contest to reduced charges of fourth degree sexual assault. They each received stayed sentences of six months in jail. The three were then ordered to spend 30 days in the Dunn County jail and placed on two years probation.

The case against the three, Gino Collins, 18, of Burlington, Wis., Dennis Green, 19 of Peoria, Ill., and Joseph Woods, 19, of Minneapolis, never reached the full trial when the victim decided not to press on with the case.

Dunn County District Attorney Mike Furnstahl said the victim, who voluntarily withdrew from Stout Friday, Oct. 18, said she wasn't willing to continue on with the trial.

"She said she just wanted to get on with her life," said Furnstahl. "She didn't want to testify."

Green's attorney, William Schembera, asked the court two weeks ago to have the results of polygraph tests taken by Green and the victim to be allowed as evidence in the trial. The results showed that Green was telling the truth when he said that the victim removed her clothing at her own desire.

"We discussed the merits of the case," Furnstahl said. "I can't say what she said about that. I think it is too bad that the media played up the polygraph test results. The most pertinent issues weren't even tested."

When asked if he was surprised with the results of the trial, Schembera said, "No, all the attorneys helped negotiate the plea bargain. We wanted to help resolve the matter short of the trial."

Schembera said, "it was a possibility" that the victim figured her chances of winning the case were slipping away due to the recent developments in the case. "Given the alternatives, I'm pleased with the decision."

The case has raised a lot of interest at Stout since it happened almost two months ago. On Sept. 6, the three allegedly raped the co-ed in Milnes Hall. She was found by other residents crying in the hallway. They were arrested and charged with first degree sexual assault and false imprisonment.

Although the three will be out of jail by the end of November, they cannot be readmitted to Stout for two years. According to Dean of Students Samuel Wood, the three signed a suspension agreement saying they will not re-enter for two years.

"The action of the University was independent of the court," said Wood. "That is always the case, we try and keep the two jurisdictions separate."

According to the UW-Stout Student Handbook chapter 17, suspension means a temporary loss of student status for a specified period of time, with resultant loss of all student rights and privileges. The students can petition for readmittance, but not before the expiration of one-half of their suspension period.

Ex-Menomonie officer to protest termination

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

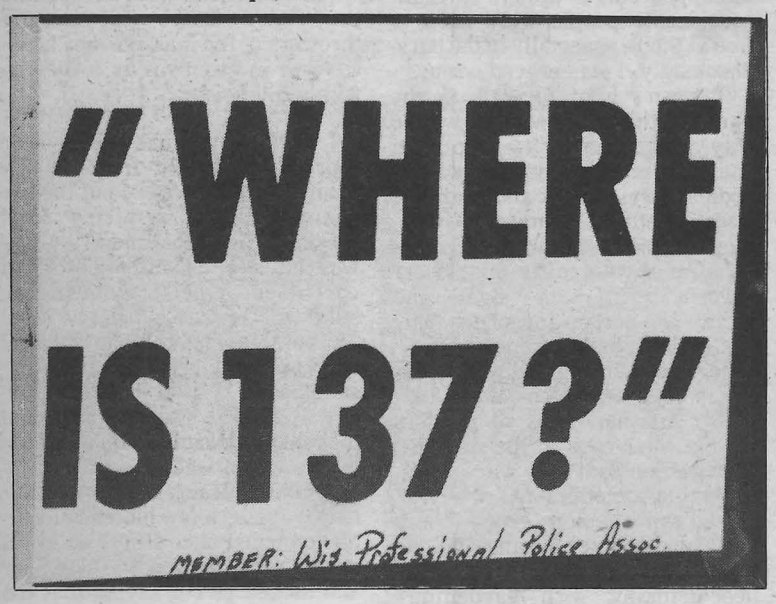
A former Menomonie police officer announced at a news conference held in Eau Claire today that he is taking the precedent setting action of filing charges against Menomonie Chief of Police Dennis Beety and six lieutenants.

The charges being filed with the Menomonie Police and Fire Commission stem from Samuel D. Hansen's belief that he was fired without cause just two weeks before the end of a one-year probationary period.

According to Law Enforcement Employee Relations Administrator John Burpo, Hansen will rely on his rights in this case to take action as the aggrieved person looking for answers as to why he was fired last August in the eleventh month of his year long training period without being given any previous indication that his job was in danger.

Since Hansen has filed the charges against the six lieutenants who are subordinates and Police Chief Dennis Beety is included in those charges, Hansen believes he's operating within his rights in filing the charges.

To date, the city has taken the stand that no explanation about the firing need be made because Hansen was a probationary officer. In a letter to Burpo, City Attorney Ken Schofield respectfully declined his request that the Police and Fire Commission review the matter. Schofield wrote that "Mr. Hansen has no constitutional or statutory right to a statement of specifications and/or a hearing before the Police and Fire Commission on the City's decision not to retain Mr. Hansen."



HE'S STILL IN MENOMONIE—
Former Menomonie police officer No. 137 Sam Hansen is filing a grievance to try and get justice for what he feels was an unfair dismissal from the police force. (Stoutonia photo by Eileen O'Neil)

Burpo was angered by this response from the City Attorney since he had asked the Police Commission to review Hansen's case despite the fact he was a probationary employee. He wrote in his request to the commission that "his status as a probationer, however, does not preclude the commission from reviewing his termination."

Burpo also included the observation that "Officer Hansen's performance evaluations indicate in all respects a satisfactory performance. It is highly irregular that he was terminated when no deficiencies were reflected in his evaluations."

Hansen said in an interview Wednesday night what he hopes to achieve from filing the charges against Chief Beety and Lieutenants David Glampe, William Hein, Christopher Langlois, Ron Mickelson, Ed Rhodes and Paul Tennyson. "The goal behind the charges is to expose the truth," he said.

Hansen also wanted to stress that "This police department, emphasizing patrolmen, they are a fine bunch of patrolmen, they're dedicated to the job and honest."

Burpo said that many questions arise from the series of events that occurred prior to Hansen's dismissal. "Hansen had two perfect evaluations and he got the last one in mid July. August third he had a conflict with a Lieutenant about overtime pay he wanted. These guys got their noses out of joint over the fact that he dared to ask for overtime."

Hansen said that 12 days later Chief Beety called him into his office and in the presence of the six lieutenants showed him a series of negative performance reviews by them and told him he was fired.

Hansen called these performance reviews "obvious fabrications" as he said they focused on what he called "insignificant problems which could be easily corrected." He said these performance reviews focused on the fact that he took too long to fill out his reports and spent too much time in the police station. Hanson also remarked on the fact that all the reports were identical.

The question Burpo wants answered is "Why go eleven months training someone and not say anything about any problems, August third the overtime issue comes up and on the 15th he's fired?"

City Attorney Schofield has declined to comment on any of these charges on behalf of the police. He has accused Hansen of trying this issue through the media.

Hall governments lack elements of democracy

The approximately 40 percent of Stout students who reside in the residence halls, even though they have much in common in the types of hall activities in which they can participate, are in many ways light years apart in the fairness of representation they receive via their respective hall councils.

Some hall councils correctly observe Robert's Rules of Order when elected hall representatives assemble to conduct official business and only allow floor representatives the right to vote. Yet many hall councils, through an examination of their hall constitutions, have inconsistent guidelines which result in improper input by executive board members.

We do not believe that hall council executive board members should be allowed to move, second and/or vote on main motions or any other business which requires the consent of the majority. Only floor representatives, who have the ultimate responsibility to voice the concerns of their constituents, should determine the direction their hall should take on all issues.

In addition, appointed IRHA committee representatives should also be barred from voting, because the executive board which appoints individuals to occupy these positions could conceivably fill the positions with enough like-minded people that the votes of the floor representatives would be rendered useless, thereby giving the residents of the hall no voice in issues which affect them.

We believe that the Stout Student Association's (SSA) constitution committee should review all residence hall constitutions and require them to make the necessary changes which all SSA recognized organizations must adhere to. This will insure that a degree of fairness and consistency will prevail in hall government.

We also urge hall council floor representatives to obtain copies of their hall's constitution and institute amendments, if necessary, to insure that they in fact do have control over their own destinies.

We believe that hall councils' image will improve among it's constituents only if the representatives have the internal fortitude necessary to put their own house in order.

Otherwise, these legislative bodies may continue to be viewed as mockeries of a democratic system they have long abused.

Crash and Burn

I became a Stoutistic

Matt Kalina

Last week I predicted that 74 people, including 37 Stout students would be arrested during the Homecoming Weekend. According to preliminary figures, my predictions almost hit the bullseye. Approximately 73 people were actually arrested, including approximately 28 Stout students for such offenses as disorderly conduct, open container and other various offenses.

I find my guesses to be surprisingly accurate. But the biggest surprise of them all is that I became one of those Stoutistics during Homecoming. I will unload all of the intimate details of my story upon you, the maxi-informed reader, in a few weeks after my court date.

Until then, no leaks from this guy.

Generally Homecoming 1985 was just as zany as past years. Friday started slow but excitement built as the festive hours ticked away. Life for me started in The Spot on Friday where only cans of beer were available. I didn't mind because first, I like drinking out of aluminum cans because it's a full 12 ounces and secondly, it's more difficult to spill brew out of a can than a flimsy plastic cup. Well so I thought.

Moments after flashing a greenback for the thirst-quenching ale, a stranger accidently convulsed and knocked my can out of my right hand, and half of it emptied onto the floor. Before I had a chance to beller at the guy who did it, he pulled from his back pocket a crumpled dollar bill and quickly handed it to me, and without a word he dissappeared. I always thought considerate people were hard to find at Stout, especially in the bars. Shockingly, I was proved wrong.

It wasn't hard to walk in the bars, all that was required was to stay awake and try to keep from slumping on the floor. The wall of bodies swaying back and forth like a sea eventually dumped its swimmers in their desired destination.

Onward I went to The Spot's beer garden to enjoy the sights and sounds of a party atmosphere. Why is it called a beer garden anyway? Sure doesn't look like anything exotic was growing out there that night. Are hundred's of partiers tossing their cans in the so-called beer garden as if they were seeds, expecting something to sprout up? Or did some famous green thumb beer distributor dream up the bogus phrase to connect subtly beer-drinking with gardening? Menomonie may never know.

The I.D. checkers remained stern and strict throughout the weekend. In the Meet Market I was checked at the door and five minutes later, because someone didn't believe me, I was asked to show my driver's license again. I heard someone say in jest that a bar carded an 80-year-old man last weekend.

Things were really kicking at The Pub. It was not overly crowded, but the people flowed in and out as fast as the beer Friday night. It was hard to believe but, two guys were rolling five giant-sized dice out of a monster white bucket onto the Pub's floor. One of the throwers of the massive dice howled with amusement as he let go with a full house.

I accidently broke my favorite pair of shades in front of The Flame. I bummed as I put the two snapped pieces into my front jacket pocket. What made it worse was that later as I attempted a half cart-wheel type body-launching stunt off of one of the wooden "Keep Menomonie Clean!" bins I lost one of the broken parts of my sunglasses. After bar-time Friday I jumped into the back of a pick-up truck loaded with about ten others on a search and reconnaissance mission for parties. We only traveled a few blocks before a Menomonie Police officer pulled us over after talking with the driver and kicked us out saying that the driver didn't want us in the back of the truck.

I can detect that I had a good time the night before if I wake up and discover a scratch or bruise on myself from jumping around and partying to extremes.

For me good humour prevailed over Homecoming weekend. I know it did. As I awoke late Sunday morning I found two scratches on my back.

Alumni Association offers many services to all Stout graduates

Homecoming-"The return of a group of people especially on a special occasion to a place formerly frequented or regarded as home."

Each year the Alumni Association invites its graduates back to campus for the Homecoming Weekend. Special activities and reunions are part of the planned weekend of festivities.

Guest

This past weekend alumni, friends and spouses returned for the reunions fo five classes: 1945, '55, '60, '65 and '70. Graduates from the classes traveled from all parts of the United States to join classmates in Menomonie for the purpose of reacquainting themselves, reminiscing and learning what UW-Stout has accomplished these past years. For many of the alumni who attended the reunion, it was their first visit to campus since their graduation.

The five classes who were honored this past weekend had their own reunion dinners and programs on Friday evening and were part of the Saturday evening banquet and dance. Conferences were scheduled to coincide with the Homecoming weekend. The Vocational Rehabilitation Institute sponsored a conference on Thursday and Friday. Usually the Industrial Art Conference is held on the same weekend; however, this year there was a conflict with the Wisconsin Education Association Convention in Milwaukee. The Industrial Arts Conference was held on campus Oct. 4.

An alumni fun run for wheelers and runners, sorority and fraternity breakfast reunion, the parade and football game have been traditional activities. This year the celebration of the opening of the John Furlong Art Gallery in Ray Hall was an added attraction along with the graduate school program's acknowledgement of the 50 years of graduate programs at the University. A wearable art show at the Mabel Tainter Theater by Betty Micheels, wife of the former Chancellor, and tours of the theater and the Wilson House were added attractions. One of the highlights of this year's Homecoming was the alumni kick-off meeting of the Toward Century II capital campaign.

Over 100 alumni volunteers were on campus for the kick-off Saturday morning. The volunteers who will be contacting all their classmates have already pledged over $300,000, completing the base goal of their division. Once the remaining 24,000 alumni have been contacted by letter, it is hoped that the challenge goal will be doubled.

The alumni division is one of six divisions in the capital campaign: the Foundation, faculty/staff, Menomonie, Minneapolis-St. Paul and the friends of the University comprise the other areas. All of the campaigns play a major role in the future of the University's program.

As Chancellor Swanson has noted, "UW-Stout is not so much now at a crossroad in its developmnet as at a springboard. We are heavily dependent on keeping abreast of rapidly changing technology. By aggressively seeking to develop and use that technology, we can soar to new heights providing the service to society and the nation that James Stout envisioned."

The Homecoming banquet Saturday evening was a time to honor the UW-Stout's reunion classes and outstanding alumni. Dr. Joan Herwig, '65, and Warren E. Phillips, '50, were named distinguished alumni for leadership in their profession, community and the University. The Stout Service Award was presented to the family of Leeland M. Score, former Chamber of Commerce executive director, for his work with the community and the University. The outstanding young alumni recognized for their professional abilities were James Giencke, '74,

Homecoming skits

After serving as a judge for the Homecoming Talent Night skit competition, I would like to applaud all of the organizations who took part. It was clear that a great deal of time, effort and creativity went into each of the skits. Despite a long evening of 17 skits, there was just as much enthusiasm and organization "spirit" for the last skits as there was for the first ones. Congratulations to all.

SSA helps pass bill

On Thursday, Oct. 10, a bill granting student participation on the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents passed through the Senate, allowing the bill to be forwarded to Governor Earl for his signature.

For 12 years, students from across the state have been fighting for this legislation. We're proud that the battle has been won and would like to thank JoAnn Prange and the entire Stout Student Association for their help on this legislation. Without their time and energy, this bill would not have come about.

Also aiding our cause were your local legislators, Richard Shoemaker, Steve Brist and Senator James Harsdorf that voted for AB-53. We thank them and the SSA for their support.

Artwork unfairly reviewed

Please excuse the lateness of this response, but I just received a copy of the Oct. 10 arts review column from Stout's Art Gallery Director. It was the recently hung 20-year Commemorative Art Department Alumni Exhibition, that was the focus of the Oct. 10 review.

I was one of the exhibiting artists in the show, and frankly, I couldn't tell from the article whether the arts editor actually supported my work or merely chose to make it the brunt of every joke made throughout the article.

I wished that the arts editor would have spent less time heckling my one piece of an animal head and instead make some mention of the consistantly excellent work executed by other artists in the show, such as Jane Abrams, Stan Myer and Sandy Roecker.

The "more radical statements" in this recent alumni show might have been the first to catch a viewer's eye, but those pieces, including mine, were not the best stuff in that show.

CAMPUS SLANT/ How can homecoming be improved for next year?

Alice Baracani,
Sophomore,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

It was good because the people were a lot of fun. The bars let the people do a lot of things that they were not supposed to do. It was overcrowded. [A campus block party] sounds like a good idea. It would be fun. I would like to see a band, beer, of course, and a place where people could party.

Robin Yazbec,
Junior,
Early Childhood Education

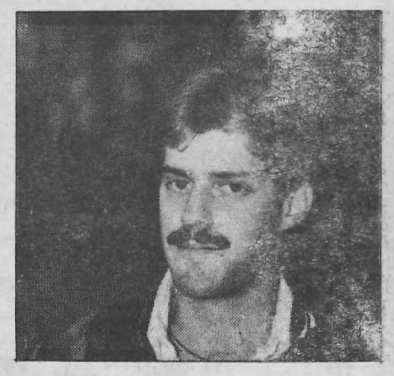
I just didn't like it because it was so crowded. I went to The Spot for one night and it was just crowded. I really didn't get out that much because I'm an R.A., but the overcrowdedness was unreal. I think we need another bar desperately. I think a block party sounds like a good idea. It could have security so it could not get out of hand.

Steve Joosten,
Senior,
Industrial Education

I'd like to see more of an effort put on the parade. I would like to see the tradition of a parade going on through the community. I didn't really know who won the Homecoming court. I would like to see it more correlated into Homecoming with more of a ceremony during halftime. I would like to see them set up brat stands, beer tents, a band and activities on campus.

Connie Harrison,
Sophomore,
Food Science Technology

I think there could be improvement in the floats. I think it [the bar scene] is terrible. The lines are long and once you get in there it's just packed, and it's like a sauna. It's crazy. I think that it [a campus block party] would be great with a band and drinks you could buy. It would depend a lot on the weather. If it rains, maybe tents could be set up.



Mike Collins,
Senior,
Hotel and Restaurant Management

The bars were really crowded, maybe because some bars like the Rendezvous have closed down. Police were really picky about things, like jaywalking and that kind of thing. For the most part I think it went really well this year.

SSA briefed on proposed post Sept.1 calendar and cuts in aid

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The proposed academic calendar for next year, possibly increased Federal restrictions on student financial aids and the approved addition to the Johnson Fieldhouse highlighted the discussion at the University Student Senate meeting this week.

The first opportunity the Senate had to review the proposed academic calendar as approved by the Faculty Senate came precisely one week prior to the date they must submit their recommendations to the Chancellor's Council.

The proposed calendar's biggest change occurs in the Fall semester when three registration/orientation days are planned starting Aug. 27 which would count as "class contact days" because they allow students to move into their residences and meet with their advisors and faculty members. Labor Day holiday will be observed and classes would start on Tuesday, Sept. 2, the first official day that students must report to campus.

A proposed make-up day of classes for Friday, Nov. 28 would take place Saturday, Sept. 6. Students would receive back-to-back Friday class sessions except for those whose only Friday classes are first-quarter classes. These students will receive a three-day weekend.

SSA President JoAnn Prange recommended approval of the proposed calendar saying, "It looks awfully good when compared with the grim options they were considering which included having finals after Christmas vacation or having classes through Christmas Eve." The plan is for the semester to end at the end of evaluation week Sunday evening, Dec. 21.

Off-campus Senator Wes Stead provided vocal opposition to the proposed calendar. Stead asked "Why mess with the system?" Prange responded to the question by attacking the "mega lobby for tourism" which she said "put heavy pressure on the State Legislature" to vote for classes starting after Labor Day. Prange called the three-day registration/orientation period "kind of a joke."

Chancellor Robert Swanson will have the final decision on the calendar and Prange said it's important that students provide him with plenty of input on the situation.

The Senate was alerted to proposed Financial Aids restrictions by Financial Aids Director Kurt Kindschi's open forum presentation. Kindschi's biggest concern is Washington's express goal to reduce federal assistance to student aid by $820 million over the next three years.

The federal government appears determined to limit its burden resulting from student loans by their proposal to tie the interest rate on guaranteed student loans to the T-bill rate. Then students receiving these loans would be at the mercy of America's economic fortunes.

To reduce the number of students eligible for financially independent status, another proposed change is the redefinition of financial dependency strictly according to the student's age. Then, if you're less than 22 years old you would qualify as financially dependent and the burden to pay for your education would fall more heavily on your parents' shoulders.

Senate members had an endless round of questions for Kindschi which he readily responded to. He recommended to students that they form a lobby that would continually make legislators aware of students' concerns.

JoAnn Prange happily announced the passage by the State Legislature of the $5 million renovation planned for Johnson Fieldhouse. Governor Earl will be here Thursday, Nov. 14 to sign the bill.

The planned renovation will increase the square footage of the Fieldhouse by two thirds according to Athletic Director Warren Bowlus. The renovation will extend far beyond the weightroom into the parking lot.

Bowlus stressed that the renovation will be comprehensive. The biggest job that remains prior to ground breaking is getting the architectural renovation/modification plans approved.

Bowlus said that the old renovation plans have become seriously out-dated. A series of meetings is planned to discuss the renovation/modification plans so the Fieldhouse will best meet the current needs of the student body.

Alumni award presented at homecoming banquet

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Joan E. Herwig and Warren E. Phillips were the recipients of this year's UW-Stout Distinguished Alumni Award. The two were honored along with those receiving the university's Service Award and Outstanding Young Alumni Award, at the homecoming banquet, Saturday, Oct. 26.

A 1965 Stout Graduate, Herwig is an associate professor and chairperson of the child development department in the College of Home Ecomonics at Iowa State University. Phillips is president of Dunwoody Industrial Institute. He graduated from Stout in 1950.

Before joining Iowa State, Herwig taught pre-secondary school aged children in Iowa and Michigan. She has held numerous leadership roles on child care boards of directors, the governing board of her church, and the governing board of the Iowa Association for the Education of Young Children. She is the recipient of the Outstanding Academic Advising Award from Iowa State's College of Home Economics.

Phillips was an instructor for the Minneapolis Vocational High School before joining Dunwoody, where he has served in various positions. In 1962 he was appointed day school coordinator and assumed the position of director and executive vice president in 1974. He has held his present position since 1978.

This year's Stout Service Award was presented posthumously to Leland Score, who was executive director of the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce. Score attended Stout in 1937-38, and had been active in the university's Hall of Fame committee and assisted the Stout University Foundation in fund-raising efforts. He helped to organize university-community relations such as "Meet Menomonie Night" picnics which introduce Stout freshmen and transfer students to the community.

Three people received the Outstanding Young Alumni award this year. They are James Gienke of Harland, Wi., Geoffrey L. Kuhn of Milwaukee and Steven M. Nechvatel of Menasha, Wi.

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

Feature

Dear Patty,

My roommates and I are interested in possibly changing or adding some new policies to our lease. Is this something that can be done?
Thanks,
Phil
Dear Phil,

If you want changes in your lease, draw them up on a sheet of paper and negotiate with your landlord to include them in your lease. Amendments can be made right on the lease if they are made on all copies, are dated and are initialed or signed by all of the parties.

Changes can also be made on a separate sheet, called a "lease addendum." When using a lease addendum, take care to refer to the original lease by identifying all of the parties (landlord and tenants), the address of the unit and the date of the orginal lease, along with a clear statement of any changes to the lease.

The new document should be dated and signed by all of the parties. Make sure that any changes are in writing or they probably won't hold up in court.
Sincerely,
Patty Strassman

Resident investigates disappearance of guitars

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Missing: two guitars.

Menomonie resident Brent Stevens is seeking information concerning the whereabouts of two guitars which were taken from the Marion Hotel Saturday, Oct. 26. The guitars were taken during the day from the first floor.

One guitar was described as an acoustic Yamaha, with steel strings. The guitar is eight years old, but is in excellent condition.

The second guitar is a Fender Jaguar. It is a pre-CBS, 1965 electric. The guitar has a black, hardshell case with blue lining. The case may have decals or trace outlines of decals which were removed after the guitars were taken. The guitar itself is a natural wood-grain finish with a brown and biege woven strap.

Stevens is a musician-artist, who makes his living as a street musician. He described the Fender Jaguar as a rare instrument and impossible to replace.

The police have been contacted in the matter and are following several possible leads.

Stevens is seeking information or the return of the guitars. Anyone having information about the missing instruments is asking to contact the Arts Editor of The Stoutonia. All information will be held in strict confidence. The charges will be dropped if the guitars are returned Stevens said.

Nationwide smokeout date scheduled

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Five and a half minutes--a relatively short period of time. Multiplied by 20 it becomes 110 minutes. For each cigarette a smoker smokes, he shortens his life by approximately 5 1/2 minutes. By smoking only a pack a day, he would lose 669 hours in a year. By smoking for a period of forty years, he would short his life by nearly three years!

But the damages of smoking don't end merely with the shortening of one's life. It also impairs the quality of a smokers lifestyle--smokers account for 83 percent of lung cancer victims and run the risks of mouth cancer, throat cancer, and bladder cancer. Nicotine in the smoke forces the heart to work harder and raises the blood pressure, while carbon monoxide robs the blood of oxygen--all increasing the risk of heart attack and stroke.

The cost of smoking doesn't end with the health affects. A smoker, smoking one pack a day at a typical cost of $1.25 will spend nearly $500 in a year--just for cigarettes alone.

The American Cancer Society would like to give smokers the chance to break away from smoking for a day--or perhaps, even longer. On Nov. 21, the ninth annual Great American Smokeout will be held nationwide.

The smokeout, which begain in Monticello, Minn. in 1974 as the brainchild of Lynn R. Smith, will attempt to reach its goal of having at least one out of every five smokers quit smoking for at least 24 hours.

In the past, many ideas have been used to encourage smokers to participate--the world's largest ashtray, balloon releases, and "round-ups of smokers" are a few examples. Last year, the adopt-a smoker program allowed non smokers to participate by "adopting" a smoker for a day. This year, the adopt-a smoker program will be returning.

In Menomonie, Janice Raemaker and Charlotte Kohanik are in charge of the local unit's observation of the smokeout. Raemaker said, "Most of our work is all planned out for us by the American Cancer Society. All we have to do is add the finishing touches."

If you'd like to participate in the smokeout, here are some hints you may find helpful:

> 'Most of our work is planned out for us by the American Cancer Society.'
> Janice Raemaker

1. Throw out your cigarettes and remove all ashtrays, matches, lighters, and other things that remind you of smoking.

2. Exercise to relieve tension.

3. When tempted to smoke, think of a negative event that occured to you because of smoking and hold that memory for at least 15 seconds.

4. Eat three or more small meals to help maintain a constant blood sugar level; avoid spicy and sugar laden foods--they can trigger your desire to smoke.

5. Cleanse your body of nicotine--drink lots of water, herbal teas, fruit juices, and caffeine-free soft drinks. Try to avoid caffeine and alcohol, as they can increase your desire to smoke.

6. Keep your hands busy--do crossword puzzles, knit, fix something, anything!

Each year the Alumni Association increases the number of activities available to returning alumni. Hundreds of young alumni return to Menomonie for private parties and casual get-togethers. They usually do not participate in any scheduled alumni events. The Alumni Association continues to program events to include all returning alumni.

The Alumni Association is involved in several other activites for alumni and students. The Golden Anniversary in June honors 50 and 60-year graduates. The returning alumni spend a day visiting the campus, meeting faculty and administarators, touring the city and visiting with each other. For them a visit to the campus is almost overwhelming. Most of them attended classes at The Stout Institute when the enrollment numbered almost 300.

There are Stout Alumni Chapters around the United States. The chapters offer graduates a chance to keep current about University activities and enjoy the other Stout graduates' company living in the same geographic location. The chapters are an excellent way to network for potential jobs and identify donors and distinguished alumni.

Faculty traveling to the chapter area often are asked to present the programs. The Alumni Association offers four $1000 graduate scholarships and one $3000 fellowship annually. The graduate scholarships must be used at Stout; however, the fellowship may be used for special educational projects or doctoral studies. Applications for either are available at the Louis Smith Tainter House.

Two years ago the Alumni Association asked alumni in the Minneapolis/St. Paul area to become involved in an "extern" program. Students who are interested in a particular vocation may shadow an alumnus in his postion for three to five days at the student's expense. The office coordinates the program and finds that the program is beneficial to both the graduate and the student. The student gains valuable experience about a vocation and often an employer gains an employee.

To increase alumni contributions each year, the Alumni Association holds a phon-a-thon. Clubs on campus are asked to volunteer their members for an evening of calling. For each donation that is pledged, the club receives a dollar for their club. The money has been beneficial in offering increased scholarships and grants to faculty. Alumni contributions have increased from three percent to over 12 percent. The national average of giving is about 11 percent.

The Alumni Association offers a travel program. Tours to Spain and Portugal, Hawaii, and Alaska are scheduled for 1986.

A directory of all alumni will be published this November. The directory will include alphabetical and geographical listings of alumni plus the listing by major and class year. The directory will be an excellent resource for graduating seniors who are looking for contacts as they move to new jobs around the United States.

The Alumni Association does not have a dues structure. By virtue of receiving a diploma from the University you will automatically become a member of the Alumni Association and receive the quarterly magazine, Alumnus. The major thrust of the Association is to keep alumni aware of the University's activities, and to instill a dedication to the University.

The Louis Smith Tainter House contains the offices of the Foundation and the Alumni Office. The house is being refurbished in part with contributions from the capital campaign. It will become a true "home" for returning alumni for homecoming or at any time they are back on campus. You don't have to be a graduate to visit the Louis Smith Tainter House. Stop by to see us before you graduate.

Property Management minor developed

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

UW-Stout students now have the chance to receive the winning edge. A new minor has been developed, Property Management, that will be compatable with Hotel and Restaurant Management and Business majors. Introduction to Property Management (245-200) began as a quarter class this semester by Madonna Schuster-Myhre, an instructor for the Department of Habitational Resources.

Schuster-Myhre came here in August after being involved in real estate from 1974-1981. She was asked to interview for the position because of her knowledge on the subject of real estate.

"Property Management enhances the Hotel and Restaurant Management major particularly," Schuster-Myhre said. "It involves the management of a physical facility and the management of the individuals involved."

Dr. Leland Nicholls, professor in the Department of Habitational Resources, feels that the students, after graduating, will be receiving an edge over other employees when competing for a job within the company they are working for. Companies owning hotels and restaurants are now getting into many different aspects, such as boutiques and condominiums.

"Because of these changes in land use, a need is being created for knowledge in the area of property management," Nicholls said. "Students will be much more adaptable to change because of their basic knowledge of the restaurant portion. After leaving Stout in Hotel and Restaurant Management they will be flexible for a change."

Introduction to Property Management is one of a number of classes necessary to receive the minor. Many of the courses needed are already included in the course work for hospitality and restaurant majors, such as Facility Planning, Accounting I and Business Law. Housing Economics and Policy is one course that is necessary for the minor, but probably will not be offered until next fall. Also being offered will be a Seminar in Property Management, which will be offered spring semester and will be a one to two day lecture. Twenty-eight credits will be necessary to complete this minor.

Although Introduction to Property Management was offered and quickly filled up this semester as a quarter class, it will be offered as a semester course next semester. It is a two credit class and will be offered Monday, Wednesday, sixth period (245-200-01), and Tuesday, Thursday, fourth period (245-200-02). Because it has just recently been approved, the course does not appear in the schedule book for spring semester.

According to both Nicholls and Schuster-Myhre, the Property Management minor will make the students more versatile. "There are 39 students now and the interest is continuing to grow," Nicholls said.

Marketing class conducts research; student spending habits examined

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

Purchasing power - how much do you have?

If you'd like to find out, stop at the Cobblestone Court in the Student Center between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 6.

That is where UW-Stout's Marketing Research class will be conducting interviews to determine student spending habits and purchasing power in Menomonie.

Project coordinator Joan Janson said each of Dr. Wayne Nero's marketing research classes undertakes a project "where we take all our skills, put them together, and learn how to pool our resources, time and energies. Everyone in the class has a responsibility."

This particular project will be accomplished through personal interviews with at least 400 students. If interviewers don't get to 400 students by 8 p.m. Nov. 6, they will continue interviewing on Nov. 7 at the same time and place. The interviewers will use a four-page questionnaire that requires about five minutes to complete.

Everyone in the class has a responsibility.
—Joan Janson

Questions are designed to reveal:

- The percentage of total student expenditures spent in Menomonie.
- How much students spend per month in each of 22 categories.
- The percentage of above categories that is spent in the Memorial Student Center.
- What establishments each of the above categories are purchased at and why.
- How much money is brought into Menomonie by those who come to visit students.
- Why students shop outside Menomonie.
- How this study compares to the previous study done in 1980.

A slightly different questionnaire will be used to interview international students to accommodate and gather knowledge about any cultural differences.

Several types of questions will be asked: ranking, scale, two-part, multiple choice and essay.

During data analysis the sample will be sub-divided by class standing, sex and whether residence is maintained on or off-campus.

The data will be compiled and typed up in December and will be made available the The Stoutonia as well as Menomonie merchants.

International study

The International Programs Office of UW-Stout is offering 95 Third World Study Programs to students interested in studying in developing nations. The programs are sponsored by the colleges, universities and non-profit organizations which constitute the membership of the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE). Some of the offerings include "Kibbutz Semester in Isreal," "Exploring Modern China" and "Seminar in Kenya" among others.

The CIEE also has a scholarship fund that was established in support of American students studying abroad. The student must be an undergraduate and be sponsored by an organization such as Stout. The scholarship usually covers travel to and from the overseas study site. For more information about the scholarship and the study abroad programs, contact the International Programs Office in 201 Harvey Hall.

Patricia Kallsen Kallsen given award

Patricia G. Kallsen, administrator of the State Division of Vocational Rehabilitation, was presented the UW-Stout Vocational Rehabilitation Institute Distinguished Service Award during ceremonies at Stout on Friday, Oct. 25. Established in 1971, the award is given annually to individuals who have made outstanding contributions in service to people with special needs.

"This award recognizes the vital role of the partnership between the UW system and state government in direct service to people with disabilities," Kallsen said.

Pom Pon squad clinic

The UW-Stout Pom Pon Squad is holding their 13th Annual High School Pom Pon & Danceline Clinic on Saturday, Nov. 9. The clinic will run from 10:00 a.m. until 3:00 p.m., and is open to the public.

The agenda will consist of competition between the high schools in the areas of Pom Pon, Danceline and Prop. The Stout Squad will perform throughout the morning and conduct learning sessions of these routines in the afternoon. Captain and Advisor workshops will also be offered. Awards will be given at the end of the day.

This year the clinic will have 35 various class A, B and C schools including Eau Claire North and Memorial, Amery, Menomonie, Colfax and several from the Twin Cities.

Native American feast

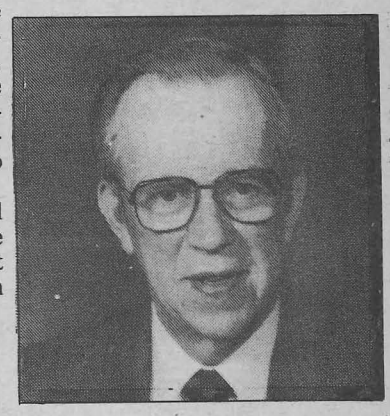
Helen Basina, of the Red Cliff band of the Chippewa (Ojibwa) Tribe, will be the first of three featured Ethnic Chefs-in-Residence at Stout. Basina, with the help of her brother, Tom Butterfield, a Bayfield chef, will prepare a buffet dinner for 60 guests at the Corner III restaurant in the Home Economics building at 5:30 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 13.

Basina has specialized in native American cooking for most of her life. She is responsible for major tribal functions, including all food preparation for large bus tours to the tribal bingo and visitor centers in Red Cliff. The program is sponsored by a grant from the UW System Ethnic Studies Coordinating Committee. Reservations for the dinner can be made by calling 232-2244. Donations are $8.00 per person and must be paid in advance.

Industry banquet

Projects With Industry at UW-Stout will be holding a recognition banquet for those who have assisted the program at 7 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 7 in the Crystal Ballroom of the Student Center. Their aim is to give special thanks to the employers who have served on the program's advisory board. In addition, six employers will receive special awards for demonstrating outstanding service in providing employment opportunities to people with disabilities.

The six are A.J. Buchman, A.J. Industries; Lincoln Duncanson, Northern Metal Specialities; Judy McFadden, Midway Motor Lodge; Tom Miller, Myrtle Werth Medical Center; Howard Robey, UW-River Falls; and Jim Sweeney, UW-Stout.



John Debbink Chevrolet V.P. to speak

The vice president and group executive in charge of the Chevrolet Power Products Group, John D. Debbink will deliver a speech at UW-Stout 7 p.m., Monday, Nov. 7 in the Great Hall of the Student Center. Admission is free.

Debbink's appearance at Stout is made possible by a grant through the Cabot Executive Residency Program. The program is named for Arthur R. Cabot, a successful pet products, manufacturer whose son Scott is a Stout graduate.

Halloween reflects many past traditions

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Tonight, a leprechaun will walk down main street and a lion will be playing a game of pool, while two clowns and a bag of M & M's mingle with the crowds. Tonight is Halloween, a time for dressing up in costumes, parties, and trick or treating. Although it has long been considered a children's holiday in the United States, much of the history of Halloween shows that it originally was an adult holiday.

Halloween is the name given to the eve or vigil of All Hallows or the festival of All Saints, which is celebrated on Nov. 1. It is a festival of Scottish-Irish origin. Halloween has always been associated with death, darkness, and other scary things that go bump in the night. The elements of the customs connected with Halloween can be traced back to pre-Christian times to a festival of the dead. This festival was celebrated by the Celtic people of England, Ireland and Scotland.

The Celts had festivals for two major gods. One was the festival of the sun god and the other was for the god of the dead (called Samhain), whose festival was held on Nov. 1, the beginning of the Celtic New Year. This festival was the biggest and most significant holiday of the Celtic year. The Celts believed that at this time, the spirits of the departed rose from the dead to wander through the night.

On the evening of this festival, the Druids, who were the teachers and priests of the Celts, ordered people to put out their hearth fires. The Druids built a huge new year's bonfire of oak branches, which they considered sacred. People would gather to sacrifice animals and make offerings of fruits and vegetables to honor the dead. The bonfires were also meant to help the spirits on their journey and keep them away from the living. Then each family relit its hearth fire from the new year's fire.

When Christian missionaries attempted to change these religious practices of the Celtic people and Samhain evolved into the Halloween we know today. The missionaries tried to stop "pagan" holidays such as Samhain because these holidays had an emphasis on the supernatural. To spread Christianity, Pope Gregory I, developed a concept of using peoples' native beliefs and consecrating them to Christ. This concept allowed the Celts to continue their worship and became a basic principle in Catholic missionary work.

Because Samhain was considered pagan, missionaries defined it as evil and connected it with the devil. Druids were also considered evil because of their association with Samhain. Followers of the old religion went into hiding and were called witches. The Christian feast of All Saints, also known as All Hallows was established. Celebrated on Nov. 1, this was a day of honoring every Christian saint. Later, the church began to honor the dead on Nov. 2. This became known as All Souls' Day.

'Old ideas never completely die out.'

The old beliefs never completely died out. People continued to celebrate All Hallows' Eve as the night of the wandering spirits, but the spirits and supernatural beings were now considered evil. People would try to win the favor of these spirits by setting out gifts of food.

Almost all of today's Halloween customs can be traced back to the ancient Celtic day of the dead. Trick or treating and wearing of costumes comes from the Celtic period and the first few centuries of Christianity. Food and drink were left outside to appease the wandering souls. As time went on, people began dressing as these creatures and performed ludricrous acts in exchange for gifts of food. This was called mumming, and has evolved into what is now called trick or treating. Witches, ghosts and skeletons are still among the favorite costumes.

Another custom of Halloween is the jack-o'-lantern. Although we carve pumpkins, people in England and Ireland, where the custom originated, once carved out beets, turnips and potatoes to use as lanterns. According to Irish legend, jack-o'-lanterns were named for a man called Jack who could not enter heaven because he was a miser. He went to hell, but the devil wanted nothing to do with him. The devil ordered him out, but before he was locked out, he scooped up a burning coal from the fires of hell in a turnip he was eating. To this day, Jack uses the "lantern" to walk the earth until Judgement Day.

Witches have always been connected with Halloween. We imagine them as wicked old women, dressed all in black, flying across the sky on a broomstick. However, at one time, people were genuinely afraid of those who claimed they had powers and practiced witchcraft.

The first recorded idea that witches flew on brooms was in the tenth century, and the origin of "witches brew" goes with the belief that witches were cannibals who feasted on human flesh and made potions of obscene materials. Witches became connected with Halloween in the United States because of their association with death and evil.

Other customs brought over by the Irish include games such as snap-apple. This was where an apple was suspended from the ceiling by a string and the player attempted to catch it in his mouth. This developed into the idea of bobbing for apples.

The idea of fortunetelling is often connected with Halloween. The Irish played the game of throwing nuts into an open hearth. Depending on the way that the nut burned, the intials of one's future

Ghost Story Theater will present a special Halloween performance

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

"Ghost Story Theater" will be presented tonight at the Mabel Tainter Memorial Theater.

There will be two performances, one at 7 p.m. and one at 9 p.m. Admission for the show is $1 and the public is invited to attend.

The show consists of a series of five different, yet interrelated, ghost stories which were written or adapted to appeal to all ages.

The cast of "Ghost Story Theater" consists of UW-Stout and area high school students. They are sponsored by the Mabel Tainter Theater.

The show is directed by Troy Bystrom. Other UW-Stout students included in the cast are Kim Steen, Sandy King, Dave Kiff and Andy McDonough.

The show opens with the Phantom of the Opera and a wicked witch addressing the audience from opposite wings of the stage. They then introduce Count Dracula, who serves as the host for the performance.

The Count is an excellent host. He has a continuing rapport with the audience as he tries to shock and frighten his "guests for the evening."

A haunted house is featured in the first story. Two girls enter the house as part of a sorority initiation. When they find an old diary that describes the strange power of the house, they run towards the door. But it may be too late to escape.

The second story deals with spirits that are found in the land and woods. It is a ghost story with a chilling hunting theme.

The third story, "Ghost in the Graveyard," is about a group of teenagers that are seeking thrills in the local graveyard on Halloween night.

'Although the stories are fun, we hope that they also portray lessons...

Cast member

"The Monkey's Paw" and Edgar Allen Poe's "The Tell-Tale Heart" are the last two episodes of "Ghost Story Theatre."

The first three stories were written by the members of the cast for the show. The last two stories are not original, but they have been adapted by the cast especially for tonight's performance.

"Although the stories are fun, we hope that they also portray lessons to the audience," cast member Kim Steen said. An example this is found in the third story, "Ghost in the Graveyard," where the tragic effects of drinking and driving are exemplified.

"Ghost Story Theater" originated earlier this fall when this group of students decided that they wanted to do something special for the community on Halloween night. The theatre approved of the project and allotted the group a small budget for production.

"Everyone in the cast has been participating and helping to make decisions," Steen said. Many people are working behind the scenes as well, as the show utilizes many special effects.

Dramatic lighting and realistic sound effects are used throughout the show. The costumes and makeup are also very convincing. The sets are simple, yet they are very effective in creating the "scary" atmosphere needed for the performance.

Although everyone in the cast has been involved with theater, this is the first time they have worked together on a project. However, they now plan to keep working together in the future.

"If our pilot project, Ghost Story Theatre, is a success, we would like to develop a mini-series of short performances," director Troy Bystrom said.

He describes the format of the proposed mini-series as a variety of shows designed for all audiences that would take approximately an hour to perform.

Bystrom and the cast and crew of "Ghost Story Theater" have been working long and hard to prepare for tonight's performance, hoping to give the students and the community an enjoyable "Halloween Treat."

Thompson Twins - Here's To Future Days

Rebounding from an exhausting tour months ago, the Thompson Twins rally full force back into the lime light of the music scene.

The fulcrum of Thompson Twins success depended on their introduction of a trendy but effective sound.

From the introduction of the first track "Don't Mess With Doctor Dream" exotic electro/synth prevails with a combination of strong vocals from lead singer Tom Bailey.

Continuing through the LP, the radio hit "Lay Your Hands on Me" keeps the beat strong but travels into the fringes of repetitiveness.

A stimulating remake of the Beatles "Revolution" calms the senses while reminiscing with the old days of Beatlemania.

Side B is the location of the turn-off from trend to a whispering mellow selection avoiding an up-tempo beat.

Interesting as it is, the Twins wrote their own lines in the song "Love is the Law," but it does not have the same effect that the similarly titled cut by the Suburbs does.

After knowing the obstacles the Thompson Twins have had to overcome in the past months, it is pleasing to hear they have produced a vinyl repo with quality and their own hint of originality.

The Twins are put on top, the LP "Here's to Future Days" is a correlation of talents and creativity well worth the chance of possession.

Sting -The Dream of the Blue Turtles

The contents of Sting's new LP are as intensely bizarre as it's title.

After the intro of "If You Love Someone, Set Them Free" the real action begins.

Entering political overtones, the composition "Russians" blends tales with reality. "No such things as a winnable war Its a lie we don't believe anymore How can I save my little boy From Oppenheimers deadly toy...."

From indications of the lyrics, then rifts of a ticking alarm clock, the effect is touching into anti-nuclear reality.

Then pressing the children's crusade, Sting's inuendos pertaining to the conflicts of war are perplexingly real.

The lines: "One day in a nuclear age
They may understand their age
They build machines they can't control
Then bury the waste in a great big hole."

As true as these concepts are, Sting lures you with ideas that so closely relate to reality it's like a prediction for the future.

It is to be said that the blues/sax influence must be appreciated, and the overall context is keeping in touch with the pulse of reality.

Micheels' fashion show at Stout displays creativity and originality

Suzette Kramer
Arts Reporter

Wearable Arts–arts made into fashion. A rare yet mastered talent of Ms. Betty Micheels. Last Saturday, Oct. 26, Micheels brought her collection to Menomonie and presented a fashion show of her original designs.

Micheels was invited to Stout by the Alumni Office which worked in collaberation with the Apparel and Textiles Design Association (ATDA).

Micheels got started in the business when she saw a collage jacket display, a form of wearable arts. This inspired her to take a class on the subject. Through this class, she met Rita Zerull, a well known designer of this area, who taught another class. Micheels enrolled and has been in many classes since. The last group she became a part of has stayed together and holds regular meetings once a week.

Last December, Micheels displayed her articles in her first show. She was asked to submit five of her articles from which three would be chosen. The organizers, however, chose all five. "I was quite pleased!" Micheels said.

Since then, her art has been displayed in a number of shows in surrounding areas.

Micheels has also been successful in selling some of her wearable fashions. Presently, the Creative Stitchery Gallery in San Diego, California is her major retailer.

Joy Riechel, Junior Representative for ATDA, was Chairperson for the Wearable Arts Fashion Show. "When I agreed to be chairperson, I really had no idea what I was getting into. I didn't know anything about putting on a fashion show, but I sure learned a lot about organization," Reichel said. She realized there would be a lot of work involved in organizing models, music, and publicity, but the last minute things such as fittings, confirmations, and refreshments took her somewhat by surprise. Reichel admits, "Ms. Micheels helped a lot. She is a very nice lady and did everything she could to make my job easier."

Kaleene Kenning, Vice President of ATDA, also worked extremely hard to make Micheels' show a success. Kenning was in charge of choreography for the show, and aided in the judging of models. She convinced many ATDA members to try out as models and even modeled herself.

Kenning was very impressed with Reichel's effort as first time Chairperson. "Joy did a great job of lining things up. She did a lot of necessary running around, and because of her, the show ran smoothly," Kenning said.

Both Reichel and Kenning greatly praised a number of Micheels' fashions. They were impressed with the uniqueness and variety of the clothing. Some of their works included patch work, quiltings, an ethnic black dress with tiny mirrors inserted, and a dress made out of parts of an old lace tablecloth, which Kenning modeled.

Originality and creativity are the key words used to describe Micheels' wearable arts. The show was an enhancing experience in the fashion world of today.

spouse could be read in the ashes. Another belief concerning one's marriage future was that if apple peels were thrown over one's shoulder, they will resemble the intials of one's future spouse.

Another custom that persists today, especially among Irish-Americans, is the baking of breads with several small objects in them. Such objects as a coin, a ring, a thimble and a small doll were used. The one who found the ring meant the person would marry soon while the person who received the thimble would never marry. The person who received the coin would become wealthy and the one who received the doll would have children. Today, fortunetelling is often done through the use of card reading and palmistry.

While children's trick or treating has long been recognized as the main activity of Halloween, adults are becoming increasingly more interested in celebrating the holiday. Today, people dress in the latest costumes, looking for something unique that is different from last year. They go out and party in a variety of ways in celebration of this mystical, magical night.

Werewolf spoof mixes humor and horror

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

A superb soundtrack, spectacular special effects and a believably unbelievable situation combine in An American Werewolf in London to create what is rapidly becoming a cult classic for filmgoers.

Preview

The University Cinema Commission presents American Werewolf Sunday, Nov. 3 at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in the Great Hall.

The credibility of Werewolf results from the movie's setting in Europe where a pair of American college students, Jack (Griffin Dunne) and David (David Naughton), have chosen to spend the summer touring around. Who doesn't know at least a couple students who have decided to go to Europe for the summer?

Hiking across the moors of North England on a moonlit summer night, they are attacked by a werewolf. Jack is killed and David is left badly mauled. The fun part of the story begins in the London hospital where David is left recovering.

As David starts falling in love with his nurse (Jenny Agutter) he begins suspecting that things might not be as fine as they seem to be. He experiences disturbingly ghoulish nightmares in which he mauls others, but he isn't yet sure whether or not he's a werewolf. Your mind can play tricks on you.

To top matters off, David receives bedside visits from none other than the undead Jack whose corpse appears viciously mutilated. The real fun begins here because Jack has returned to convince David to kill himself so that the undead murdered by werewolves everywhere may finally rest in peace.

David is making plans for his life with the nurse, and of course he isn't about to seriously consider the request of an undead friend to kill himself so that others might die.

'The soundtrack of 'Werewolf' is possibly the film's most outstanding characteristic.'

The contrast between the rather of matter-of-fact attitude of the undead Jack and the intensely emotional attitude of David creates many memorably funny scenes.

Director John Landis, best known for National Lampoon's Animal House succeeded with Werewolf because he set the audience up to identify with David's character.

David's desire to continue living is easily understandable. The viewer also understands David's confusion about whether or not he's a werewolf. His nightmares are awfully real, yet many questions remain surrounding his condition. The viewer, in effect, shares David's confusion.

Critic Ron Pennington of The Hollywood Reporter captured what makes Werewolf so special when he said "The characters are believable people caught up in an unbelievable situation."

The most memorable moments in Werewolf include the intensely horrifying nightmare sequences, the startling werewolf transformation and the gruesomely realistic appearance of the undead characters.

The sound track of Werewolf is possibly the film's most outstanding characteristic. This reviewer has heard many filmgoers enthusiastically recall how the strains of "Blue Moon" and "Bad Moon Rising" created an effective musical backdrop for the film.

This zany spoof of old werewolf movies is a successful mixture of macabre, off-beat humor and nightmarish horror which should leave the audience howling.

Farm crisis presented by powerful film drama

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

The University Cinema Commission presentation of The River next Wednesday, Nov. 6 at 7 and 9:30 p.m. gives filmgoers the opportunity of seeing a powerful drama about the current farm crisis.

Preview

Sissy Spacek and Mel Gibson star as a farm couple whose livelihood is threatened by a number of problems. The neigboring river threatens to overrun their farm, Mel Gibson is forced to leave home so he can find work to pay the bills, and a conglomerate is pressuring local farmers to sell their property so they can develop it.

Spacek's performance in The River is truly remarkable. She carries the show which suffers at times from being predictable and overdramatized. Critic Michael Buckley of Films in Review paid her the following tribute, "The lovely Spacek, as usual, is totally believable—even when the script is not."

Spacek's range of talent is reflected in the diversity of her films, Coal Miner's Daughter, Carrie and Badlands to name a few. Once again, in the character she portrays is truly memorable.

The major weakness of The River is created by Mel Gibson's character who is stubborn to the point of being stupid about wanting to hold onto his land. It's difficult to understand what keeps Spacek by Gibson's side unless it's nothing more than animal magnetism.

Scott Glenn does a fine job of portraying the representative of the conglomerate that wants to buy out the farmers and develop the land. Glenn shows more common sense than Gibson after Gibson has a temporary victory against the ever-rising river. Glenn walks away saying, "I can wait." He seems to be the only one aware that eventually Gibson will lose his war against the river.

'Spacek's performance in 'The River' is truly remarkable'

To add drama to the film, Spacek and Glenn are former lovers. One of the weaknesses of the film is that Director Mark Rydell chose to overdramatize the series of problems facing Gibson. It doesn't take long for the viewer to figure out that Murphy's Law appplies in spades here.

Adding fuel to the melodramatic fire is the John Williams score which only dominates the action in the film. In the most dramatic scene, where Gibson and family fight with friends and neighbors to dam up the rising river, Williams' damn music makes the scene almost laughable.

There are powerful moments in The River which make you aware that the farm crisis today involves much more than a dramatic shift in statistics. The true tragedy of this film is that Director Rydell chose to focus on a series of shallow subplots and ends up short-changing the audience in terms of emotional impact.

Pumpkin versatile

Linda Konkol

It's Great Pumpkin season! Yes, the Great Pumpkin does exist outside of the Peanuts cartoon. There's actually an International Pumpkin Association which searches for the biggest Great Pumpkin in all the world. This year's winner is a 531 pound pumpkin from Nova Scotia.

Traditionally, the pumpkin has been more than a Halloween symbol. Pumpkins have served a variety of functions both inside and outside of the kitchen.

Early Americans planted pumpkins between hills of corn to keep their fields free of weeds and to serve as a living mulch.

Some accounts report New England barbers using a hollowed out pumpkin shell to fit over a customer's head as a hair-cutting guide when they couldn't find a cap or bowl to use.

Pioneer cooks used pumpkin extensively. They dried pumpkins and ground them into flour. Dried pumpkin was sometimes used as a substitute for molasses.

Early cooks also baked or steamed the shells, pressed the cooked pulp through a sieve, and added sweetener and spices to make preserves. In addition, they used pumpkin in recipes for pudding, soups and wines.

Today, cooks continue to use pumpkin in baking for flavor and nutrition. Pumpkin takes on the dominant flavors of the ingredients it's cooked with. This makes it usable as a base for many different dishes, especially those that are highly spiced.

Nutritionally, pumpkin is rich in vitamins and minerals but low in calories. It provides an excellent source of vitamin A, along with generous amounts of B-complex and C vitamins, phosphorous, calcium and iron. Yet, a half-cup contains only 37 calories.

Most fresh pumpkins are marketed in October. When choosing fresh pumpkins for cooking, select small-sized, heavy pumpkins, since they have less waste and are more tender then larger pumpkins. Also, look for pumpkins that are bright orange in color, firm, and free from blemishes.

Pumpkins can be kept for several months if stored in a cool, dry area and aren't allowed to freeze.

To prepare a fresh pumpkin for use in desserts or breads, wash, cut in half, and remove the seeds from the pumpkin. Place halves, cut side down, in a baking pan. Cover with foil and bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Turn cut side up and continue baking, covered, until tender, 20 to 30 minutes. Remove the rind and puree the pulp in a food mill or blender.

Because of this lengthy preparation time required for fresh pumpkin, a large share of the pumpkin used today has been processed in cans. Freshly cooked or canned pumpkin can be used in this recipe for pumpkin muffins, or any other recipe calling for prepared pumpkin.

Pumpkin Muffins

2 cups packaged biscuit mix
1/2 cup sugar
1 tsp. cinnamon
3/4 cup milk
1/2 cup prepared pumpkin
1 egg, slightly beaten
2 Tbsp. vegetable oil

In a mixing bowl, thoroughly combine biscuit mix, sugar, and cinnamon. In a small bowl, combine remaining ingredients; stir into dry ingredients just until blended. Fill greased muffin cups 2/3 full. Bake at 400 degrees for 20 minutes. Makes 1 dozen muffins.

The pumpkin "meat" isn't the only edible part of the squash. Flowers from growing pumpkin vines may be cooked and eaten; they may be sauteed or batter-dipped and deep-fried. Also, pumpkin seeds may be roasted and served as a snack, as outlined in the following recipe.

Roasted Pumpkin Seeds

Scoop the seeds from the pumpkin interior and rub all the thread-like fibers off. Toss with vegetable oil or melted butter. Spread on a baking sheet in a thin layer. Sprinkle with onion salt or garlic salt for flavor variety. Bake at 250 degrees for 30 to 40 minutes, shaking or stirring frequently, until crisp and brown.

Ruble gives answers to mystical future

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Curiousity can do many things. It can kill a cat, make a chicken cross the road, and at UW-Stout, draw students to Marcella Ruble, astrologer and palmist.

Last Wednesday, Oct. 23, people huddled around Ruble for hours in the Student Center. They stood in anticipation, awaiting to hear the mysteries of the future.

"People love to know about themselves. Who better to know about?" Ruble said. For 18 years Ruble has interpreted the future at colleges, universities, clubs, conventions and institutions.

While at Stout she asked individuals about their birth dates and times. From within her astrological book, Ruble translated the signs of the planets and the stars. She then took the palms of many students and interpreted the meanings of the lines and shapes of their hands.

She discovered people's personalities and attitudes toward the world and others. On the Stout campus she noticed in general an oval print in a certain spot on the palm. This sign indicated the sensitivity and creativity of the environment. Often a common trait is found amoung people consentrated in one location such as a university.

Amoung the people analyzed by Ruble were the Homecoming candidates. She could not predict which couple would win the crown but she could pick out those with lucky influences. Ruble also noticed those who would be disappointed if they did not win.

"I love my profession. It is so much fun to touch people. The most significant thing is that you get the person to see his unique and essential qualities and that he is valuable and special," Ruble said.

According to Ruble, astrology and palmistry are used as tools in order to determine where one is going. She cannot say in fact that something is going to occur. She can say that a specific influence is likely to be present at a particlular time in one's life.

Ruble does not think interpretations of the occult sciences should become a belief. Instead it should give structure to the understanding of the opportunites available to a person. Ruble is a nonpracticing minister and has deep religious convictions. Actions taken upon predicted opportunities depend upon sociological, moral and economical conditioning.

While Ruble was growing up in the Chicago area, her mother had dreams that would come true. Her family never thought such behavior was unusual. Ruble read about the occult when she was young. In college she met many people by way of a large occult library. One woman that she met taught her astrology.

After graduating from the University of Illinois with honors, Ruble was offerd a full scholarship for graduate studies in sculpture. She said, "I have to admit I did more work in astrology as a noncredit course than in any of my accredited courses because it held my attention, but only as an amusement."

Building up credibility and demand for her program in astrology and palmistry was not a problem. Amazed at her popularity, Ruble has always attracted large crowds even when unadvertised.

Although Ruble enjoys her trade, she is retiring within the next year. She will go back to school to become a lawyer and will do art work. She said, "It is very difficult being on the road six months out of the year and being married. I think it is time I make some sort of strategic change."

Can anyone enter the world of palmistry and astrology? Ruble said, "I think the essence of what I do, everybody has the talent. I think perhaps my style of presentation is unique because most people can't talk as fast or for as long."

As part of the Homecoming events of last week this novelty act was sponsored by the Special Events Commission.

High tech image is emphasized by 'Cover to Cover'

Kelly Moran
Arts Reporter

High technology and the allure of magazine fashion are at the heart of this fall's fashion production "Cover to Cover."

The fashion promotions class, a requirement of fashion merchandising students, will debut "Cover to Cover" this coming Tuesday at noon in the Great Hall. A second show will be presented Nov. 6th at the Ramada Inn in Eau Claire.

Tickets for this show will be $4 each with proceeds going to the Easter Seals foundation. This second show will be video-taped to be shown in the Easter Seals telethon. Tickets for this show are available at the Ramada Inn front desk.

"Cover to Cover" is the first fashion show to take place in the new Student Center. Because of this the students hope to emphasize the high tech image that the new union brings across.

It is also the first time two promotions classes have collaborated to create a single fashion production. Dr. Mary Welch and Wray Lamb, the class instructors, commented on the collaboration:

"We as instructors knew that we could work well together operating two class sections which meet at different times. Our rationale for bringing the classes together to present a major production was several-fold in nature.

The stress and daily demands upon the students is very similar to what they will encounter on the job. Management in a participative climate with clear open communications is critical. Students learn time management, prioritization, peer management, and what management styles work for them. Public relation skills are essential for success."

'Eight categories ranging from sportswear to lingerie to career wear will be shown.'

Eight categories ranging from sportswear to lingerie to career wear will be shown. Of special interest is the designer category. All garments in this category are created by Stout students.

The students are responsible for every aspect of the production: merchandise selection, stage setting, advertising, publicity, model selection, choreography, public relations, lighting, and every other arrangement involved in staging a fashion production. The whole production has been a rather amazing group effort and challenge.

"Cover to Cover" promises to be an exciting fashion production not to be missed.

The man in black and white speaks out

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

I asked to see them. They came to me dressed in black and white uniforms, armed with whistles, spiked shoes, and yellow flags. No, they weren't the Mod Squad, nor Stout frosh women walking home from the bars; they were the football referees.

Feature

I talked to one of them, Roger Kluz, from Mosinee, Wis., who was the referee of the Stout Homecoming football game. He had the white hat on, rather than a black hat, which meant he was chief arm-waver, or in other terms, he explains the penalties that are called on a team through the use of intricate hand signals and aerobic style arm maneuvers.

I asked Kluz why he had chosen to be the object of fan discontent and human backboard for bloodthirsty football player's choice words.

"I coached high school football, a little bit of basketball, and baseball too," Kluz said, "and when I quit coaching I wanted to stay in touch with the game [football]."

He has officiated high school football for twenty years, and college ball for ten years.

He admits to reap more enjoyment out of officiating the college football games, rather than high school, but says that he worked the high school games to stay sharp.

During the games he referees, does he hear any rude comments from disgruntled fans? "You can't help but hear it," Kluz said, "you have to be pretty thick skinned."

After that question, I asked him if any of these irrate fans ever went as far as to threaten him, or throw tomatoes for example.

"No," Kluz said, "and we credit the schools with keeping the people pretty well under control.

> 'We have one coach in the league, who... always asks us where our seeing eye dogs are.'

Fans like to call referees names, like zebras and inmates, so I asked him if there were any favorite expressions fans use to try to slight, downgrade, and leave him groveling on the gridiron.

There weren't any he thought to be particularly clever, but he did mention that some coaches poke at them. Kluz said, "We have one coach in the league, who when we come in and introduce ourselves, always asks us where our seeing eye dogs are."

Also, I asked Kluz if he had regretted any calls he had made. He told me yes, but that he couldn't discuss any particular ones with me. It was some sort of secret Ref Society oath he had taken that prevented him from revealing anything.

Had Kluz or any of the other officials ever been mistaken for a loose football, or had been knocked to the turf by an overly anxious football player who was head slap happy during play? "Our first objective is to make the game safe for the players, but you also want to make sure you're safe to," Kluz commented.

Well, had he? "Yes," he said, "usually the reason we are run over is because we were in the wrong place."

How much do you think a guy who has to be the brunt of hostility from coaches, players, and fans get paid to referee Friday and Saturday grudge contests? "We get $80 per person and no expenses," Kluz declared.

Does he have any plans to aspire to more glorious refereeing positions that pay him more, give him fringes, and cause the inside of his stomach to deteriorate faster?

"Nope," Kluz said, "I'm alright where I am. Most of our jobs wouldn't allow us to travel that much, like professional and Big 10 officials are required to do."

Lastly, I asked Kluz how did he rank the Stout homecoming fans. He said, "The crowd was good except for the jerks across the way who were throwing water balloons on the opposing team. We (the officials) were concerned with the safety of the visiting team."

Basically this is his job. He and the other officials blow whistles, perform hand signals, pull out yellow flags, talk a lot amongst themselves, and look very serious, all to insure a safe and fun football game for the players.

Offense disappoints gridders in 20-3 defeat in Homecoming bout

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

Last Saturday, the UW-Stout Blue Devils offense stalled as the UW-Platteville Pioneers overwhelmed the Devils 20-3 in Stout's homecoming game at Nelson Field.

Excellant weather Saturday encouraged a large homecoming crowd, the largest attendance all season. Many alumni, students and guests were out to cheer the gridders on.

The Blue Devils started wide receiver Jim Gorecki at quarterback. Usual starter Glen Majzsak is out with a rotator cuff injury and back-up Rob Lindberg was sidelined with a back ingury.

The quarterback situation is what handicapped the Blue Devils the most. Head Coach Bob Kamish said, "It's down right frustrating. They've got three quarterbacks shuffling in and out and we don't have any that qualify as a quarterback."

Gorecki proved this during the game when he completed only one out of ten passes for five yards, two of the passes were intercepted by Platteville. Gorecki was replaced in the second half by Duey Fimreite.

Fimreite, a defensive back, did not do much better than Gorecki. Fimreite completed only one of six attempts for 13 yards, and he also had two passes intercepted by the Pioneers.

The game started slow as the first score came late in the second quarter with only ten seconds remaining. The score came on a 33-yard field goal by Todd Miles.

The field goal was set up by the defense when the Pioneers attempted a field goal, but the Blue Devils blocked the kick and chased the ball about 50 yards before Tim Hudson fell on the ball at Platteville's 27-yard line.

The turning point in the game came late in the third quarter. Stout had the ball at the Pioneer's two-yard line on fourth down, Miles attempting a 20 yard field goal. The kick was blocked.

'They just ran us down in the second half.'
— Bob Kamish
Head Coach

The Pioneers got the ball back at their 20-yard line. From here they marched 80 yards in 17 plays for their first score. The key play on the drive was a 16-yard pass from Bill Rogan to Larry Tonyan in the end zone to give the Pioneers the lead, 7-3.

At the beginning of the fourth quarter, Stout had the ball at their own 23-yard line. Here, Fimreite threw his first interception. Platteville gained only four yards, failing to gain a first down on a fourth down conversion.

The Stout offense took over at their own 30-yard line. Fimreite drove the offense down to the Pioneer 38-yard line. The Pioneers then intercepted the ball for the third time. The Pioneers used nine plays before scoring their second touchdown. The extra point was missed to make the score 13-3 in favor of the Pioneers.

Jim Gorecki came back into the game, but three plays after the kick off Gorecki threw his second interception. Three plays later the Pioneers scored their final touchdown of the game, making the final score 20-3.

Defense kept the Blue Devils in the game. "They just ran us down in the second half," Kamish said.

The defensive player of the week was Steve Sandin. He had ten solo tackles and a fumble recovery. "Steve did everything on Saturday for us," Defensive Coach Steve Terry stated.

The offensive player of the week was Scott Stauffacher for his 13-yard reception and blocking. Kamish said, "He played a very solid game, both blocking and receiving."

The gridder's next game will be in Dubuque, Iowa against Loras College, ranked number eight in the NAIA Division II polls. Player Mark Horbinski said "We will be the underdogs, but it will just make winning more fun."

In preparation, the Blue Devil offense is happy to have Rob Lindberg back in practice this week. Wide receiver Ron Wise said, "It will be more fun to handle the ball more," as the offense will be trying some new plays against Loras College this weekend.

Sports quote of the week-"I just feel like a gutted snowbird after going through all the films. All the work and effort by our players...and if kicker Rob (Houghtlin) had missed that field goal, we would of lost the game." Iowa Head Football Coach Hayden Fry on Iowa's victory over Michigan.

Martin Knocked-Out Again by Steinbrenner- Billy Martin was fired for the fourth time as the New York Yankee's manager earlier this week. Lou Piniella, a former outfielder and later a coach with the Yankees, was named to replace Martin.

Piniella said, "I'm sad to be taking over for a person who taught me immensely and a man I played for. I have mixed emotions about that."

Martin had become embroiled in barroom altercations during the last two months of the season on two seperate occasions, which was believed to lead to his dismissal.

Million Dollar Payoff for Missouri- With the Kansas City Royals and the St. Louis Cardinals vying for league titles and then playing in the World Series, the state of Missouri realized about $140 million, with about $100 million of that pumped into each city's economy, according to Marjorie Beenders, director of the state's Division of Tourism.

Nixon Making More Rules for Umpires- Former President Richard M. Nixon, acting as an arbitrator, ruled Monday that major league umpires are to receive a 40 percent pay increase for working additional games in the two league championship series.

Nixon ruled that because the playoffs were expanded from a best-of-five to a best-of-seven format, the 12 working umpires should each receive $14,000, an increase of $4,000.

Kulick to Present "Fitness for Everyone"-A workshop titled "Fitness for Everyone" will be held from 1-5 p.m. today, Thursday, in the Great Hall of the Student Center. The presenter will be internationally known wheelchair athlete, Marcia Bevard Kulick.

The workshop is for those with an interest in learning more about exercise modifications for individuals with physical impairment. Program topics will include the importance of fitness, ways to channel stress energy, stretching and abdominal workout, peak performance and sit-down dance aerobics.

Indians win conference championship

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The Menomonie High School Indians won the Big Rivers Conference Championship by shutting out the Chippewa Falls Cardinals 22-0 last Friday night in Chippewa Falls at Dorais Field.

The Indians were undefeated this season with an 8-0 record going into the championship game. The Indians scored a total of 174 points during the season and only allowed opponents a total of 41 points.

Indians' Head Coach Gene Hatfield said "Chippewa played us tough. Their backs ran hard and the defense didn't give up anything easily." The Cardinals finished the season at 4-4, totalling 106 points and giving up 131 points.

The first score of the game came from the Menomonie Indians. Chippewa went to punt the ball, but the snap was over the punter's head. Chippewa recovered the ball in their own end zone for a safety late in the first quarter.

The second score for the Indians came in the second quarter on an eight-yard run by running back Kevin Henderson. The extra point coversion was missed making the score 8-0.

The Cardinals' offense was held to minus five yards total offense the first-half, but the first drive of the second half the Cardinals drove 59 yards in 15 plays before the Indian defense stopped the Cardinals at the Menomonie 21-yard line.

The Indians' offense rushed the ball down 70 yards for a second touchdown. A pass on the conversion was good for two extra points increasing the score to 16-0.

The Cardinals again tried to go down into Indian territory but came up short when the Indians intercepted in the end zone for a touch back.

Chippewa Head Coach Dav Wilson said, "I'm really please with the effort the kids put forth We knew Menomonie was an ex cellent team and they proved i tonight."

Menomonie took over and mar ched the ball down for anothe touchdown to clinch the champior ship game. It was the secon straight championship for the In dians, which gained them a spot i the WIAA state playoffs.

Netters place fourth in WWIAC, citing optimistic outlook for future

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's tennis team capped their season off with their best finish ever, placing fourth in the WWIAC Tennis Championship held at Madison this past weekend.

In singles play, the Lady Blue Devils played formidable, mostly earning fourth place finishes throughout the six singles slots.

Mary Malloy faced a tough flight of first singles players and ended up her season with a sixth place finish at the number one slot.

Lynn Papenfuss, playing at the second singles position, won her first match, but then was overpowered by the eventual second flight singles champion from UW-Whitewater, 3-6, 0-6. She placed fourth in her flight.

Playing at the third singles position was Jean Feyen, who breezed through her first match 6-0, 6-2. Unfortunately, her next match was not as easy, for she lost to the second seeded player in her flight, 5-7, 6-7. Feyen received a fourth place finish for her efforts.

Also, Mary Pokwinski earned a fourth place finish in the fourth singles slot. She beat her first challenger, 1-6, 6-3, 6-0, but then was defeated in her next contest 2-6, 0-6.

Kelly Wickman played marvelously at the fifth singles position, capturing the fifth place consolation championship by defeating two challengers.

Playing number six singles was Tara Stahel who won her first match 6-3, 7-5, but then was beaten in the second round 1-6, 6-7. Stahel took fourth place in her flight.

The first doubles flight was not successful for the duo of Malloy and Papenfuss. They lost both of their matches and did not place. Feyen and Pokwinski fared better playing at the second doubles slot, and earned a fourth place finish in their flight.

Perhaps the best playing of the day was by the third doubles pairing of Wickman and Stahel. They beat their first opponents 6-4, 6-2, and then lost to the eventual third doubles flight champions from UW-La Crosse, 4-6, 1-6. After this loss, they were matched against the third doubles pairing from UW-River Falls. They defeated them 6-3, 6-3, and captured the third place crown.

"I thought that's where we'd be," Coach Bob Smith said. "This fourth place finish was the best ever, so I guess you have to learn to crawl before you can run."

Smith cited the highlight of the season to be the Lady Blue Devils' win over Eau Claire 5-4. "This was the turning point in the season for us. We knew we could play with them, and that win proved we could also beat them."

"It was a good season for us," Smith commented. "We certainly are off to a good start. We can build on what we have, which are five good freshman, and a lot of other girls who will be returning."

The women's tennis team's final tally for the season is 7 wins, 10 losses.

Runners gain from Geere's dedication

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

Developing into a standout collegiate runner at any university takes dedication to the sport and team. Sheila Geere has spent the past four years at UW-Stout doing just that.

Geere ranks as Stout's number three on the all-time runner list for women. Ahead of her are former standouts Kay Rehm and Mary Sprader Howard.

Maintaining this top position meant dedication to early morning runs and giving everything on hard workout days. Geere admits that it was hard to get motivated on the mile repeat days at Tanglewood golf course. "I hate the second hole hill," Geere laughs. She has even considered giving coach Klitzke a year membership for all the memories.

Geere's improvement in the sport over the past four years can be attributed to hard work and dedication. "Sheila is one of the hardest workers on the team, male or female," Head Coach Lou Klitzke said.

Cross country is a unique sport in that it requires a year round effort for a runner to excell. To become a good cross country runner an athlete must train throughout the year says Klitzke. Geere has never completely stopped running after each season, partly due to the fact that she is also a standout runner on the track team.

Between putting in two workouts a day Geere also holds a part-time job along with her classes. Geere confesses to being a self-motivated individual which is obvious to fellow teammates. In between work, school and practice she manages to bake and try out recipes on them.

The women's team has always been small, between seven to nine runners. Being a captain of a small team also establishes close friendships and helpful motivators when teammates are plagued with a bad day.

"You don't feel good everyday but the few days you feel good and run good pushes you through the bad days and helps you motivate other teammates having a bad day," Geere said.

Junior Ann Meyer has been a teammate and fellow runner of Geere's for three years. "Sheila works extremely hard for everything she does, be it in school or in running. She is always on the go and it's a characteristic I admire," Meyer said.

Meyer went on to say that Geere is also competitive with her teammates and that it really helps them motivate and run harder during practices and at the meets.

Geere, along with her fellow teammates, is set for the conference meet on Saturday with hopes of qualifying for NAIA Nationals in the middle of November, the final meet of the season. But running doesn't stop here for Geere.

"I have one season of track left," Geere said, in which she will also be team captain. Here, Geere finished fifth in the 10 Kilometer at conference last season. "I hope to go down to the 5K."

After that, Geere will be looking for a job in the Food and Beverage area of her Hotel and Restaurant Management degree. "With my major I will run when I can. I would like to get more into weight lifting and biking," Geere said.

"Right now I will go where the opportunity takes me but I hope to own my own bar-restaurant," Geere said. Geere even hopes to try and make a recipe for the Pillsbury Bake-Off.

Feature

Geere is quickly winding down her cross country career with determination to break her personal record time and run under 19 minutes at conference as well as advance to NAIA Nationals.

Not considering herself a standout in either track or cross country in high school, Geere came to Stout to major in Hotel and Restaurant Management, which she will complete in May. In fact, Geere did not compete in cross country her freshman year due to her indecision about her abilities in the sport.

But Head Coach Lou Klitzke was quickly on her, sending letters to her between her freshman and sophomore years.

"I was out of shape my first year and didn't concentrate very much on my running," Geere said. Still, Geere ran about a 20 minute pace for her 3.2 mile race, making her the fifth runner on the team.

Geere decreased her twenty minute time to the 19:50's her sophomore year. At the close of the season she was awarded Most Team Spirit by her teammates. "After my sophomore year I was determined to be ready for my junior year and trained hard over the summer." Geere lifted weights every other day and ran 30 or more minutes each day. Geere also admitted to cutting back on her intake of ice cream — chocolate peanut butter revel at Flavour Haus — to every other day.

At the beginning of her junior year Geere added on the responsibilities of team captain. "I had to work hard to get respect because I wasn't the top runner," Geere said. Working hard to prove herself, Geere also earned Most Improved that year.

Coming into this season as team captain for the second year Geere knew what to expect and what to do and has consistently been the number one runner on the women's team.

ON THE RUN—
Senior captain Shelia Geere returns to the fieldhouse after a long day of training. Geere is Stout's all-time number three runner on the Blue Devils career cross country list. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

The Armchair Quarterback

Rough road ahead

Tom Roth

Looking ahead to the UW-Stout football team's final three games, things could never look so bleak in respect to the teams they face as the season nears its abrupt end.

In the Blue Devils' final three games, they will be pitted against Loras College and UW-River Falls on the road and finish out the season at home versus the Indians of UW-La Crosse.

Who are these guys called Loras? Kind of sounds like a girls' school from some hick town in Iowa that the Blue Devils J.V. team could beat with their hands tied. No, actually Loras College in Dubuque, Iowa used to be an all-male school and once terminated their football program, but now the Loras Duhawks have put together one of the strongest NAIA Division II programs in the country. The Duhawks have suffered only one loss this season and are currently one of the nation's leading independants.

After the long road trip to Dubuque, the Blue Devils will take their shortest road trip of the season to River Falls. The game against the first place Falcons will be a real challenge as will the season final with nationally ranked La Crosse.

Adding to the problems of the Blue Devils is their almost non-existent offense that has averaged just over six points a game during conference action this season. A main reason for their ineffectiveness lies mainly in the lack of consistency at the quarterback position, which is starting to sound like a broken record.

Starting quarterback Glenn Majszak broke his leg in the second game of the season last year and now suffers a rotator cuff injury from the seventh game of the season this year. He is expected to miss the remainder of the season.

Second string quarterback Bob Lindberg is also injured and has not played in the last two games, forcing Head Coach Bob Kamish to move a wide receiver and defensive back to the signal caller role. It was obvious these replacements were out of position as they combined for just two complete passes in 16 attempts with four interceptions in last week's loss to UW-Platteville. The ground game did not get any better as they accounted for just 130 total yards rushing.

But problems have plagued the offense all year as the Stout quarterbacks have completed less than one-third of all attempted passes, 33 out of 108, and their passing yardage has been more than tripled by their opponents. The Blue Devils have done a relatively good job establishing a ground game at times during the year, but still they have been missing that added punch.

After last week's disappointing homecoming loss to the Pioneers, 20-3, Kamish was quoted in the Leader-Telegram as saying, "It's downright frustrating. They've (Platteville) got three quarterbacks shuffling in and out and we don't have any that qualify as a quarterback."

By looks of things, the next three weeks are just going to keep getting a lot more frustrating. The Stout defense has kept most of the Devils games close this year, but its tough to ask the defense to score the points for the team also. The Blue Devils defense has been giving up an average of only two touchdowns a game in conference play, so it's hard to blame the defense.

With the Blue Devils mark standing at 3-5 for the season, it's going to take a lot of luck and prayers to pick-up a Blue Devils win or two in the next three weeks. Maybe a miracle!

Quarterback's Pick

UW-Stout at Loras, Iowa-The Blue Devils' offense these days is almost non-existent as the defense cannot carry the Devils completely. Loras is a solid team, which has suffered only one loss this season. They should pin another loss on the Blue Devils in this non-conference clash. Loras by 16.

Chicago at Green Bay-There's no chance, Packer fans, after last week's loss to the Colts. Chicago by 23.

Detroit at Minnesota-Minnesota should bounce back after last week's loss to Chicago. Minnesota by 6.

Indiana at Wisconsin-This will probably be the Badger's last chance to win a game the rest of the season. If they can put together an all-around solid performance they should win. Badgers by 7.

Minnesota at Michigan State-This will be a tough game for the Gophers if quarterback Ricky Foggie can't play. The Spartans will be fired up after last week's last-second victory over Purdue. Michigan State by 3.

Florida at Auburn-Bo Jackson will have a chance to prove he can run against the best when he leads Auburn against a tough Florida team. An upset by some. Auburn by 2.

Michigan at Illinois-The Wolverines proved they have recovered from their heartbreaking loss to Iowa two weeks ago by crushing Indiana last weekend, but Illinois has been coming on strong and should give the Wolverines a real run for their money. Michigan by 7.

Iowa at Ohio State-For the second time in three weeks the Hawkeyes will be facing a top ten opponent as the Buckeyes hopes of knocking off the nation's number one team will rest on the status of All-American tailback Keith Byars. Byars was reinjured last week and his status is questionable. Iowa by 3.

Spikers struggle for consistency yet continue to up season record

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's volleyball team had a productive week of dual and tournament play, starting with a gratifying upset of UW-Eau Claire on Tuesday, Oct. 22, at home. The Blue Devils beat Eau Claire 3-15, 15-11, 17-15. They lost that same evening to the UW-Oshkosh Titans by a score of 1-15 and 6-15.

Stout Coach Lynda Lee said, "The Eau Claire upset really renewed our confidence in ourselves. I wouldn't say it created a turning point, but it did spark some new life into the team and that was good to see."

The volleyballers faced Luther College also at home this past Friday, losing in a five-game match with scores of 15-11, 15-13, 8-15, 12-15, and 13-15.

The Lady Devils then traveled on Saturday to St. Paul, Minn., to compete in the Hamline Tournament. The team placed fourth out of seven teams, and now has a cumulative record of 16 and 28.

Lee commented on the weekend play stating, "We played a lot better as a team. Everyone tried to keep each other verbally motivated and this helped a great deal. We try to feel responsible for one another's feelings, and this is one technique we use to achieve this. We were also more conscious of where we should be on the court, and were hitting good around our blocks."

Some key players that helped the team play better as a unit were freshman Denise Zahm, and junior hitter Beckie Horsman. Lee said, "Beckie was out with an ankle injury earlier, and this past weekend she did real well coming in the back row. She was digging balls right and left and wasn't intimidated."

Horsman felt good going into the game saying, "I felt at an advantage when I went into the game because things on the team were working smoothly and it was easy to go in and get the job done. It was nice to be put back in."

Gaining some playing experience from the bench was Denise Zahm who put on a good performance when substituted in. Zahm said, "It's hard coming in off the bench. I have to stay into the game mentally and try to do my best at all times to help the team when they need me."

When asked about her motivation she said, "I've always been self-motivated and I want to do good for myself and for the team." Lee felt good about Zahm's performance saying, "I'm confident in the ability of my bench and the fact that I can put anyone in and get the job done."

Having only eleven members on the team has limited the Blue Devils' game plan, despite still having a strong bench. Some problems resulting from this are lack of motivation in starting players due to the fact that there are no threats to their positions. Lee said, "A coach likes to have reserves to motivate their starters."

Another problem is injuries. Substitutions are difficult when injuries occur on small teams. To compensate for this Lee practices everyone in all positions. "We only specialize in our front row so we'll have all skills available from other players. I feel doing this makes for well-rounded players and doesn't limit me as much."

The importance of having a winning team is reasoned to be a number one priority with many coaches. Lee feels strongly about having a winning team, but she explains, "By winning, I mean winning over half of our games. We have won thirty-five percent of our games this season, but what's important to me here is not the stats, but how they compare to last year's record. We have improved from last year, and that's what is important to me."

Some strategy problems plaguing the team are little things. Lee said, "Net and line violations and hitting into the net are just a few examples of the problems we're having. These things are avoidable, and yet they seem to plague us."

Some strength also needs to be gained in the front row. "The hitters and spikers need to be more aggressive. This is lacking up front, and we need more strength and explosiveness."

Stout hosts a home tournament this coming Saturday with matches starting at 9 a.m. Some competing teams will be St. Olaf, St. Mary's, Eau Claire varsity and junior varsity, and Rockford College.

Lee said, "I'm very excited about this. It's my first tournament I've had the chance to organize, and I want it to go real well. I feel the fans will help raise our confidence, since we're at home, and help in those deciding matches."

Accident claims life of Colfax resident

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

A 44 year-old Colfax man was run over and killed by a Dunn County grader at the intersection of Broadway and Highway 29 in Menomonie last Friday afternoon.

No citation was filed against the driver of the grader since the victim, Richard E. Treiber was not visible due to a V-shape snow plow mounted on the front of the grader. Witnesses said that Treiber was crouched down in the roadway beyond the crosswalk trying to retrieve items spilled from the back of his pick-up truck.

Officer Doug Briggs was patrolling the area at 2:30 p.m. when the accident occured and he filed this report. Treiber was driving his pick-up southbound on Broadway when he turned west onto Highway 29. Briggs reported that "when he had turned the corner, some of the garbage he had been hauling in the back of the pick-up truck had fallen on Highway 29 approximately four feet from the intersection of Highways 29 and 25."

The report indicates that Treiber was waved down by a passer-by and told about the debris which had fallen to the road. Treiber walked back up the road toward the intersection to pick up the debris.

Officer Briggs reported that "from my own observation it was confirmed that Treiber had been crouched down attempting to pick up the box in the roadway at the time he was struck by the grader."

"The victim got on his hands and knees to avoid the plow, but he couldn't get out of the way of the rest of it," Briggs said. "The grader continued while the victim was underneath it. I saw a portion of the undercarriage of the grader strike the victim and send him sprawling."

The grader was driven by Eugene Johnson, 42, of Route 1, Menomonie. Briggs questioned Johnson. "He advises that he had not seen Treiber in the roadway when he had turned onto Highway 29 and had been unaware that he had struck a person until he had looked back and observed the body," Briggs reported.

Inspection of the grader by Officer Briggs after the accident revealed that "at an angle for 30 degrees, which is the angle the operator should have been observing Highway 29 prior to turning onto it, a person of 6' 3" in height would have to be 75 feet away from the front of the grader before the operator of the grader could see him."

Richard Treiber was killed last Friday when a Dunn County grader ran over him. The object in the foreground is the box Treiber was retrieving when he was hit. The grader is pictured in the background where it came to a stop after the accident. Police Chief Dennis Beety (left in suit) inspects the site. (Stoutonia photo by Lary Derrah)

Incubator program at Stout benefits small business

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

In a world where small business is challenged by multi-million dollar corporations and over 75 percent of new businesses fail within a ten year period, Stout is offering a helping hand. The UW-Stout Small Business Incubator, a program sponsered by the School of Industry and Technology, has been created to help business projects get a successful start.

Lee Mathison, an adjunct faculty member and director of the program, said, "The idea is to help economic development by helping small businesses get started by providing them inexpensive space." Clients also have access to Stout's expertise and equipment. As Mathison stated, "We promise casual access to both expertise and equipment."

The incubator should be able to handle somewhere from four to six clients at a time, depending on the size and needs of each client. Approximately 25 clients are interviewed before one is found that is appropriate for entry into the program. After gaining access to the program, the client may remain at Stout for three years. After that time they must relocate to the private sector but may continue to work with the program.

Clients range from a one person operation run in a basement or garage to a satellite division of an existing business. Some of these companies require special facilities or have to be located a long distance from the main plant.

One business that has taken advantage of the program is Translab. David Brenholt, a graduate of Stout, had been working for Donaldson Co. Inc., and in 1976 became the manager of a special projects group designed to develop experimental equipment. When the group started creating patent potential projects that didn't fit Donaldson's markets or technologies, he came to Stout in

> We promise casual access to both expertise and equipment.
> — Lee Mathison Director

1979 with the intent of startirg a satellite operation near or on campus. The following summer, Brenholt and three other engineers moved the operation to a building across from Fryklund Hall. Since then, the group has developed a material processing machine, a cabinet collector for air ventilation systems, and several industrial robots. This past summer the group was incorporated into Translab and separated from Donaldson a month later.

Brenholt felt that Translab and Stout have a good working relationship. He said, "I think that part of it is that it's a loose relationship. A lot of it has to do with the faculty, their personalities, and their willingness to get involved in projects." He also commented on the programs and resources available at Stout. "It's a hands orientation. Frankly, that's what industry needs."

Another current incubator client is ConCad. Concad is a company that started in the home of Gerald Revelle in 1984. He began the company to develop computer systems with CADD software for small businesses, especially those in the fields of architecture, engineering, and drafting. Through ConCad, he determines the type of system a specific company needs, buys the system, and counsels the company on its use.

Revelle, who moved into the applied arts manufacturing lab last June, said, "Obviously Stout is aware of the difficulty in establishing a new business. Having the cushion of Stout around me iw very comforting. The offers of assistance have been overabundant."

The university also benefits from the incubator program. Clients of the small businesses in the program become more aware of Stout and its resources. Faculty and students are given the chance to face "real-life" problems and gain valuable experience in working with businesses. Benson said, "The business didn't just send the project over and tell us to work on it. We're working together."

Plans for early election

Manila, Philippines- President Ferdinand E. Marcos, acting after weeks of pressure from the United States and months of demands by opposition leaders, announced plans to call an early presidential election in January.

Marcos said he would call a caucus before Nov. 11 of his ruling New Society Party to discuss the plan, then submit to the Assembly a proposal apparently designed to sidestep constitutional requirements that he resign in the event of an early election.

Arms freeze in Europe

Helsinki, Finland- The United States has proposed a ceiling on American and Soviet strategic bombers and a freeze on nuclear missiles in Europe as part of a new arms control offer with Moscow, a senior U.S. official said.

Other key elements of the package now before Soviet negotiators in Geneva include a ceiling of 3,000 on long-range nuclear warheads and no limits on submarine launched cruise missiles.

World

Probe into leak of CIA plan

Washington, D.C.- President Reagan, demanding "approriate action" against the leak of classified information, ordered an investigation into the unauthorized disclosure of a secret CIA plan to undermine and topple the Libyan regime of Col. Moammar Khadafy.

The disclosures published in the Nov. 3 Washington Post, reported that Reagan, with support from Secretary of State George Schultz and CIA director William Casey, authorized a covert plan to thwart Libyan support for terrorism and subversion and lure Khadafy into a situation that would give his opponents in the Libyan military a chance to seize power or provide one of his U.S.-backed neighbors with justification for a military response.

State

Food stamps, AFDC on rise

Madison- Wisconsin's caseload for food stamps and Aid to Families with Dependent Children has been rising, state figures show.

The number of individuals and families obtaining food stamps jumped 27 percent from 104,785 in March of 1982 to 133,570 in March of 1985 according to State Department of Health and Social Services figures reviewed last week.

Scientific breakthrough accidental

Madison- University of Wisconsin wood chemist Raymound Young has discovered a new way to process pulpwood that may cut paper mill energy and production cost by 80 percent or more, cause virtually no air or water pollution and double pulp yields.

Young discovered, at least in part by accident, that combining water, acetic acid and ethyl acetate creates a remarkable solvent for dissolving lignin, the glue that hold wood fibers together.

Perspective

'No pass/no play'

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

It has long been acknowledged that while an individual receives an education, extracurricular activities can complement the academic environment and favorably contribute to the molding of a well-rounded person.

But the state of Texas has recently determined that, up to a point, academics come first. New state rules dictate that high school students who do not pass all of their classes with at least a 70 percent average will not be allowed the privilege of participating in extracurrricular activities.

The end of October saw teachers "benching" 15 percent of varsity football players and approximately 40 percent of second stringers for six weeks, the time of the next grade evaluation period. Band members, cheerleaders, etc. also fell victim to the new guidelines.

In addition to Texas, six other states and various locales have adopted similar standards.

Twenty-one percent of the football players in Savannah, Georgia were sidelined this season. Quoted in the Nov. 4, 1985 issue of U.S. News & World Report, Savannah School Superintendent Ronald Etheridge explained, "Here, you earn the uniform in the classroom first and on the field second."

Forty-one percent of the students in Prince George's County, Maryland were barred from extracurricular activities because they too failed to maintain the minimum grade requirements.

Other school districts which adopted the policy last year have already realized substantial improvement in student grade point averages. The number of ineligible high school students in Los Angeles, comparing the Fall of 1984 to the Spring of 1985, fell from 21 percent to 16 percent, respectively.

In judging the public's sentiment toward the new guidelines, a recent Gallup Poll found that nine out of 10 adults support the principle that students should be required to maintain a predetermined grade point average in order to participate in extracurricular activites.

Yet although the Governor of Texas strongly supports the new "no pass/no play" guidelines, the Texas State Supreme Court has declared the law, which was passed by the Texas State Legislature, to be unconstitutional.

The no pass/no play legislation was recommended by an educational commission headed by billionaire industrialist H. Ross Perot. Perot is quoted in the Nov. 4, 1985 issue of Newsweek as being shocked to find that "the typical high school senior was spending 15 minutes a night per subject on homework and 20 hours a week on extracurriculars."

Texas high school students currently rank approximately 46 nationally in regard to their performance on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT).

Attitudes of students revealed by study

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

A study focusing on UW-Stout student's perceptions of Menomonie businesses showed that overall, students are pleased with local services.

This was the question addressed by Students and Community Resources: An Attitudinal Study. The study was done by three associate professors in Stout's Social Science Department: Dr. Bruce Pamperin, Willard Bailey, and Richard Tyson.

Nearly 500 questionnaires about Menomonie businesses were distributed Oct. 25, 1984, and two weeks later, 291 of them were returned.

The study is based on the 291 replies to the questionnaire, the major part of which contained the scale-type questions do you strongly disagree, disagree, remain undecided, agree or strongly agree. There were also four open-ended questions included to "assess reasons for satisfaction or dissatisfaction, the degree to which respondents felt they were treated differently by local merchants, and what additional services they would like to see provided," according to the study's questionnaire description.

Satisfaction variables on the questionnaire included:
- Price.
- Comparison shopping or the ability to compare one store to another.
- Meeting needs.
- Friendliness.
- Variety.
- Resolving disagreements.
- Atmosphere.
- Check cashing without a purchase.
- Paying for goods by check.

There were satisfaction variables pertaining specifically to alcohol consumption:
- Encouragement of responsible drinking.
- Adequate eating and drinking. Can you eat as well as drink in the bar?
- Price of non-alcoholic drinks.
- Control of drunk and problem patrons.

There were also satisfaction variables dealing specifically with banking:
- Local savings accounts. Do you keep them here or at home?
- Local checking accounts. Kept here or at home?
- Familiarity with differences between checking and saving services.
- Check cashing at banks where you don't have an account.
- Frequency and fairness of overdraft penalities.
- Familiarity with money market funds.
- Student loan knowledge.

Personal knowledge asked in order to better describe the population was sex, age, class standing, access to car, hometown size, housing type, and state or country origin.

All in all, students seem satisfied with Menomonie businesses.

Students also have favorable opinions of the satisfaction variables in Menomonie services.

The survey points out many interesting facts, including:
- Women rate Menomonie services higher than men do.
- Underclassmen rate services higher than upperclassmen do.
- Non-Wisconsin residents are happier with Menomonie businesses than are Wisconsin residents.

Students and Community Resources: An Attitudinal Study seeks also to clarify the "town-gown relationship."

It ends with several pages of recommendations, summarized by: "These recommendations, if followed, could be expected to assist the Menomonie and Stout communities in addressing some of the issues and problems facing them. In particular, the enhancement of positive recreational alternatives to alcohol would do much to create an atmosphere where the university and community could focus their attention on helping the "whole student" move into leadership roles.

Also, the Menomonie business community could use these findings and recommendations to strengthen their relationships with the students by designing services and improving the delivery of those services so as to encourage students to take advantage of their offerings. Finally, the recommendations would help to give a focus for planning modifications in student/community relationships far into the future."

Indians' hunting and fishing rights disputed

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

As the abrupt drop in temperature cools things down, the dispute heats up concerning fishing and hunting rights in northern Wisconsin.

Ray DePerry, Executive Administrator of the Great Lakes Indian Fish and Wildlife Commission, will add his special insight to the problem when he speaks at Mabel Tainter Theater next Tuesday evening, Nov. 12 at 8 p.m.

DePerry leaves no doubt concerning the problem's gravity, "It is upon these precious rights that, as Indian people, our survival depends."

Chippewa Indians and the area's white residents were thought close to being "at war in the woods" almost two years ago.

A Minneapolis Star and Tribune article two weeks ago stated that "There are still dire predictions that the Indians are going to cripple the area's fragile economy by killing most of the deer and ruining the fishing."

Recently, Indians have gone to court to assert their rights to hunt and fish on the land they gave up in treaties with the federal government more than 130 years ago.

The Indians stipulated in those treaties that they were giving up the land only if they retained the right to hunt and fish on the land.

Ray DePerry is a 35-year-old Chippewa Indian with a B.S. degree in social welfare received from UW-Eau Claire in 1970 and a J.D. degree from the Antioch School of Law he received in 1982.

Prior to his current position on the Great Lakes Indian Fish and Wildlife Commission, DePerry was the tribal attorney for the Red Cliff Chippewa tribe.

DePerry's concern for minority rights is displayed by the fact that he was the director of Minority Services Offices at UW-River Falls from August, 1973 through May, 1978.

DePerry should be able to open some eyes and clear up questions audience members have about the origins of this cultural conflict.

To date, the actions of groups conflicting with the Indians is reminiscent of the violent reactions of white racists in America to proposed changes in civil rights during the 1960s.

According to the Minneapolis Star and Tribune signs have been seen posted in the north woods with the message "Save a Deer, Shoot an Indian." Scare tactics were used last year such as typed sheets left around public buildings stating that the 1984 big game season was being closed and that instead, there would be an open season on "Smokes, also known as Injuns, Bows and Arrows and War Hoops."

It is apparent that DePerry wants to help save the Indian cultural life style by opening communicative pathways between Indians and white Americans.

The 8 p.m. presentation Tuesday night at Mabel Tainter Theater is brought to you by the University Speakers Series Commission.

Stout alumni contribute revenue to 'Toward Century II' campaign

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Libraries, conservation, good roads, improved opportunities for blacks, and greater independence for women are all good ideas that are routinely accepted today. But that wasn't so back in the 1890's when Senator James H. Stout was putting together the plan for a new type of school. In 1893 when a manual tranining building was erected, where Bowman Hall now stands, such a school began; the beginning of UW-Stout.

Now Stout is approaching the 1990's and "Century II." In the years since that first building was erected, Stout has grown from a privately owned manual tranining school to a University of Wisconsin system school known world wide for its academic excellence. To maintain this excellence, the "Toward Century II" alumni campaign was formed through the authorization of the Board of Directors of the Stout University Foundation and Chancellor Robert Swanson.

The base goal of the campaign is one million dollars with a challenge goal of two million dollars. Currently revenue for the university comes from the state (44 percent), tuition and fees (26 percent), and auxillary enterprises (20 percent). The revenue raised by the fundraiser will be used to fund the following projects: faculty and staff developments will receive $500,000, instructional equipment will receive $375,000, and the library will receive $425,000. $400,000 are marked for curriculum development and instructional improvement while renovation of the Louis-Smith-Tainter will get $150,000. The remainder of the $2,000,000 will go into annual funds.

According to Patricia Reisinger, Associate Director of Development and Educational Development for Alumni Services, the campaign already had $300,000 in pledges at the alumni kickoff the Saturday of homecoming weekend. She stated that one "major" contribution was given to the Alumni Association at the homecoming kickoff and that they are working with many other possible donors. Approximately $800,000 has been pledged already and Reisinger estimates that there are approximately 22,000 alumni that have yet to be contacted. The alumni are asked to donate through a "you plus two" plan. The way the plan works is "you" take your 1985 income, plus two percent, to equal a three year pledge. An example is if you make $100,000 a year, two percent would be $2,000, and three years would equal a pledge of $6,000.

"The money is for Stout and Stout's future," Reisinger stressed. "The program is designed to enhance your university. It's being done for you the student. The people who are already out don't receive the benefits, you do."

Lack of action hinders security corrections

The members of this university community were outraged, and justifiably so, when one of their own was sexually assaulted in a residence hall during the early morning hours of Sept. 6.

Within the past two months since the incident occured the perpetrators have been apprehended, charged, tried, convicted and sentenced.

Stout Protective Services, the Menomonie Police Department and the district attorney's office can be applauded on the expedient manner in which the incident was handled.

This same outrage translated into a multitude of groups and individuals scrambling to develop and implement short and long-term solutions to insure that the liklihood of another physical violation would be greatly reduced.

Yet for all the early good intentions, administration and student planners have accomplished little or nothing in tangible results to safeguard against an occurence.

Even though some lights have been installed on previously poorly illuminated walkways, some still exist. The path behind Applied Arts, leading to 6th street, is one such example.

And although the Stout Student Association (SSA) and Inter-Residence Hall Council (IRHC) have both stressed the need for and willingness to develop campus escort services, the lack of a campus-wide escort service still leaves most students fearing for their personal safety when walking after dark.

Rather than more of the ever present and ineffectual business as usual, a security analysis of the campus should be done to specifically determine the steps needed to lessen the probability of another physical violation.

The administration and student leaders can then pool their resources to solve each security analysis recommendation, one at a time, as opposed to "spinning their wheels" by attempting to solve all of the campus's safety ills at once.

But before something as positive and constructive as this can occur, all those involved must put aside their jurisdictional disputes and for a time ignore their own vested interests.

Otherwise, another student may be physically violated while those in charge debate whether a safety problem actually exists.

The Bottom Line

Point/counterpoint

Rich Brueckner

It has been noted that my Male Slut column was crude and disgusting. I would like those who were offended to know that I did exercise some discretion in editing out a portion describing Maggots and "hogs." I won't get into it now but I think that John Irving described it best; "Finesse is no substitute for love."

There was an article in Newsweek recently called "Campus Sex: New Fears," which mentioned that the University of California has a "Condom Awareness Day." The possible agenda staggers the imagination. Maybe the "fears" of its effectiveness lie in the fact that people using condoms are already painfully aware of them while doing so.

Obviously, fear of it is not felt by all. A recent survey here on campus showed that 80 percent of those polled were for pre-marital sex. Newsweek concurs with this quote; "Basically what it comes down to is that we're all horny optimists," shrugs Anna, a senior at the University of Texas. I hope this is the case because I can't think of anything more terrifying than a horny pessimist.

Congress seems to have a handle on all this sex business. They are concerned that there is a definite link between rock music and depraved behavior. I wonder if their investigation revealed what that one representative was listening to before he was discovered "boofing" his male page?

Congress has all the answers. Since they ran out of money to run the Federal Government with, they decided to borrow from the Social Security fund. Student aid and farm credit assistance are going to receive major cuts. It seems that everyone is going to have to share the burden of getting spending under control. But wait, Congressman are planning to vote themselves a hefty pay raise next year. It's good to know ahead of time that we should run for office if we ever want to retire. That might be tough though if we can't even afford to eat or get an education.

Trashy grocery store periodicals should have a field day with the recent 60 Minutes story about the Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh. I don't know how they can call him a phony. Anybody who is still alive after taking 60 mg. of Valium per day must have some heavy connections upstairs.

Brokers of enlightenment remind us that the time of year is fast approaching when hunters will return to the woods in search of the big buck. Classic arguments are best left to the professionals. Weekend Update's own Jane Curtin and Dan Akroyd will voice the Point/Counterpoint.

Jane: Dan, every year you and your sloven drinking buddies convene for this ancient all-night poker ritual, after which you slaughter poor, defenseless, furry little animals. What chance does a peaceful vegetarian stand against a high-powered rifle? You stuff and mount them on the wall like they were the result of some life-endangering safari. I think it's sick, you gun-toting adolescent commando!"

Dan: Jane, you ignorant slut! Maybe if you spent less time on widow-weekend hunting for meat at male strip joints, you would realize that the deer we take are of an over-population. Too many dear would consume all their food supply before winter ended. They would then all die and bleeding-heart animal rights activists like you would have nothing to complain about. Who did you sleep with to get this job? Maybe the both of you should do the deer a favor and post white flags in the forrest on opening day, you left-wing sleazy bitch!"

Whatever your stance on any of the absurdly presented issues I write about -- please do not take them as a personal attack. Steve Martin once said that "Comedy is not pretty." When it comes to otherwise boring, neutral issues, I think the best pretense is a strong nonsense.

Growing number of non-traditional students will implement changes

The NON-TRADITIONAL student (Non-Trad) has become more apparent on the college scene. In fact, statistics show that in five more years the Non-Trad will occupy half of the college campus nationwide. This growing trend abounds and the college campus needs to make adjustments.

Guest

The needs of the Non-Trad bring about special demands to both college policies and programs. These demands are being met on a small scale. Some of the services now being offered are the orientation night, the Peer Mentoring Program, the non-trad information pamphlet and a study skills class for the Non-Trad. All of these services help to ease the transition of the Non-Trad. Yet, one must look at the Non-Trad to realize why they have these special demands.

Non-Trads come from a variety of backgrounds and experiences, each having to make a major change in their lifestyle, such as having to uproot their family, in order to enter into the college environment. Many decide to seek out a career. Others are making a mid-career change. And still others return after being unable to find employment in the work force.

A Non-Trad encounters several things in their first semester. First, they have to relearn the role of student unlike the Trad student who enters college familiar with this role. They not only need to relearn the role of student, but add it to a collection of other roles they have gained. Secondly, most Non-Trads are unsure of what they have gotten themselves into as they walk into that first class. Thirdly, the Non-Trad suffers social isolation. They come to school lacking a social support network, and often encounter non-acceptance from the traditional student. Most Non-Trads live off-campus decreasing in this availability of a supportive peer group.

Vicky Weiley

The Non-Traditional students of this campus envy the benefits that the traditional student can offer, and Trads seem to be reluctant to share these benefits. They can offer Non-Trad new and young ideas. This helps the Non-Trad to keep their minds open. They can also help by supporting many of the functions that the Non-Trad sponsors, because they need to know that they are accepted within the community.

The Non-Trads have many needs, but they can offer many things to the campus. One thing they can give is the socialization with different age groups. This is always needed when one enters into the "real world." Another item of importance is the benefit of life experience that has been acquired by the Non-Trad. This can help in knowing some of the ins and outs of a particular profession. Lastly the Non-Trad is more than willing to make these contributions to the campus.

Contributions like those offered can help others to understand and recognize the additional needs that are still left unfufilled. The unmet needs vary with each Non-Trad.

To begin with, an advisory system for academic ability is a necessity away from the school environment for any length of time. Following this is the desire for financial aids based on need rather than academic achievement, because there are many who have additional cost, such as child-care services. Besides these two items there is the want of a program allowing Non-Trads to receive credits for their life experiences. Next is the need for a low cost day-care center for the children of the Non-Trads. Finally, a housing list that provides a listing of adequate housing for single-parent/two parent families, married couples, etc. These special demands can only be met with the awareness of others. The Non-Trad can then feel the ease of transition and enjoy their college years more fully.

The time is coming where the classes will equally be shared by traditional and Non-Trad students alike. Let our campus start to realize this fact now, so that in the future we all can learn and support one another.

Editorial unfair

I am writing in regard to your editorial "Hall Governments Lack Elements of Democracy" in the Oct. 31 issue. I have been involved with two seperate hall councils for a period of three and one-half years as either a floor representative, executive board member or a resident advisor and I believe the accusations presented in your article are unfair and untrue.

In my experience with hall council, the rules outlined by the Inter Residence Hall Association (IRHA) have been strictly followed. Executive Board members are not allowed to move, second or vote on main motions or any other business. Furthermore, the idea of the Executive Board appointing IRHA committee members with "like-minded people that the votes of the floor representative would be rendered useless" does not affect voting because they are not allowed to move, second or vote on issues either. However, they are and should be allowed to voice their opinions at hall council meetings because they are in fact residents of the hall.

Also, since I was a member of the SSA government (University Student Senate) for one year, I know for fact that the IRHA and the SSA are two seperate bodies; therefore, not allowing the SSA constitution committee to review the residence halls constitutions and "require them to make necessary changes which all recognized committees of the SSA are required to do." The residence halls and IRHA are not recognized committees of the SSA, they are their own working body.

In addition, you need not worry about "urging hall council floor representatives to obtain copies of their hall's constitution..." because every floor representative receives their own copy at the beginning of the year and are urged (by executive board members) to read them and realize that they are important members of hall council with a lot of influence. The problem is not that the floor representatives are not allowed to voice their opinions, the problem lies in lack of participation on their part and the entire hall as a whole.

So as you can see, hall councils are not "mockeries of a democratic system they have long abused," they are organized bodies who work very hard to better their living atmosphere. Instead of picking apart Hall Councils and Executive Boards, why don't you commend them for all the time and effort they do put into their nine-month homes?

Why not work with this large body which makes up 40 percent of Stout students and help with the real problems facing them? We need your support, not your comdemnation.

Julie Koller,
South Hall Resident Advisor

Editor's note: The Stoutonia has obtained copies of the Fleming and JTC residence hall by-laws. The Fleming by-laws state that IRHA committee representatives may move, second and vote on main motions. The JTC by-laws state that executive board members may move, second and vote on main motions.

Democracy does exist

I am writing in reference to your editorial of Thursday, Oct. 31, "Hall Governments Lack Elements of Democracy." I have been involved in two separate hall councils (committee chairperson and resident advisor) and have known many people who have been involved in other hall councils. The problem you address in your CAMPUS SLANT/ Has the removal of the canteen in the library caused problems?

Tom Cliver,

I'm totally against it (lack of refreshments) because it's a right of the students. It's nice to have a break from studying and not have to walk across the street. I'd like to see the pop machines back here and the candy vending machines. I have to bring my own stuff either from home or buy it from the Union.

Mauricio Marin,
Sophomore,
Business Administration

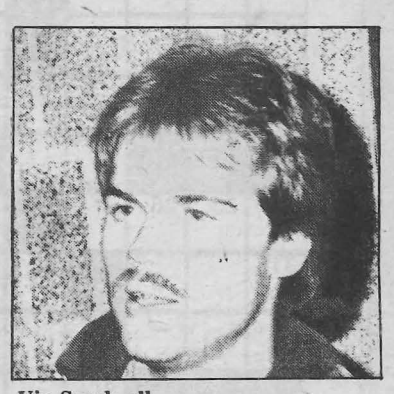
We should have a right to buy refreshments in this building because we study here. I think it's a hassle to walk across the street, especially in the winter. I'd like to see sodas and snacks like they had before. I know they took it out because people were drinking and eating outside of the canteen.

Jo Beharry,
Graduate,
Clothing and Textile Design

People still use food and drinks throughout the library. They put it in their bags. By allowing people to bring their own food into the lounge, it does deter this problem, but it doesn't stop it. I understand why they took the refreshments out but it doesn't solve the problem because people still do it.

Sue Davis,
Senior,
Child Development and Family Life

People are here to study, some for four or five hours. It's kind of nice to have a can of pop or eat something. This way it makes people have to leave here and go over to the Union. It takes away from study time. In the past, I would go in and sit down at the study lounge, and I would get a can of Coke and relax.



Vic Sundvall,
Junior,
Industrial Education

The refreshments should be returned to the canteen. I think the problem in the past was destruction of property. If students take drinks outside of the canteen, which they are not supposed to do, it will continue to be a problem. If there is a way they can keep the beverages in the canteen then there will be no problem.

editorial 1 have not come upon once.

Both of these hall councils followed the rules of their by-laws to the letter. These by-laws consequently are approved by the IRHA and do not come under the jurisdiction of the SSA. I also must question your source of information for this editorial comment. Did you actually sit in on each of the nine hall's hall council meetings? Exactly what was your primary source of information? You must have some sort of substantial evidence to back up such a severe accusation.

Your editorial has potential to do damages to an important and vital institution within the residence halls — a place which I feel has done an admirable and beneficial service to its constituants.

Before you accuse the entire hall council system as being "mockeries of a democratic system they have long abused" maybe you should take a long, hard look at the problems faced by the hall councils. Here are a few problems which I have noticed and hear about: Lack of involvement by floor representatives who usually do not use their voice in the issues that affect them or lack of support by the residents themselves who usually are the first to crititcize and the last to get involved. Or what about the fact that the people who usually put the most time and effort into hall council activities are a few floor representatives (usually the same), committee chairpersons and members of the Executive Board and Resident Advisor staff?

I think the space devoted in your newspaper to this editorial on a virtually nonexistant issue could have been constructively used to address other problems faced by Hall Council. I am sure if you consulted any committee chairperson, executive board member, resident advisor or hall director they would have a lot of suggestions.

Poor coverage

I am dismayed by The Stoutonia's poor coverage of this year's Homecoming activities. A lot more went on over Homecoming Week than drinking and the football game. The parade, which received two color pictures on the front page of the Eau Claire Leader Telegram, received no pictures or even mention in The Stoutonia.

was attended by approximately 850 persons, this event was also neglected by your reporters and photographers. The Coronation Dance featuring Bacchus Lotus (who've opened for the band Survivor) was also missed by your staff. All of these events are paid for by students and planned by the Special Events Commission. I feel that The Stoutonia, also a student funded organization, has a little more responsibility to cover student funded and planned activities than it showed in its post-Homecoming issue.

Halls 'do' work

In response to your Editorial in the Oct. 31 issue of The Stoutonia entitled, "Hall governments lack elements of democracy," we would like to take this time to respond. We are pleased to see that you and your editorial staff are concerned with the governance of residence hall students. As we planned our goals for the year, we recognized inconsistencies in hall by-laws and planned for review and revision within the timetable of our term of office.

We would like to clarify a few points. Halls do not have constitutions; rather by-laws which must be in accordance with the IRHA Constitution and By-laws. In addition, eight of the nine halls supply their floor representatives with a copy of by-laws and the ninth hall is revising their by-laws. We feel that because hall leaders are elected by their residents and the by-laws are passed by hall councils, discretion is granted to hall leaders.

In addition, these people do not select IRHA committee people or chairpersons, nor does the IRHA Executive Board. These people are volunteers. Chairpersons are selected within each respective committees. Lastly, as it is pointed out in the Merger Statute, IRHA does not need to be recognized by SSA because IRHC is seen as the governing body of the residence halls, and therefore, the SSA Constitution Committee review of hall by-laws is unnecessary.

In the past, all concerns raised by residence hall students about residence hall government have been addressed. We encourage all concerned residents to address their concerns to hall executives or IRHA Executives.

Campuses monitored

The following statement was recently passed unanimously by the Board of Directors of the United States Student Association (USSA). It reflects the grave concern of students across the nation for the preservation of academic freedom — the cornerstone of quality higher education.

We are concerned about the threat of academic freedom from a new organization called "Accuracy in Academia" (AIA), which was formed by "Accuracy in Media" to "combat the dissemination of misinformation.". AIA encourages students in classrooms to record professors' statements and send them to AIA, who will determine whether they are correct. AIA says that it will ask the professors to acknowledge alleged errors and will publicize the professors' names and "incorrect" statements.

We strongly oppose such activities for the following reasons:

•The classroom is a place of learning where the professor serves as intellectual guide, and all are encouraged to seek and express the truth as they see it. The presence in the classroom of monitors for an outside organization, which intends to decide what is accurate and then name professors it says are not, will inhibit academic freedom. Students will be discouraged from testing their ideas and professors will hesitate before presenting new or possibly controversial theories that would stimulate robust intellectual discussion.

•AIA announces that it is interested in combating misinformation, but in seeking accuracy in the complex world of ideas, it approaches its task with a clear and narrow mindset. The call is for accuracy in academia, but the goal is conformity with AIA's particular cast of mind. We oppose efforts by persons and groups, whether from the right or the left and whatever their special interests, to shut down classes or prevent speakers from being heard.

•AIA's claim that it can assess the correctness of what is said in the classroom is not only arrogant but hollow. The quality of academic performance is necessarily judged and controlled through peer evaluation by skilled professionals. Supervision of the evaluation process resides in boards of trustees that are responsible for ensuring both accountability and academic integrity while safeguarding the university from undue influence by politicians and pressure groups such as AIA.

We encourage colleges and universities to resist this assault on institutional integrity by reaffirming established practices for insuring professional responsibility and academic freedom. We encourage legislators to continue their respect for that academic autonomy which has enabled colleges and universities to serve the public interest rather than the special interests of political groups. We encourage the public to continue their support for the tradition of academic freedom essential to a democratic, diverse and free society.

Internal problems limit SSA actions again

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The University Student Senate discussed improving campus contact with Menomonie City Council members Tuesday night. Senate members argued about redefining excused absences for SSA members at their meetings and they unanimously approved the '86-'87 academic calendar as approved by the Faculty Senate.

City Councilman Jay Schroeder asked that the SSA approve the installation of information booths in the Student Center and the Commons so City Council members could meet more often with students and learn about the issues concerning them.

Schroeder is an upperclassman at UW-Stout who presented his concerns about avoiding polarization of relations between the campus community and the city council.

An amendment to article seven section three of the Legislative By-Laws concerning the SSA president's discretionary power to determine unexcused absences was raised for discussion. Senator Barb Caron moved to amend part of section three that reads "An unexcused absence shall be made upon the discretion of the President of the Stout Student Association," by striking it from the Legislative By-Laws.

SSA President Jo Ann Prange pointed out that there was already an amendment on the floor and that Caron's amendment could only be brought up as a separate motion.

Initially, confusion existed about what to do next as the senate seemed concerned that their wishes concerning unexcused absences not go unrecognized. Caron withdrew her amendment to the amendment and raised the motion to the Constitution which must be tabled for three weeks until they vote on it.

Staff Advisor Bill Siedlecki raised the point that the U.S.S. has failed to get serious action completed at their meetings time and again. He critically assessed their problems as resulting from the fact they hadn't taken the time to properly prepare themselves so they could take action without running into technical restrictions that they should have anticipated prior to their meetings.

President Prange appeared disturbed about the controversy concerning her discretionary powers involving unexcused absences of senate members. Prange said, "Working on internal issues like this makes us look like an ineffective body." She wished they would "channel these energies into external issues."

It was announced that Women's Affairs desperately needs a woman to take over the vacancy left by Tracy Lea Landis' departure.

IRHC Senator Peggy Coughlin revealed the mnemonics she received from the UW-La Crosse Residence Hall Association Council using the words dorm and residence hall. The mnemonic DORM is offered to you this week standing for Dismal Ordinary Room of Mine. Next week's mnemonic RESIDENCE HALL will be given to you.

It was incorrectly reported last week that Wisconsin Governor Anthony Earl will be here on Thursday, Nov. 14 to sign the bill approving renovation of the Johnson Fieldhouse. SSA President Prange will visit Governor Earl in Madison on that day. Governor Earl will be here Monday, Nov. 18 according to Prange.

Aspects of various cultures to be presented at international dinner

Barb Caron
News Reporter

How many times have you sat daydreaming of the ultimate trip around the world? Wake up and stop dreaming. Nov. 9 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center you can take that trip around the world that you've always dreamed about. The International Relations Club (IRC) will be holding their annual International Dinner that evening starting at 5 p.m.

The theme of this year's dinner "We are the World" will take diners around the globe with the 237 foreign students who represent 30 different countries here at Stout. The purpose of the International Dinner is two fold. The IRC hopes the dinner will allow for better visability and understanding of the cultural differences between the foreign students with other students, faculty, and members of the community. The IRC also hopes to whet the appetite of those on attendance with the many delicious dishes which will be prepared by the students from the various countries they represent.

The evening will begin at 5 p.m. in the Great Hall with exhibits from the different countries. At 6 p.m. dinner will be served which will include traditional dishes from the various countries represented at the dinner. Following the dinner at 8 p.m. a cultural show will be presented. This show will feature songs, dances, music, films, and a fashion show. The fashions will include traditional wear of every day, special occasion wear, and ceremonial wear. The grand finale of the cultural show will feature a rendition of the song "We are the World" made popular by the singing group USA for Africa. The finale will be backed by a newly formed band that will also be performing some of their own music.

The cost of the IRC International Dinner is $10 for adults, and $5 for children under 12. Tickets can be purchased at the Student Service Center in the Memorial Student Center, and First Bank and Trust of Menomonie on Main Street.

Nuclear disarmament goal of marchers

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

"If you don't like the nuclear arms race, take a hike" is the theme for the Great American Peace March organized by Pro-Peace, a nonprofit peace organization.

The march, scheduled to begin on March 1, 1985, is "not your run-of-the-mill walk" according to organizers. Approximately 5,000 marchers will leave their homes, jobs, and schools to walk 15 miles a day for 255 days, for a total of 3,235 miles across the entire nation from Los Angeles to Washington D.C. Their goal; global nuclear disarmament.

The logistics are staggering for what CBS News has termed "the largest civilian undertaking in history." The 5,000 plus marchers will be served 3,825,000 meals; over 20,000 pairs of shoes will be worn out; 2,500 tents will be set up and taken down each night; and 1,275,00 showers will be taken daily along the route. The mobile village the march reassembles each day will be larger than many of the communities it passes along the route.

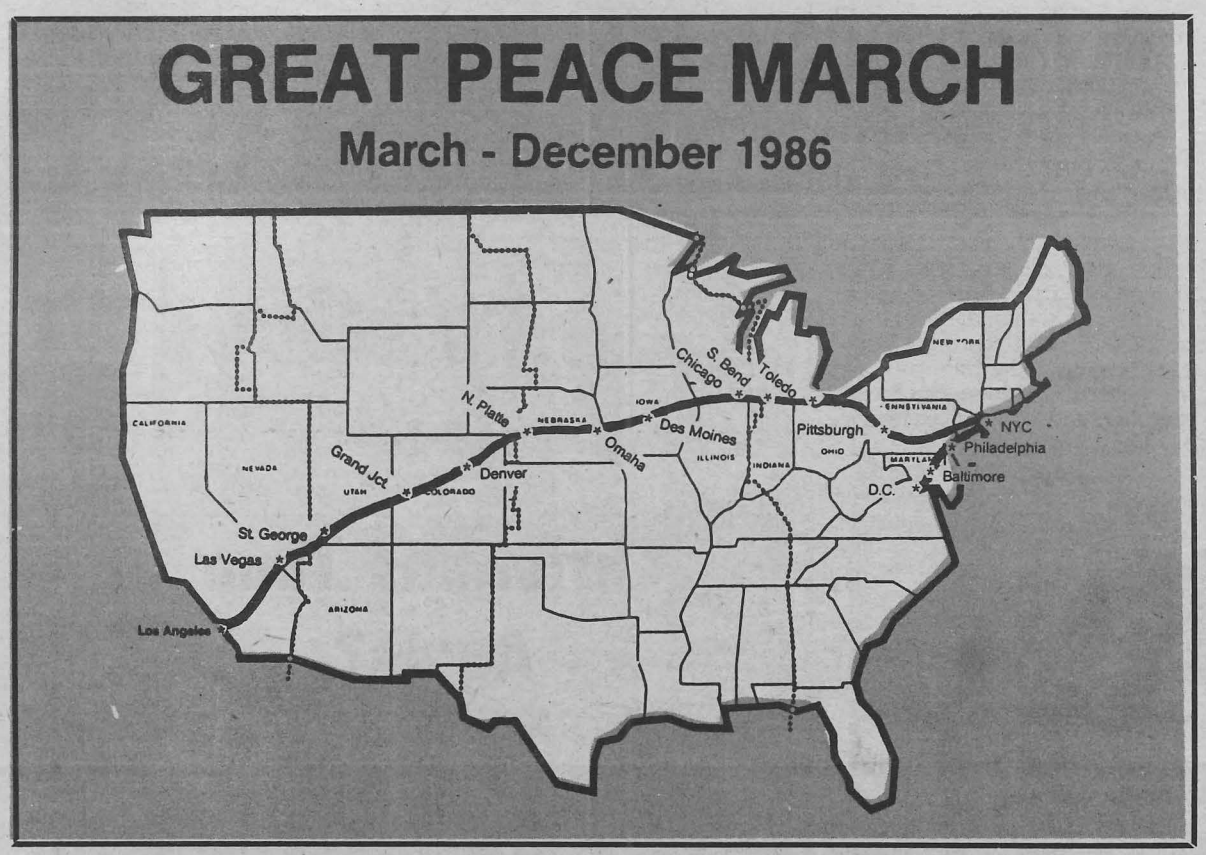
Starting in the Los Angeles Coliseum, the march will pass through Las Vegas, St.George, Utah, Loveland Pass in the Rocky Mountains (elevation 12,000), Denver, and the Great Plains of the Midwest. The march will continue through Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, New York City, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. At the destination of the march, Washington D.C., will be a candlelight vigil and demonstration to stress worldwide disarmament.

"Environmental protection is a major priority," stated march organizer Steve Perkins. "We will use electric cars for much of our shuttling, no live plant will be cleared, and people power instead of machinery will accomplish most of the work. A conservation corps will scour each site once the march moves on."

The inspiration for the march came from the niece of David Mixner, the founder and Executive Director of Pro-Peace. The seven-year-old told him that she was going to die in a nuclear war. The moment was so moving for Mixner that he decided to do something about it. He cites two reasons for the choice of such a complex means to get the message across.

First, "People have lost hope and the belief they can make any difference." Second, "Members of Congress have made it very clear that nothing will happen to dramatically affect the arms race until there is, literally, a citizen uprising." The march, Mixner reasons, will both restore people's faith in their own power and compel world leaders to respond.

The nearest point the march will come to Menomonie is the Chicago area. At this point there is little being planned to coincide with the march according to SSA officials. Student interest in the march is needed to justify such action.



Desperately seeking tenant's rights

Dear Patty,

We lived in an apartment last year, 1984-85. We signed a lease that had a clause which automatically renewed or extended the lease unless the tenant or landlord gives notice that they do not want to extend the lease term. Is this legal?

Signed, Timothy S.

Dear Tim,

Leases are normally terminated at the end of the lease term. The date on which the lease ends is usually stated in the lease, but, if not, use the starting date and the length of the lease to determine the date of termination. If there is no renewal clause of any kind, the tenant must move out on the proper date to avoid risking penalties.

Many leases have clauses which renew or extend the lease automatically unless the tenant or the landlord gives notice that they don't want to extend it. This notice has to be given to the other party a specified number of days before the original lease is up. However, the landlord must notify the tenant in writing 15 to 20 days in advance of the time when the tenant must give notice to the landlord not to renew. Without this warning, the tenant cannot be forced into an automatic renewal of the lease (Wis. s. 704.15).

Feature

If a landlord hasn't given proper notice to the tenant of an automatic renewal clause, the tenant can choose to accept the automatic renewal or move out at the end of the lease with no further responsibility to the landlord.

If the tenant chooses to stay, the landlord cannot raise the amount of the rent in a new lease agreement. This is because the landlord failed to notify the tenant of lease changes in the 15 to 30 days prior to the automatic renewal clause taking effect. The tenant can interpret this to mean that a new lease will be in force with the same conditions as the old lease (including the amount of rent). This is an advantage to the tenant.

All of this is a bit complicated, but these provisions of the law are designed to make sure that a tenant is not trapped into another year-long lease.

Some leases contain clauses which renew the original lease on a month-to-month basis after the lease if up. With this type of clause, the landlord doesn't have to warn the tenant of the lease renewal. Therefore, the tenant has to remember to give notice if he or she doesn't want to become a month-to-month tenant at the end of the lease term. The length of notice is not specified in most leases, but to be safe, the tenant should give a 28-day notice.

Stout Greek community hopes to unite

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Approximately 15 percent of UW-Madison's campus are members of a fraternity or sorority. Approximately three percent of the UW-Stout campus are greek. Although that is a large difference and may be due to different circumstances, the greeks on our campus may become more visible as they unite.

The Inter Greek Council (IGC) is helping to unite the fraternities and sororities and will be participating in the Organizational Fair on January 21 where each organization will have the opportunity to present themselves.

Every Monday night there is a meeting of the IGC with representatives from each greek organization on campus. Scott Samuels, IGC President and member of Sigma Tau Gamma, feels that by working together as a group they can unite the greeks on campus.

Sigma Tau Gamma is a national fraternity that is interested in developing social skills, leadership, establishing business contacts, alumni relations and promoting brotherhood, fellowship and lifeiong friendships. There is a six week pledging period during which pledges learn the history of the chapter, demonstrate leadership skills and meet other people in the fraternity. Although they do no hazing, they do have an "Inspiration Week". Dewey Rothering, president of Sigma Tau Gamma said "We are not an 'Animal House' type organization."

Alpha Phi President Karyn Heuer said that the purpose of their national organization is social. Their philanthropy is the Heart Fund and at this time are working on the Blood Mobile. They also stress brotherly love, scholastic achievements and scholarships which are offered through alumni and the national organization. Heuer was interested in the sorority for the possibility of long-lasting friendships and a committment to the group.

Phi Omega Beta is the Fraternity of Brotherhood and began here at Stout in 1927. Their purpose is to further social and professional affairs, develop and recognize scholastic ability and to promote sportsmanship.

Phi Omega Beta has a "Hell Week" during which traditional ceremonies are done as well as new aspects that are added.

Delta Zeta is a national sorority whose philanthropy is the Glaudette College of the Deaf. They have 20 members and are social and service oriented. They also put together the Freshman Record each year. The dues are $20 a month. Junior Lisa Pfeifer has been involved in Delta Zeta for two years and also became interested in it for the friendships.

A local fraternity on Stout's campus is Chi Lambda. They are a social fraternity and foster social competence (both formally and informally). They stress extracurricular activities such as SSA, Intramural teams, Advisory Boards and security for Contemporary Music Productions. They have 15 active members and eight pledges.

Pat Greenwood, president of Chi Lambda made friends with those in the fraternity and hence became interested in becoming a member. Ron Steele, the IGC Representative also became interested in the fraternity after becoming friends with some members. They both feel that through their membership in the fraternity they are getting to know more faculty members and are involved in more activities.

Sigma Sigma Sigma is a national sorority and presently has nine active members and three pledges. Their philanthropy is the Robbie Page Memorial. The initial cost is $30 with the first year total being approximately $200. The price goes down each semester.

Another national sorority is Gamma Sigma Sigma with 10 active members and six pledges. They are service oriented to the community and to Stout students and stress the unity and equality of people. According to Lori Pyka, a junior at Stout and member of Gamma Sigma Sigma, they are not interested in only being social and are considered a service sorority on campus. They also stress leadership skills.

Kappa Lambda Beta and Phi Sigma Epsilon are two other active fraternities on Stout's campus.

The greeks all stress friendship, committment and unity as their main objective. They will become more visible as they accomplish more things as a group. Regarding IGC, Samuels said "One group working together can achieve more than one [organization] by itself.

Non-Credit Programs

Six non-credit programs will be offered to the UW-Stout community during November through the Stout Office of Continuing Education and Summer Session. The first is titled "Birth: Teenage Responsibilities," and is sponsored by the March of Dimes. It will be held Nov. 7, and more information can be obtained by calling Sandy Walleen at 232-2693.

Nov. 8 will be "Effective Writing for Managers," sponsored by the School of Liberal Studies. Call Donna Applehans at 232-2693 for more information. Nov. 14-15 will be the dates of "Writing Across the Curriculum," sponsored by UW-Eau Claire and Menomonie High School. Call Sandy Walleen for more information.

Nov. 18 will feature "Focus on Facilitation: How to Facilitate Student Assistance Programs." This is sponsored by the School of Education and Human Services, and Donna Applehans has more information on that. On Nov. 20, the Vice-Chancellor's Office will sponsor "Secretarial Inservice Workshop - Written Communication." Contact Bev O'Neil at 232-2421 for information concerning date and location. All of the above will be held here at Stout.

The sixth program will be held in Columbus, Ohio Nov. 18-22. Sponsored by the School of Education and Human Services and the Stout Vocational Rehabilitational Institute, it is titled "Fundamentals of Adjustment Services." Contact Darrell Coffey at 232-1370 for more information.

Resume Workshop

The Ethnic Services Center is sponsoring a seminar titled "Getting the Summer Job - Resume Development" on Tuesday, Nov. 12. The seminar is being presented by Kent Bills, Career Specialist, UW-Stout. The seminar will run from 7:30 - 8:30 p.m. in the Maplewood Room of the Student Center. Space is limited, so call 232-1096 or stop by the Ethnic Services Center, 206 Bowman Hall, to reserve your spot.

Indian Rights Speaker

"Indian Treaty Rights" will be the topic of a speech to be given be Ray DePerry, Executive Administrator of the Great Lakes Indian Fish and Wildlife Commission, at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 12, in Mabel Tainter Theater.

DePerry is a former attorney for the Red Cliff Tribe and served on the Voight Intertribal Task Force as the Red Cliff representative. His speech is part of the Stout Speaker Series, and admission is free to all.

Ray DePerry

Voc-Rehab Seminar

A seminar on communication aids and devices for severely disabled people will be held from 9-11 a.m., Tuesday, Nov. 12 in Room 207 of the Vocational Rehabilitation building. Sponsored by Stout's Vocational Rehabilitation Engineering Center, the seminar is free and open to everyone. For more information call Anthony Langton at 232-2248.

Craft Specialization

Now that it is time again to register for next semester's courses, people who are interested in learning or developing a special craft can enroll in "Craftmanship's Specialization." This is a "submajor" for undergraduates who want to develop skills in crafts such as ceramics, metals, textiles and woods.

Each Craftmanship Specialization participant will have the opportunity to work in a practicum. This will allow a chance for on-the-job experience in the area of specialization. For more information, contact the Director of the Center of Craftmanship, Room 245 of the Tech Wing, or call Nancy Blake or Jim Bjornerud at 232-1102.

Red Cross Bloodmobile

The American Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at Stout Tuesday, Nov. 12 from 11-5, and Wednesday, Nov. 13 from 9-3 in the Great Hall of the Student Center. Its visit is sponsored by Gamma Sigma Sigma and the Inter-Greek Council. Everyone from the Stout community is encouraged to attend.

Barbara Kreft ignites canvases with fiery colors of imagination

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Scribbled on the oversized postcard announcing the Barbara Kreft show at J. Furlong Gallery, are these words: "King Brain must step down from his throne." I wish I would have written that about this show.

Fantasy and dreams do not stand up well to hard-core, intellectual scrutiny. You can't explain gases in a language made of solids. So like the postcard says, "Let's buy blue jeans and gypsy shoes and go to Canada."

In this case, Canada is fantasyland is Furlong Gallery.

Fantasy—dreams and impressions. Barbara Kreft ignites her canvases with fiery colors of fantasy and the spark of imagination.

The vibrancy of her intense color scheme does not correspond to the simple settings in her works. There are serene themes, such as a woman standing alone, by the sea, or watching an assorted flock of birds in a tree at sunset. You might expect the serenity to be reflected in the choice of colors.

That appears to be the driving force, the vitality in Kreft's fantasy images. The paintings she exhibits are powerful, captivating dreams seen and created through her eyes.

For convenience of discussion, the works could be related into three groups based roughly on a perceivable theme.

One group is connected by an image and a setting. The image is a lanky woman, naked, usually in silhouette against a bit of sky, a tumbling crest of surf and a beach. The flowing limbs of the figure and her hair are tossed in the beach breeze.

The image must be significant to Kreft in a way that any personal symbol is. Conjecture into another's dreams is as nebulous as the dream itself may be, even to the dreamer. To poets and painters of fantasy, all is a daydream.

> King Brain must step down from his throne.
> — Kreft Exhibition Poster

There are variations of this theme, the pieces are not nearly identical. Three have shells strewn on the beach, a motif that enhances the emptiness of the beach. Two paintings contain a cat, two a raven, two have boats on the water.

"By the sea," is one of this group. The colors Kreft mingles together send this work beyond the shore, it sails the sea of fantasy.

There is a half-length portrait of a woman holding a gray cat with lemon-lime eyes. This woman is in the foreground.

The mystery figure, the naked silhouette, stands like a cut-out against the background of cresting wave and sky.

One oddity in this painting is the beach condo that is planted in the middle ground. Erect and rigid against the pink beach and curves of the surrounding shapes, this stiff building is out of proportion by scale and distance with the rest of the piece.

It is angular and stern, inorganic and disproportionately small. It stands with repeated shapes of windows rising up its sides. It is a reference, not a reality. Anything goes in a dream.

The figure holding the cat is a strikingly painted use of spectrum colors. The figure is dressed in black, but on the garment is painted a private language of shapes and lines, spirals, arrows and diamonds, the colors of the spectrum. These are all the more pronounced because of the black field.

Those same colors are repeated in the face like a prismatic mask, a projection of light that seems to come from within the figure not from outside.

Another work of the beach group' is called "Deep Dream." Here the cat, now brilliant red, the raven, in cobalt blue, stand on either side of the silhouette woman.

Her elongated arms undulating, her hair tossing like flames. She is no longer a one-color cut-out, but in this piece, she is a person in flaming yellow flesh.

Three works by Barbara Kreft tell their tales along the wall of Furlong Gallery. The entire exhibition is highly colorful and imaginative. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

The sky is not a sky as much as it is reminiscent of Mexican bark paintings. Colorful little figures dance against the purple brown background mingling with a mix of pink, orange, blue and green shapes. The dark green wave curls in with foam towards the lavender shore.

Another group of paintings appears to refer to friends and the intimate conversations they have in pairs.

These friends are seen close up, faces thrusting into the foreground, usually one large blue face, one hand, and a portion of another face.

These are organic shapes. They are life and feelings pushed towards us, separated from the background. We can hear their silent speech. We are included.

In two of these works, by way of a strong contrast, the faces are against a background of purposefully drab colored city block buildings and dark, dreary skylines.

There is a strong sense of friendship, of human bonds that survive, even flourish in the coldness and isolation of the massive city. The blue faces, the hands, are artistically created, rounded living forms that project life, project against the sharp square edges of the city.

A third group of paintings is also related to the contrast of organic and man-made shapes. Living things predominiate these larger works.

These works appear to be fantasies based on the observation of real images or settings. Trees frame the foregrounds of these highly colorful, fanciful works. They are more vibrant and are much more active throughout the whole composition.

The rivulet branching of the trees frame the view of the cityscapes in the background. The organic shapes of the limbs create their own shapes. The spaces between the outlines of the limbs create a negative shape, also organic in appearance, through which the cubic urban shapes show through.

In these works, unlike the conversation pieces, the city is bathed in daylight, the walls having a more colorful, less ominous appearance. They are farther in the distance, however, giving the sense of a city seen from a forest or park.

One of the works in the show is called "Sunset Bird Watching." This is one of the more stunning images in the exhibition, a summary of the themes. There is a colorful tree around which flock 19 assorted birds. There is a row of six houses behind the tree.

Behind all this is the flaming sunset sky. The sunset is so powerful, it engulfs everything right up to the row of houses.

In the front, is the viewer, the birdwatcher, whose head is tilted. From the way the birdwatcher's eyes are pointed, she couldn't be looking in any one direction, particularly at the tree with birds. She is looking in all directions at once.

Barbara Kreft, left, grew up in Germany. Her paintings reflect that education and outlook. She claims a conscious effort to represent dream-like images. (Stoutonia photo by Lary Derrah)

Senior pursues ultimate career through concept of 'mail merge'

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Beware, the hunt is on. Graduating seniors are loading their resumes, aiming their letters and are preparing for the final kill. This is the job hunt.

Many avenues can be taken when hunting for the ultimate career. Many people compile and send resumes and letters of inquiry to prospective employers. Dan Gronemus, a future December graduate, has taken this approach to beyond its normal limits.

This industrial technology major has sent 850 resumes and letters of inquiry to companies around the United States. This effort has taken $400, not to mention a tremendous amount of time to complete.

Last July Gronemus developed his plan for what he calls the "mail merge." His original goal was set for 1000 letters. After creating a basic letter of inquiry, Gronemus developed a program for a word processor in order to plug in the various names, companies and addresses.

Why such a huge undertaking? Gronemus explained, "I put a lot of time, effort and money into my education, I thought I better put effort into the job hunt in order to have it all pay off."

Family and friends thought his plan was a bit on the nutty side. Economically his plan is quite sound. Gronemus said, "I know its a shot gun approach, but it is cheaper than driving or flying." Letters were sent primarily to the east coast and midwest.

> For a while I questioned if what I did was worthwhile.
> — Ken Gronemus Dec. '85 grad

Gonemus's prime goal for location is New York City.

So far the "mail merge" has been successful. Gronemus has had a job offer, interviews, calls and positive inquiries. At first letters of rejection came seven a day for two weeks. Gronemus said, "For a while I questioned if what I did was worthwhile. The positive inquiries lifted my spirits."

Ken Erickson, Assistant Director of the Career Planning and Placement Office said, "Mailings get minimal results. One has to be willing to accept rejections. This is only one approach."

Erickson also explained the features of a job search. The element of patience is very important. There is always waiting to be done— either for a reply to a letter or for an interview.

Resources of the Placement Office were used by Gronemus but his mailing effort was done on his own initiative. He sent the letters in search of a position in plant engineering.

After seeing other graduates take the job search half-heartedly, Gronemus felt he would be cheating himself if he allowed himself to have a limited choice of jobs.

"You might as well start out on top rather than at a job you really don't like. I'm in search of a career not a job." said Gronemus. This student believes that his career will highly influence his lifestyle, family, future children and retirement.

Gronemus is waiting for more replies to his letters. He has received 100 replies as of this date. If he does not find the right career by graduation he plans to undertake a more concentrated effort. He said, "I'm confident in my abilities. I know the right situation will come up eventually."

The Placement Office in the Administration Building has a store of information about how to job hunt, construct resumes and refine interviewing skills.

According to Erickson, two of the most visible processes in the job hunt are what the Placement Office make available to students. These are the vacancy lists and on-campus interviewing. He said, "We continually solicit on the part of our graduates."

DR. TOM AND SEUS

IMAGINATION FILLS STAGE AT MABEL TAINTER THEATER! With a flick of the hand, a whimsical grin, and a toss of the head, DR. TOM AND SEUS will capture your heart. Through mime, this talented couple will transport you to another world--that of your imagination...

DR. TOM AND SEUS will be performing on the stage of the Mabel Tainter Theater on Friday, Nov. 15. There will be two performances. A matinee will be presented at 1:00 p.m. and an evening performance at 7:30 p.m.

DR. TOM AND SEUS are masters at the art of storytelling. Through the use of facial expressions and gestures they communicate through the universal language of mime. Their stories range from hilarious to dramatic. Original music written by SEUS, along with verbal introductions and sound effects add great depth and character to their presentation.

As members of the Screen Actors Guild, DR. TOM AND SEUS, have appeared world-wide. Appearance credits include the "Comedy Store" in Los Angeles, Aladdin Hotel in Las Vegas, and the Peachtree Playhouse along with the Alliance Studio Theatre, both of Atlanta, Georgia. They also have performed in many children's television programs, films, and national T.V.

BEST THREADS —

Fashion promotions students recently presented "Cover to Cover". This was the First fashion show in the Great Hall, held Tuesday, Nov. 5.

The students emphasized a high tech look, though fashions ranged from sportswear to lingerie to career wear. The designer category was all student creations.

Those involved selected merchandise, arranged lights, staging, choreography, and created the entire presentation.

Fantasticks guarantees evening of fun

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

The Menomonie Theater Guild has a winner in The Fantasticks which opened to a nearly full house and an enthusiastic response Friday night Nov. 1 at Mabel Tainter Theater. The show runs through Sunday Nov. 10.

This popular musical comedy approaches love and romance in such a timeless fashion that every audience easily identifies with the subject matter.

The Narrator (El Gallo) walks on stage and sets the scene for the audience with his melodic rendition of "Try to Remember." The tune gets you into the frame of mind where you remember your first love.

John Taylor performed this role with great savoir faire as he provided guidance for all the action in the play. The Narrator was the voice of experience who provided an outsider's perspective on the action.

Chris Brandt Schmidt does the tough job of being The Mute who is continually on stage marching around as the observer who helps to maintain order amidst the insanity.

Fun results from watching The Boy (Matt) and The Girl (Luisa) experience their first romantic love, quickly followed by the learning experience of harsh reality.

You realize the moment you see them that Matt and Louisa are in love in the most insanely romantic sense of the word. Ann Burdick did a good job portraying The Girl by acting starry-eyed as she talked about her great love. The Boy wasn't the object of her talk, it was the act of being beautiful and being loved by the boy which simply overwhelmed her.

The Boy, played by Tom Knudten is equally overwhelmed by love. The object which seems to have driven these two together is the wall which their fathers built between them to keep them apart.

The Fantasticks would grow tiresome if all there was to watch was the tremendous "love" between these two neophytes. But, before too long, we learn that the fathers' schemed to get these two "fantastic" kids together by building the wall between them.

This popular musical comedy approaches love and romance in such a timeless fashion...

The audience came alive at the appearance of Ellwyn Hendrickson and Jim Gelerman playing the fathers. They played their characters so well you couldn't help but laugh at their simple beliefs about what makes the world go round.

Laughter filled the theater in response to the song and dance by the fathers about the how if you ever want your children to do something you have to tell them "No."

The action was further heightened by the introduction of Henry and Mortimer to the father's scheme. Tim Korsmoe performed splendidly as Henry, the oldtimer, who's best described as the absent minded actor.

Dave Pulk has a relatively small part as Mortimer, Henry's young side kick, but he played it admirably. Mortimer is a bit of a dimwit whose fame results from his ability to die so well on stage. Mortimer makes dying a comic art form as he brought the house down both times he died on stage.

The first act has a fun conclusion. Matt has just finished fighting off the supposed attacks on Louisa by Henry, Mortimer and The Narrator. Louisa can now take Matt in her arms with both fathers watching approvingly. Everyone is happy as the wall comes tumbling down.

The bloom of the rose is as the second act opens, both Matt and Louisa are certain there's got to be something better than this. They break up as Matt takes off for the world of adventure.

The fathers are dismayed by this turn of events. As a result, these two pseudo-horticulturists do yet another hilarious song and dance. These patricians wish that children were as simple as vegetables. Thus you're entertained by the hymn they sing titled, "Plant a radish, get a radish."

The remainder of the musical focuses on Louisa and Matt's misfortunes as they set out for new adventures. The question remains until the very end, will they ever get back together?

Director Karin Falkofske did a fine job getting the best out of this mixture of experienced and inexperienced actors. All the actors appear to be having fun. The subject matter shall remain topical forever. The initimacy of Mabel Tainter Theater merely added to the impact of the musical.

You're guaranteed fun by The Fantasticks. Shows will be Thursday, Friday and Saturday this week at 8 p.m. with the finale on Sunday afternoon Nov. 10 at 2 p.m.

Booze Brothers back by popular demand

Suzette Kramer
Arts Reporter

They are back by great demand...the "Booze Brothers Revue!" Once again Stout is preparing itself to be rocked and rolled by music of the '50's.

The "Booze Brothers" sing a variety of songs, including some popular chart songs as well as many of their own originals. Much of their music is characteristic of the 1950's era, as are their costumes and stage show.

This band of approximately ten members originated in Milwaukee about nine years ago as a take-off from the "Blues Brothers." Today, three of the original members still remain, but many other talented musicians and vocalists have been added.

Throughout the years, the "Booze Brothers" have made quite a name for themselves not only here in Wisconsin, but all over the United States as well. They have made many appearances in Milwaukee, at both Summerfest and the Wisconsin State Fair, where they have been known to open for other bands.

In 1980, the band added the well known "Hay Horns" to their act, which consist of three trumpeteers. The "Hay Horns" have added a lot of oportunity to the bands' image and success.

Much of their music is characteristic of the 1950's era...

Since 1980, the "Booze Brothers" have done many television commercials for the Milwaukee area as well as a number of radio commercials. They have also performed on recent Jerry Lewis M.D. Telethons in which they have raised money for Muscular Dystrophy.

Changing times cause casual manners

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Restaurants, corporate dining halls and cafeterias have recently replaced the traditional eating utensils: fork, knife and spoon, with spears, saws and shovels—or that seems to be the belief of many young people.

Today, restaurants are filled with men and women in their 20's and 30's who hold their forks like harpoons and their spoons like shovels. They use their napkins as bibs, tucking them into their collars, reach in front of one another for the salt, and absent-mindedly declare the meal to be finger-lickin' good by smacking their lips and licking their fingers.

Over the last 20 years, the fundamentals of table manners have been lost. Faculty administrators, teachers, and etiquette experts feel that dining standards have hit an all time low. One explanation for this is the decline in family dining. Associate Professor Noel Falkofske feels that the decline in proper etiquette is "a result of cultural changes, the increase in fast food dining, and a more active lifestyle."

The traditional family dinner hour has diminished and young people are no longer taught proper eating habits. "There are fewer families dining together as a unit," Falkofske said,"and less formal family dinner situations."

A Government study found that between 1965 and 1976, the time that Americans spent on family care dropped by about three-quarters of an hour a day, although they devoted the same amount of time to work, sleep and personal care. Also, it stated that much less time was spent preparing family meals, which indicates the decline in the importance of the family meal.

As a result, young people never give much thought to proper dining standards. They are unsure of which eating utensils to use and how to properly eat different types of food. This lack of knowledge presents a difficulty when young people are faced with formal dining situations, business meetings and job interviews.

Often, an employer will take a potential employee out to dinner or lunch. This allows them to view the interviewee in a social setting and see how he conducts himself. Sociology instructor Ken Kager feels that "proper manners could reflect upon one's personality if one is particularly outspoken or rude."

You can't totally change behavior patterns for five minutes...
— Noel Falkofske Associate Professor

In an interviewing situation manners can be of varying importance to different employers. "It depends on the employer and the type of job," Falkofske said. "In some situations manners will be of incidental importance, while in others they will be of moderate importance. However, totally vulgar manners will be damaging in all situations."

Because of the importance of table manners, it is recommended that young people become more aware of what is considered correct eating habits. Many publishers have reported that books on etiquette are now among their most popular and some have even made the best seller list. These books offer common sense advice on the fundamentals of table manners—manuevers intended to keep the appetites of dining companions intact.

They don't list a lot of stuffy rules, but rather discuss how to get the food from the plate to the mouth without offending others or drawing attention. Some of the basic rules found in these books include:

Place the napkin in the lap after the hostess does, or at a buffet, immediately after being seated; if you are a man, help seat the woman near you before sitting down yourself; wait until the hostess is served before you begin eating; chew with the mouth closed and don't talk with food in it; never sip a beverage until the mouth is empty and has been wiped with a napkin; don't slurp or blow on soup or coffee when it is too hot; place used utensils on the plate, not on the table; try foods before seasoning them; keep elbows off the table, although it is permissible to rest them there between courses.

Although these books offer good advice, the best way to learn proper manners is through practical experience. "You can't totally change behavior patterns for five minutes just for an interview," Falkofske said. "However, a bit of daily practice will probably do the ticket."

Aykroyd and Murray entertaining in 'Ghostbusters'

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

Although the rumor that ghosts exist in Harvey Hall remains unsubstantiated, Ghostbusters will descend on UW-Stout next Sunday and Monday night at 7 and 9:30 p.m.

Ghostbusters stars Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd and Harold Ramis as grad students forced to start business in New York as experts trapping ectoplasmic manifestations after losing their research grants in parapsychology.

Unlike the motion picture Stripes, where Murray and Ramis teamed up so well, Ghostbusters seems to have been written by Aykroyd and Ramis to showcase Murray's talent to react offhandishly to extraordinarily bizarre situations.

New Yorker film critic Pauline Kael correctly praised Murray's performance. "The script provides Murray with funky lines and he delivers them stunningly; he can make the simplest statement seem a gambit or a fraud—his pores ooze untrustworthiness."

Unfortunately, Aykroyd seems unable to pick up where he left off with his hilarious improvisational performances on Saturday Night Live. He is as badly lost in Ghostbusters as he was in Trading Places.

Murry's standout performance as the primo ghostbuster is perfectly matched by Weaver's...

Ramis' performance is often hilarious, yet he seems to have written himself out of many of the scenes. As a result, Ghostbusters lacks the hilarious give and take between Murray and Ramis viewers grew so accustomed to in Stripes.

Fortunately for filmgoers, many funny ideas were included in the movie, such as the ambulance that our heroes convert into the "Ectomobile" designed to help them chase ghosts.

Murray, Ramis and Aykroyd create a lot of fun through their parody of contemporary marketing techniques. Despite the fact that there may be no ghosts in the whole city, these Ghostbusters have such imposing looking paraphanalia that if you wanted to hire anyone to fight ghosts, it would have to be these three.

Murray's standout performance as the primo ghostbuster is perfectly matched by Sigourney Weaver's strong performance as the young lady who's suffered disturbing ectoplasmic relations recently.

Weaver is the best competitor against Murray when it comes to playing games. She responds capably to his every line as she parries effectively with Murray's rapier wit. "When she stands talking to Murray, she's eye to eye with him, and she looks indestructible," Kael wrote as she appraised Weaver's strong performance.

It turns out Weaver also is Murray's greatest nemesis as a body whose been taken over by the angriest ghost in New York. The question is, will Murray succeed in getting this most capable of opponents to give up the ghost?

To find out, you'll have to visit the Great Hall either Sunday or Monday night Nov. 10 and 11 at 7 and 9:30 pm.

They have also raised a large sum of money through raffling off the black hats and dark sunglasses that they wear as a part of their act.

The "Booze Brothers" have just finished touring the United States where they played at many major cities. They have also been preparing to release their second album. Their first one, which was released a few years ago, was a good seller. They are hoping that their second one does just as well.

Last year during Homecoming, the "Booze Brothers" put on a free show at the Student Union. Christa Sanicola, President of CMP said, "We were very pleased with the turnout. All together about 1000 people showed up."

This year CMP is planning to charge $2.00 a ticket for the "Booze Brothers"' performance. "I hope that doesn't cut down on the attendance. $2.00 is actually a very reasonable price for this kind of entertainment." Sanicola said.

Karen Kroeger and Melody Palmer, students at Stout, attended the "Booze Brothers Revue" last year. Both were very impressed with the show. "Their music was great...a lot of fun to dance to," Palmer said. Kroeger added, "I'll definitely go again this year!"

The "Booze Brothers" will be performing at the Great Hall Thursday, Nov. 14 at the Great Hall. Show time is 9:30 p.m.

Lady Devil runners qualify for Nationals

Karen Schubert
Sports Reporter

Strong performances by the UW-Stout women's cross country team were witnessed at the WSUC conference meet at Whitewater on Saturday. The women's team will now advance to the NAIA National meet at UW-Parkside on Saturday, Nov. 16.

The rainy conditions held off for the most part during the meet but runners were still faced with a muddy, soggy course. According to Head Coach Lou Klitzke, the "soggy conditions did not psyche any of them [women] out."

UW-Eau Claire emerged as the conference and District 14 champions. Both conference and districts were decided by the outcome of Saturday's race.

UW-La Crosse was second, followed by UW-Stevens Point. Chris Goepl from Eau Claire won the conference meet with a time of 18:35.8. UW-Milwaukee's Lynn Bouche won the District 14 honors and set a course record at 18:25.

Stout finished fifth overall for conference out of the nine schools and fourth for the district standings, advancing them to nationals.

Senior Captain Sheila Geere finished first for Stout at 19:33. "I really wanted to place in the top ten, but based on the weather and the course conditions it was tough." Geere finished 13 in the conference division and 14 in the district division.

Junior Ann Meyer was close behind Geere finishing at 19:38. "Both Sheila and Ann ran smart, tough races," Klitzke said. Both Geere and Meyer made the all-conference team for their performances.

Not far behind from Meyer was Senior Sue Meyer at 19:48. Freshman standout Liz Lund ran 20:29.1 followed by Freshman Leslie Drall at 22:31, Senior Karen Schubert at 24:18 and Freshman Kris Klokow at 25:05.

"I am very proud of the women runners. They came through as individuals and as teammates. Our fifth place finish in the WWIA conference was only 11 points away from the fourth place so it wasn't a fluke." Klitzke said.

Klitzke went on to say that the women were contenders and the four teams placing ahead of Stout were rated nationally, including Eau Claire who are defending national champions and La Crosse who were second in the NCAA Division III last year.

Geere was pleased with her team's performance but did say that "we tapered too early and decreased our mileage so we weren't as sharp on Saturday as we had hoped we would have been. Mentally we are ready for nationals but we need a week of rest a week before the meet."

According to Klitzke, the women now plan to sharpen their remaining workouts and not pressure themselves. "This is still the fun part of our lives. It really is fun to meet other runners and coaches from all over the United States at the national meet." Approximately 30 teams plus another 30 individual runners will be at Parkside on Nov. 16.

> I am very proud of the women runners. They came through as individuals and as teammates.
> — Lou Klitzke Head Coach

Disappointing finishes by the men's team resulted in the conclusion of their season Saturday. "The men were flat," Klitzke said.

Senior Captain Matt Christenson had an off day and finished 27 overall with a time of 27:00. Junior Eric Bretl was close to Christenson at 27:22. Rounding out the rest of the team included Mike Bennett at 27:41, Todd Zuerlein at 27:43, Bob Hackley at 28:19, Gary Poppe at 29:23, Ben Haney at 29:35 and Tim Stordahl at 30:43.

"Mike Bennet ran well and picked up the slack left by other runners. We still had a reasonably good season," Klitzke said.

Klitzke, as well as the rest of the runners on the men's team, was disappointed that they did not qualify for nationals as Christenson had a chance to become All-American at the Parkside meet on Nov. 16.

For the men it was La Crosse emerging as conference champions followed by Oshkosh and third was Eau Claire. Stout finished seventh out of the nine schools. Junior Arnie Schrader from Stevens Point finished first at 25:16.8.

District 14 honors went to La Crosse with Eau Claire, River Falls and Milwaukee also qulaifying for nationals. Stout finished fifth of the seven schools competing for the top four positions.

Lady Blue Devils take 3rd place in first annual home invitational

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

When you think of a winning team, the thoughts of players facing tough obstacles and overcoming them usually come to mind. The UW-Stout women's volleyball team, after facing a series of past defeats in recent weeks, did just that to achieve a successful week of victories.

The Lady Blue Devils played Green Bay and Northland College at home on Wednesday, Sept. 30. Home play was definitely to their advantage, as they won in two games over Green Bay with scores of 18-16 and 16-14. They continued their winning streak by beating out Northland College 15-13, 12-15, and 15-11.

The Blue Devils then went on to host their first home tournament this past weekend. In a three-way tie for first, the spikers played a series of tie-breakers to eventually end up with a third place trophy. Original game play left them with four victories out of five games.

Recapping action from that tournament, Stout was first matched against UW-Eau Claire varsity. Playing intensely throughout their games, the Lady Blue Devils won in a three-game match with scores of 15-12, 4-15, and 15-13. Stout Head Coach Lynda Lee commented on the match saying, "We knew they'd be one of the best teams. They had ten returning lettermen, and to win against them right away was very important as well as exciting. The team really played well. It was consistent all through the tournament. We felt we had to win and pulled through. It was very tough, very close."

The second match pegged them against St. Mary's in which they won in straight games 16-14 and 15-8. Lee said, "We knew we'd have to play tough here because they beat us before. We also had to play smart. After a tough match like the one against Eau Claire, a team can really get tired out. However, we still kept our cool and played consistently despite the fatigue."

In the third game, Stout faced Eau Claire's junior varsity and won again in straight games with scores of 15-9 and 15-2. Commenting, Lee said, "The fact that Eau Claire has a junior varsity team gives you a good indication of the numbers they have to choose from to build the strong teams they have. They were pretty competitive, but didn't give us too much trouble.

The fourth match brought the Blue Devils their first and only loss against St. Olaf's with scores of 15-12 and 15-9. Lee said, "It was very close in the first game, and we played tough, leading in the beginning. St. Olaf's is a real good team with tough hitters, and we had to concentrate on their defense and blocking. This game was the deciding factor in the tournament it was the one to make or break us."

Final-match action paired Stout against Rockford College. The Lady Blue Devils had an easy two-game win by convincing scores of 15-6 and 15-0. Lee said, "Although they didn't give us much trouble at all, we had to win in order to even be in the running for first place."

A few players who had a lot to do with the Blue Devils' success were junior hitter Barb Carlson, who did an excellent job in the back row on dives and digs. Carlson, in reflecting on the tournament play, said, "The competition we faced was really tough. Our attitude, however, was one that wouldn't give up. We fought the whole time. We knew what we had to do and we put it together to win." Some other contributors to the past victories were senior hitter Mari Church, who improved from previous game play and killed the ball on hits. Sophomore hitter/setter Michelle Espe did a commendable job on sets, and helped the game flow smoothly.

Reflecting on the team's overall performance, Lee said, "What worked for us was hitting the holes in our opponent's defense. We're playing more as a team, and are more consistent and accurate. I was particularly impressed in the game against Eau Claire. We really seemed to want to be there and to win. The team thinks that they can realistically get to the Conference Tournament and that's why they're playing so well."

Barb Carlson also felt the team played well. "We played good right away and this really helped us. Everyone played consistently. The competition was really tough. Eau Claire is a good team and has a lot of talent and strength. They have a

Pregame moment of prayer issue raises constitutional questions

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

There is an old black and white movie in which there is a memorable locker room scene where the coach says to his football team before the big game, "Do it for the Gipper."

According to the First Amendment, which states that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free excercise there of, that old coach that told his team to "Do it for the Gipper" stayed in the boundaries of constitutionality.

Here at UW-Stout our football team is not gathering together to dedicate the football game to some B movie hero. They are taking a knee and saying a "prayer." Lately the question has been raised if it is acceptable to look toward the "Gipper" for inspiration, but not, according to our Constitution, toward God.

"I've lead prayer, and we've had players lead prayer," Head Coach Bob Kamish said. He believes that he is not overstepping the boundaries of the Constitution in doing so. "If they don't want to say prayer it is up to them. I'm not forcing the issue on anybody," Kamish said.

"Coach Kamish leads prayer, but tells us if we want to join in we may," Keith Jurek, captain of the Stout football team, declared. "We pray to protect us and the other players in the game."

> If they don't want to say prayer it is up to them. I'm not forcing the issue on anybody.
> — Bob Kamish
> Head Football Coach

According to Kamish, nobody has ever approached him in regards to this controversial issue. He says the reasons for the UW-Stout football team "taking a knee before the game" is that it is a last minute reflection to bring the team together in a unifying effort. "If you take a knee to pray, it doesn't necessarily mean you are praying. You could be thinking about sunny Florida," Kamish said.

"If I were to force my beliefs on the football team, and if I was using prayer in other ways, I think I would be wrong and that it would be unconstitutional," Kamish stated.

Because he believes this, he says that the football team will "continue to take a knee" before football games and use this quiet reflection time to help the players think about themselves, and what they have to accomplish together as a team.

UW-Stout Athletic Director Warren Bowlus says that he is unaware of the praying that is going on behind closed locker room doors. He states, "I really don't know if it is unconstitutional or not. It is unconstitutional in the classroom. I'm not positive what the stand would be in intercollegiate athletics."

He says that presently there are no official policies in the Stout athletic program regarding this issue. Nobody has approached him regarding prayer and Bowlus says, "I don't look at this issue as being problematic at this time."

The question arises, to pray or not to pray, or to take a knee and quietly reflect. Seemingly, the Stout football team partakes in all of the above. Is it right? Should Kamish and others be forced to abandon this quiet time before a game? To cite the First Amendment once again, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." The second part, "Or prohibit the free excercise there of."

Fry Says Big Ten Crowd Noise is Out of Control- Iowa coach Hayden Fry said crowd noise in Big Ten Conference football stadiums has gotten out of hand and has put visiting teams at a severe disadvantage because they can't hear the quarterback's signals.

Fry said the noise factor was never more apparent that in his Hawkeyes' 22-13 loss to Ohio State before a record Ohio Stadium crowd of 90,467.

West German Army wants Tennis Star Becker-Boris Becker, the West German tennis sensation, is wanted by the army. West German defense minister Manfred Woerner says he hopes the country's tennis star and defending Wimbledon champion will report for military service when he turns 18 on Nov. 22. All West German 18-year-olds are expected to register for 15 months of military duty or 18 months of alternative civilian duty.

Kulick presents fitness workshop for wheelchair-bound individuals

Sports Reporter

Internationally known wheelchair athlete Marcia Bevard Kulick presented a workshop titled "Fitness for Everyone " in the Great Hall last Thursday.

The workshop was for those with an interest in learning more about exercise modifications for individuals with physical impairment. Organizer Ann Yurcisin, who is also the Director of Services for Student Disabilities, was pleased with the presentation but disappointed that there wasn't a larger number in attendance.

"The response from those who did attend was positive," Yurcisin said. "Most of them thought the presentation was outstanding and very informative as well as being very practical in providing good demonstrations."

Kulick's demonstrations included one which required her to move from her wheelchair onto a floor mat to show how the legs could be exercised, in order to improve circulation.

"I feel that it helps if the people can see the exercise performed physically," Kulick said. "I also provide a chart from which they can work on at home. Visuals play an important part in my presentation so I try to incorporate as many as possible."

Program topics included the importance of fitness, ways to channel stress energy, stretching and abdominal workout, peak performance and sit-down aerobics. Kulick concentrated a large part of her speech on the importance of controlling stress and learning how to relax the body.

"In order to relax, the body must first learn to feel and listen to its tensions, " Kulick said. "You can have good nutrition and good exercise but it won't come together without relaxation."

Kulick also stressed that mental preparation and attitude are 50 percent of what is required along with skills to enable people to become "peak performers." As a high performer herself, Kulick said that these were the things that helped her to many of her achievements.

Kulick has an undergraduate degree in therapeutic recreation and is currently studying for a master's in health education. In 1977 a motorcycle accident left her without the use of her legs. Since then she has become a world class athlete in swimming and marathon competition. She is also a knowledgeable leader in dance aerobics for people with disabilities.

As an outstanding athlete, Kulick won six gold medals in swimming events, breaking four world and wheelchair games records at the 1984 summer International Wheelchair Games in Aylesbury, England. In the 1980 Orange Bowl Marathon held in Miami she won the wheelchair division. In 1982 she completed the Boston Marathon with a time of 2:37.00.

Kulick has been featured on national broadcasts including PM Magazine, the Today Show, That's Incredible and the American Character by Norman Vincent Peale. A new scholarship for paraplegic, quadraplegic and blind students was recently established at UM-Duluth in Kulick's name.

Over the last year Kulick has not competed in many events as she has concentrated on her "Whole Body Fitness" program. "This means making the choices to live your life to the fullest," Kulick said in an article describing the program. "To be happy, to feel good physically and to have your life be the most rewarding it can be."

The program has been presented by Kulick in many other universities in Memphis, Tenn., Dallas, Texas and also at UW-Madison.

When asked if she was disappointed at the low attendance for her presentation Kulick was very positive in her response.

"To me it is not how many but who attends," Kulick said. "If I can reach one person and get them to realize the importance of exercise, I feel I've achieved something."

The Armchair Quarterback

Race for number one

Tom Roth

As college football enters its last month of regular season play, the race for the national championship heats up all over the country.

For the second year in a row, college football's number one team might be sitting at home when the New Year's Day bowl games roll around. Last year Brigham Young, rated number one, was victorious in the Holiday Bowl on Dec. 21 as they watched the rest of the bowl game contenders battle it out for the country's number two spot.

The same thing might happen to the University of Florida this year. The Gators, 7-0-1, currently sit on the top of most college polls with three games remaining, but the catch is that the Gators are on probation by the NCAA, which restricts them from appearing in a bowl game.

Galen Hall, Gators' head coach, keeps reminding his team of how Oklahoma won the national championship in 1974 without a bowl appearance when on probation. Ironically, Hall, who took over for Charley Pell last season, was an assistant to Barry Switer's Sooners that year.

Florida controls their own destiny in the final month of the season, but are faced with two top twenty teams, Georgia and rival Florida State, plus Kentucky.

Air Force, who is tied for the most wins in the coutry with an unblemished record of 9-0, has to be a serious title contender if they can convincingly beat BYU next weekend and get by Army and Hawaii in their other two remaining games.

It would be hard not to vote for a team with a 13-0 record as the nation's best team. However, to date, Air Force has only beaten two teams with winning records. Another negative impact on them would be having to play in the Holiday Bowl, which usually does not attract a top-notch team, as being a member of the of the Western Athletic Conference, the champion automatically receives a bid to that bowl.

Ohio State would appear to have a good shot at the national title if they can get past Michigan in their final game of the season. If that would happen, the Buckeyes would be a mismatch for the Pacific Ten Champion, who is unlikely to be ranked near the top ten.

Another Big Ten team, Iowa, could sneak into the number one spot with some help from the teams above. A chance to play in a major bowl game would increase their chances greatly.

Two Big Eight teams could very easily come home with a national championship and the first part of their luck will be decided in the next month before the bowl games even begin. The clash between Oklahoma and Nebraska on Nov. 23 will most likely decide who gets an Orange Bowl invitation. Their opponent in the Orange Bowl will most likely be Eastern power Penn State.

Miami, Fla., Oklahoma State, Michigan, Arkansas and Baylor are all long shots for a title but could very possibly claim the crown if the ball bounces their way.

If Air Force can get by BYU, I believe they'll end up as national champions, but if they should lose, it's Ohio State all the way.

Quarterback's Picks

UW-Stout at UW-River Falls-River Falls has been getting stronger every week and the Blue Devils are coming off an impressive showing last weekend but the ranked Falcons should be just a little too much for the Devils. River Falls by 9.

Green Bay at Minnesota-Jim Zorn helped the Packers improve last week, but the Vikings should be able to kick the Packers out of the Metrodome if Jan Stenerud can connect. Vikings by 6.

Denver at San Francisco-The 49er's are on the upswing as Denver is headed just the opposite direction. San Francisco by 13.

Wisconsin at Minnesota-The Gophers will be looking to get back on the winning track after two straight losses and the Badgers will try to gain some more respect when they invade the noisy Metrodome. It should be a real close one. Minnesota by 7.

Illinois at Iowa-Illinois needs to win if they are going to appear in a bowl game this year and the Hawkeyes will try to keep their Rose Bowl hopes alive with a win. The Hawkeyes are tough at home. Iowa by 3.

Baylor at Arkansas-This game will most likely decide the Southwest Conference Champion. It's a toss-up. Baylor by 1.

Miami, Fla. at Maryland-The Hurricanes have been unstoppable lately. Miami by 6.

Army at Air Force-Air Force will get a real test from their rival Army in this one. The Force should fly over Army. Air Force by 13.

Volleyball

lot of numbers which accounts for their intensity."

Attitude seems to be a deciding factor in this past week's string of victories. In questioning what was more important, skill or attitude, Lee said, "In volleyball, the ratio is pretty equal because without a good attitude your skill means virtually nothing. When weighed together, attitude ends up to balance this ratio out even though skill seems more important at first."

Approaching the Conference Tournament and winding down the season, Lee feels her team has a good chance of making some exciting things happen. "I see ourselves peaking at Conference, if we make it there. We have been doing better every day, and we're intense enough to hang on until that very last match."

One of the most rewarding experiences for Coach Lee and her team this season was no doubt winning four out of five games in this past tournament. Lee said, "It's satisfying to know the team has done better because you taught them and they in turn have taught you. It is very rewarding to have your team react mutually with you and respect you."

Respect apparently comes easily for Lee's team members due to their personal feelings towards her. Senior Barb Carlson states, "Coach Lee has really helped a lot. She has a good ability of bringing things together and of getting us to do what she wants us to do. Everyone on the team is really close, and we work very well together. We have accomplished a lot with the numbers we have had, and our record of 22-29 proves it!"

Gridders tie in 7-7 defensive struggle

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout Blue Devils tied Loras College 7-7 last Saturday in Dubuque, Iowa. The game was a defensive struggle on a cold, wet and sloppy day.

Bob Lindberg started as quarterback. It was the first time he has played since being injured in the game against UW-Whitewater three weeks ago. Head Coach Bob Kamish said, "It's great to have Rob back. Now we have someone who can pass the ball."

Lindberg, a sophomore from Frederic, got his efforts noticed when he was elected offensive player of the week. Kamish said, "He did an excellent job in leading the offense."

Loras College won the coin toss and elected to receive the opening kickoff. The first play from scrimmage, Loras completed a 19-yard pass to bring the ball from their 18-yard line to their 37-yard line. The Blue Devil defense stopped the drive and forced Loras to punt the ball.

The Stout offense ran the ball between Kyle Gunderson, Chuck Carr and Ron Wise, starting from the Blue Devil 15-yard line to the 40-yard line. Stout tried another running play with a handoff to Gunderson, who ran the ball to the Loras 38-yard line for a 22-yard gain.

The run by Gunderson set up a touchdown pass from Lindberg to Scott Stauffacher. The pass was Lindberg's first of the day, good for 38 yards and Stout's only score.

Lindberg threw 22 pass attempts, completing seven of those passes with one interception. Kamish said, "Rob played a very courageous game for us."

Later during the first quarter the Stout offense moved the ball to the Loras 22-yard line. This was set up by short runs and a 17-yard pass from Lindberg to Wise. The ball was set back five yards after an illegal procedure call on Stout.

The penalty set the Blue Devils back to the Loras 29-yard line. Here Lindberg attempted two passes, but neither pass was completed, leaving Stout with fourth down and nine yards to go. Here Lindberg attempted another pass, but this pass was also incomplete.

The second quarter would bring the Blue Devils another chance deep inside Loras territory. This time the Stout offense pushed the ball just inside the Loras 29-yard line before being stopped.

> It's great to have Rob (Lindberg) back. Now we have someone who can pass the ball.
> — Bob Kamish
> Head Coach

Stout had the ball on third down and ten yards to go. Lindberg's first pass was incomplete to Stauffacher. On fourth down the Blue Devils went for a first down, but here Lindberg threw his only interception of the day, and Loras College took over with the ball at their 23-yard line.

To end the second quarter, a punt by Loras College put Stout at their own 10-yard line. The Blue Devils tried running the ball, but only got nine of the ten yards needed for a first down. On fourth down the Blue Devils were forced to punt and gave Loras great field position at the Stout 47-yard line.

Quarterbacking for Loras was Dave Dietz. Dietz ran a hurry-up type of offense hitting the next five out of six passes for Loras to tie the score at halftime.

The second half was where the defensive struggle began. The closest Stout would get to the Loras goal line would be the 35-yard line. The closest Loras College would come was Stout's 29-yard line.

The defensive player of the week was Darren Cockeram, a senior from Menomonie. Darren had five solo tackles, one assisted tackle and one quarterback sack. Defensive Coach Steve Terry said, "Darren set the tone early in the game for us." Terry added, "He played an outstanding game against a nationally-ranked Loras College."

This Saturday the Blue Devils will meet UW-River Falls in River Falls. In preparation the Blue Devils' offense will be using a new game, with some more of Lindberg's passing and a few designed running plays. These plays will be needed as ranked UW-River Falls will make the Blue Devils the underdogs again.

UW-Madison defeats Centaurs in finals' 17-6

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

UW-Stout Rugby Club, the Centaurs, played a hard-fought game for the State Conference Championship but came out on the losing end to a strong UW-Madison team last Saturday.

The Centaurs, having done well to reach the final rounds for the conference, were defeated 17-6 on a very cold and wet day. The loss placed them fourth overall in the state.

> I thought the B-side played tremendously.
> — John Wangen
> Club President

"Madison had a very strong team," Rugby Club President John Wangen said. "It was difficult for us to play them because it is a larger city and they also had the home field advantage."

Playing at what was probably their best, the Centaurs excelled in some of the field play. The area that dominated the swing of play, however, was Madison's strong defense. This was a well-coached unit and held the Centaurs' offense well.

"The team had a very good work rate and everyone performed as well as could be expected. We just couldn't seem to break through the final quarter of the field," Wangen commented.

The Centaurs' solitary try was scored by Dan Weber. Weber, who is one of the most consistent players, used his ingenuity to score and raise the hopes of the Centaurs. Kicker Jay Fraser converted his punt to give the Centaurs a total of six points.

Player Eric Ruud said, "I think the main reason we couldn't get the better of them was that they were stronger in the scrum. They managed to turn us nearly every time."

As the conditions were very wet this made the ball very slippery and difficult to handle. The Centaurs' handling was not quite as effective as they had hoped.

The Centaurs' B-side was very much on form. Playing after the A-side they showed some excellent form and ability. Managing to lead for most of the game, the Centaurs were disappointed when the game was tied at 10-10 close to normal time. Madison had a drop kick in the final minutes, which was on target, and won them the game at 13-10.

Wangen, however, was very impressed and satisfied with their performance. "I thought the B-side played tremendously," he said. "I have high hopes for next season and am anticipating a good one. We have a strong A-side as well as a promising B-side so I expect to keep up this good standard and form."

The rugby club will be taking part in a tournament next February. This will be held at UW-Stevens Point as part of the Arctic Festival. Saturday's game was the last for the season so the Centaurs will be training for the spring season next year.

Wangen concluded, "I am confident that we will do well in the tournament. It's a good club and team with a good atmosphere. We'll just enjoy it and have fun."

International Dinner a delight once again

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

The 1985 International Dinner, held Saturday night at the Memorial Student Union, began with "The National Anthem" and was closed by approximately 100 International Students singing "We Are the World" with background music by the band DCver.

The International Relations Club (IRC) at UW-Stout sponsored the event and also sponsors such activities as the International Fair, sports competitions and graduation celebrations for international students. The club is made up of Stout students from all over the world, including the United States. The purpose of the club is to encourage student and faculty relations and to serve as an orientation agency for incoming International Students.

The goal of the evening was stated in many different ways but all stressed the idea of unity. James Mbachiantim, President of IRC, said in opening remarks, "We hope that this dinner will give a more positive perception of the different cultures that dwell in this community." Steve Olson, the international student coordinator asked the question, "Why are we here this evening? We are here to drink, eat and be entertained. But, most of all, we are here to share."

The dinner itself consisted of different ethnic foods from all over the world with each food labeled as to what it was and what country it was from. Included in the program for the evening were recipes of many of the foods so people would be able to make those dishes that appealed to them. The general consensus of those interviewed was that it was good but spicy.

After the dinner the band DCver played three songs as an introduction to the remainder of the evening. The cultural entertainment then began with many countries being represented.

Malaysia, which is represented by 28 students at Stout, showed a traditional wedding ceremony wearing authentic dress.

Saudi Arabia, with 15 students at Stout, presented a slide show giving some history and current events of the country as well as aspects of the Islamic religion.

The United States also contributed with a clarinet duet and some American guitar selections.

Mexico is represented by two students who did a dance from Guadalajara, wearing typical costumes, including a sombrero.

Japan has four students at Stout and entertained the audience with a love song using a saxophone, guitar and a 13-string instrument native to Japan. Two students also performed a judo expedition.

Barbados is represented by two students at Stout who shared slides from their country stressing their tourism industry due to the sea on all sides.

Nigeria is represented by 93 students at Stout. A male student shared a song entitled "My Reward is in Heaven" and was sung in his native language.

Stella Chow sang "Hong Kong, Hong Kong" to represent her homeland.

> I was happy to see the big turnout of people from all over the world having a good time.
> Sam Ramratten

India and Trinidad, with five and 43 students at Stout respectively, performed together by re-enacting a song from a love story by dancing to it. An Indian Classical piece was also performed using two western instruments (violin and electronic synthesizer) and two Indian instruments (a sitar and tabla).

Wales, with two students at Stout, completed the entertainment portion of the evening with a poem which depicted childhood in the beauty of lower Wales.

After the entertainment portion, Chancellor Robert Swanson stated his sense of pride in the cultures representing themselves and said "It is a great joy to participate in this event."

The fashion show concluded the cultural show with representatives from each country showing authentic and traditional clothing.

Those attending the dinner enjoyed the information they received on the different cultures. Paul Kniesz, a second semester sophomore, enjoyed meeting his fellow classmates and learning about the different cultures. Dennis Mannering, a junior at Stout, found the evening informative but long. Sam Ramrattan, a graduate student at Stout, found the evening entertaining and said "I was happy to see the big turnout of people from all over the world having a good time."

Tribes retain treaty guarantees, DePerry stresses working together

Rich Langberg
News Editor

When the white man moved across this country during the last century, they changed the face of the nation. They killed almost all of the indigenous buffalo, and pushed the Native Americans onto reservations.

The Indians signed treaties with the U.S. in the early 1800's that ceded land to the government. That land included what is today parts of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

In recent years, those treaties have been the subject of a large amount of legal action. On Tuesday, Nov. 12 in the Mabel Tainter Theater, Ray DePerry spoke to a small crowd about the subject. He is the Executive Director of the Great Lakes Indian Fish and Wildlife Commission (GLIFWC).

DePerry is a 1970 graduate of UW-Eau Claire, receiving his bachelor's degree in social work. He also obtained a law degree from Antioch College of Law in Washington, D.C. in 1982. Prior to holding his current position, he was the tribal attorney for the Red Cliff Chippewa tribe.

DePerry's talk centered on three treaties that the Chippewas signed in 1837, 1842 and 1854. These treaties stipulated, along with the giving of land to the government, that the Indians retain the right to hunt, fish and gather on that land.

"In January, 1983, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals ratified those treaties," DePerry said. "They reaffirmed that we hadn't given up our hunting and fishing rights on the ceded territories. Since then, it has been pure hell."

That decision, called the Voight decision, stemmed from the trial of three Lac Courte Oreille (LCO) tribesmen who were arrested for hunting in ceded territories. The State of Wisconsin appealed the case to the Supreme Court, which refused to hear it. This action let the lower court's ruling stand.

"If it had been an on-reservation case, I wouldn't be standing here today," DePerry said. "It is an off-reservation case, involving the northern third of Wisconsin. That is what is significant."

Lately there has been considerable debate between hunters and the Indians. There are definite racial overtones to the issue, as a picture in the Masinaigon, the Lake Superior Chippewa newspaper shows. It depicts the chairman of the Voight Inter-Tribal Task Force holding up signs that state, "Save a deer, shoot an Indian." The signs were found near the LCO reservation in western Wisconsin.

"Where did this hatred come from?" asked DePerry. "The six Indian tribes that I represent have only 1100 hunters who shoot only about 800 deer a year. That is less then the amount killed on the roads. If you don't allow the Indians to hunt, are you going to ban the automobile from the highways?

"So this hatred isn't biological, it's social," DePerry continued. "We are doing something that no one else can do, something against the concept of one nation under God. Maybe that is why there is such hatred."

DePerry pointed out that several anti-Indian groups have sprung up

Cure for AIDS was premature

Paris, France- An AIDS patient undergoing experimental treatment with the drug cyclosporine died, one of the developers of the treatment announced on Monday.

On Oct. 29 scientists at the Even of Laennec Hospital in Paris announced that cyclosporine had proved effective in fighting the spread of AIDS, but the announcement was widely criticized as premature.

S. Africa denies repartriation report

Johannesburg, South Africa- The government denied Monday that it planned to send home thousands of foreign black workers, but it said it might be forced to do so in the future "in the face of disinvestment, sanctions and boycotts."

President P.W. Botha has said in recent months that if foreign sanctions against South Africa drive unemployment up, the government will have no option but to send home foreign workers to ensure South Africans have jobs.

Coffee drinking raises health problems

Washington D.C.- Someone who drinks five or more cups of coffee a day is almost three times as likely to develop heart problems as someone who drinks no coffee at all, scientists from Johns Hopkins Medical school said.

The scientists said a long-term study of more than 1,000 graduating medical students, followed for up to 38 years, found that 51 have so far either died unexpectedly of heart failure or suffered heart attacks or severe pain. Those who drank five or more cups of coffee per day had a 2.8 times greater risk of having the problem than those who drank no coffee.

Counties join to dispose of waste

Milwaukee- Nine counties in the state are organizing programs to give residents their first opportunity to properly dispose of hazardous household wastes.

These counties, including Eau Claire, Pierce, La Crosse, Trempelaeau, Oneida, Rock, Sauk, Portage and Waukesha counties, will be similar to collections pioneered in the City of Kenosha and five other counties. State environment and health officials earlier this year successfully lobbied the Legislature and Gov. Earl to provide $200,000 over the next two years to communities that encourage residents to separate toxic home products from regular trash.

Increased funding for state employees

Madison- Gov. Anthony Earl is expected to call lawmakers into special session on Nov. 20 to approve pay and benefit increases totaling about $144 million for state employees.

Pressure is also mounting to include consideration of a bill to add about $15 million to the state's homestead-credit program.

Perspective

'Black' remedies questioned

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

The Nov. 11, 1985 issue of Time begins a story with the premise that "Affirmative action is a failure. It allows many blacks to gain jobs and admission to schools for which they are underqualified, while cheapening the achievements of those who could have succeeded without preferential treatment. Social programs pushed by the civil rights establishment often aggravate the problems they are supposed to solve. The crisis of the ghetto — rampant crime, wanton violence, the high school dropout rate, illegitimate births — can no longer be attributed simply to white racism, nor can they be solved simply with more money from Washington. Blacks must take primary responsibility for the social pathologies that ail all communities."

These beliefs are currently held by a new generation of black intellectuals who are ideologically breaking away from their liberal predecessors.

One of the new breed, Glenn Loury, is a political economist at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. He grew up on Chicago's South Side, was awarded a scholarship to Northwestern University and then proceeded to M.I.T. where he earned his doctorate. Approximately five years later he became a fully tenured professor at his current place of employment.

In 1978 Loury wrote and saw published his controversial book entitled The Declining Significance of Race. The research that the book was based upon, which studied the stratification of his people over the past 20 years, comes to the conclusion that "economic class is clearly more important than race in predetermining job place and occupational mobility."

In an article written for the New Republic, Loury asserts that the problems which now plague the ghetto "have taken on a life of their own and cannot be effectively reversed by civil rights policies." He has also taken the stand that affirmative action "puts even the best and the brightest of the favored group in the position of being supplicants of benevolent whites."

Loury also defends the proposition that the way to reverse the tragedy of continually more blacks becoming victims of poverty each year is to make them believe that the way to economic and social improvement is to "pick yourself up by [your own] bootstraps."

National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise director Robert Woodson, a philosophical "colleague" of others like Loury, has criticized the civil rights establishment for its "liberal hypocrisy" and policies which have given birth to and furthered the evolution of "welfare colonialism."

Woodson believes that the best way for blacks to improve their lives is have community institutions like churches and fraternal orders instill the entrepreneurial spirit in black communities, thereby increasing the desire to develop and successfully operate minority-owned small businesses.

BOWLAND — DOWDALL DUO

The "making" of flute and guitar music is what this duo is all about. They have genuine love of their music which is projected in their unmatched precision and sensitivity. They have a unique collection of works from the early 19th century, which forms a special part of their repertoire. Come for an evening of relaxing and original sound.

Epilepsy awareness a step forward

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

November has been proclaimed National Epilepsy Month by President Reagan and Wisconsin Governor Anthony Earl. In view of this, the Western Wisconsin Epilepsy Center (WWEC) hopes to educate the public on what epilepsy is, what causes it, and how to react to it.

Carol Spaeth, a 1981 graduate of UW-Stout, is currently the Menomonie representative of the WWEC. She had previously worked with a training and placement service for people with epilepsy in the Twin Cities and decided to continue her activity in this area when she returned to Menomonie.

Spaeth said, "Epilepsy is an episodic neurological disorder characterized by seizures. The person is perfectly normal except during the seizures. It is a condition they have, not what they are." She said that epilepsy could appear in "anyone at anytime," although it usually appears in childhood.

Approximately 16 percent of all cases are developed during young adulthood. Spaeth said, "We all have a seizure threshold. A head injury, lead poisoning, medication, or other causes could push us over that edge. We need to be sensitive to the fact that none of us are immune to having a seizure."

The most common type of seizure is the Tonic-clonic seizure, previously known as the grand mal seizure. According to Spaeth, a seizure of this type involves a loss of consciousness and convulsive activity. Since this type of seizure is often frightening to bystanders, they may react with panic. Often they will mistakenly put something in the person's mouth, believing that they are preventing the victim from swallowing his tongue. This is untrue and often results in injuring the victim. In a case cited by Spaeth, a woman who suffered from seizures had so many things jammed into her mouth that she had had teeth knocked out and her jaw broken.

If someone is having a seizure, the best thing to do is to clear the area and not restrain the person. Usually it is not necessary to call an ambulance unless the seizure lasts ten minutes or more, or if another seizure immediately follows the first.

Medicine can be used to control up to 80 percent of seizure activity. According to Spaeth, 50 percent or more of the cases can be controlled with drugs and 20 to 30 percent can be partially controlled.

Employment is one of the hardest areas for people with epilepsy to deal with, says Luanne Coy, the director of WWEC. Even though employers are limited by law to the questions they can ask, people afflicted with epilepsy are often unsure as to what to put on their applications. They are also faced with the possibility of having a seizure on the job and its consequences. According to Spaeth, the employment outlook has improved, but those with epilepsy still "need to take an active role in advocating for their rights."

In addition to the problems of employment, many epilepsy victims must also put up with the ignorance of the public. Over the years, many myths concerning epilepsy have arisen. Ten of the more common ones are:

1. You can catch epilepsy through contact with the saliva of someone having a seizure. (You cannot catch epilepsy in any way.)
2. Epilepsy is a mental illness. (Epilepsy is a functional, physical problem, not a mental one.)
3. People with epilepsy are retarded. (Epilepsy and retardation are seperate conditions.)
4. People with epilepsy look different.
5. The biggest danger during a seizure is of the person swallowing their tongue. (The biggest danger is the chance of injury from someone trying to prevent this.)
6. People with epilepsy are likely to have a seizure at any moment. (Often drugs keep seizures in check.)
7. Having epilepsy means having convulsions. (Many types of epilepsy involve changes in awareness, muscle spasms, or sensory changes, not always convulsions.)
8. People should be restrained during a seizure. (This could cause more injury.)
9. Epilepsy is always inherited.
10. People with epilepsy can't work normal jobs. (They can, and studies have shown a lower rate of absenteeism and accidents in employees with epilepsy.)

Current antiepileptic therapy, educational handicaps, marriage and the epileptic patient, and the civil rights of the epileptic patient will be covered in a half-hour documentary on the Lifetime Cable Network on December 2 at 7:00 p.m. This will be followed by a live phone-in broadcast. On November 16 at 7:00 p.m. and November 22 at 2:30 p.m., a broadcast called "Epilepsy: Life Goes On" will also be aired.

FACTS ABOUT EPILEPSY

* 16% of all cases are developed during young adulthood.
* 50% or more of the cases can be controlled with drugs.
* 80% of seizure activity can be controlled by medication.

Protective Services investigates fire hazards found in Frykland Hall

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Changes in the method for storing items in Fryklund Hall will be made pending an independent investigation of the factors involved in the fire there on Tuesday, Oct. 29.

Director of Safety at Protective Services Dean Sankey said, "Nothing has been done as of yet since it's still under investigation. The cause was not because of anything in the room."

Sparks from an oxyacetylene torch ignited paper products in the room. Workers had been cutting out pipes in the hall using the torch to help them do needed work on the hall's renovation.

The Menomonie Fire Department responded to a small blaze in Frykland Hall last week. An investigation continues this week as to cause of the fire and to prevention of one in the future. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Menomonie Fire Chief Charles Vind says he's aware of the independent investigation process Protective Services is setting up. "It's one of those things where you have to live with the condition," Vind said, referring to the fact that no recommended changes can be made in the hall until the independent investigation of the fire is completed.

An anonymous source, contacted in Fryklund Hall, questioned the danger posed by the existence of papers, solvents, acetylene tanks and oxygen tanks in one area there. "Had that [fire] happened at 4 p.m. or so when everyone was leaving the building it could have been fairly interesting. It would depend on how much the room would heat up," the source said in reference to the possibility of an explosion.

On the presence of the acetylene tanks and the solvents in the area Vind said, "They can legally store that stuff in there." Vind said that the solvents did not present a great hazard because they are class three flammables. He noted that "the room was pretty cluttered."

Although he has made no formal recommendations about the storage of items in Fryklund Hall, Chief Vind suggested "putting all your flammable liquids in one area and all your class A combustibles in another area." Class A combustibles include paper and cloth.

Sankey said, "Things will be moved around and cleared up following the investigation."

Radium in city water, Ubel downplays risks

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Menomonie, along with 44 other cities in Wisconsin, have a municipal water supply that is contaminated by radium, a known cancer-causing material. Most of these cities are in the eastern half of the state. The only other municipality in the area affected is Downsville, located just south of Menomonie.

The radium contamination comes from the source of the city's water supply itself. The geological base of the area is Cambrian sandstone and the radium naturally dissolves from the stone into the water.

The amount of the contamination is minimal according to John R. Ubel, Utility Director for the City of Menomonie. He stated that federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and state Department of Natural Resources limit for radium contamination is 5 picocuries per liter. A picocurie equals one to the minus tenth power (-.000000000001). Menomonie's contamination runs from 4.5 to 8.8 picocuries.

To give an example of the scope of the regulations, Ubel said, "if you dropped one gram of radium in Lake Menomin you would be over federal regulations, figuring the lake being 1.43 square miles in area with an average depth of 7 feet."

"The risk of death from contamination is one-tenth that of being struck by lightning," Ubel added. "Based on a study of radium watch painters, if you consumed two liters of city water a day for seventy years there is a forty-four in one million chance of contaminaton-caused disease."

According to the same report, there are three methods of radium reduction; alternative water supplies, blending of water supplies, and treatment. The first two deal with bringing other water sources into the trouble area, and the third with removal of contaminants. The problem with the first two is that there is not a large water base within an economically feasible distance of Menomonie. Treatment is possible, but the method used is an ion exchange (zeolite) softening. The process removes the radium, but leaves sodium in the water. Excessive sodium levels has been linked to heart disease.

Ubel questions treatment of the water. He wonders whether the money it would take to fix the problem could be spent more effectively elsewhere, possibly on a cardiac response unit. As far as risk prevention efforts, Ubel felt they should be directed where you can "get the biggest bang for the buck".

Shortage of intellect spells trouble ahead

Throughout the history of civilization each generation of man has had the opportunity, obligation and responsibility to govern their immediate locale, region and country.

And as previous history has demonstrated, our generation will also be called upon to "try our hand" at changing or improving a multitude of situations, from school lunches and the future of social security to the control of infectious diseases and space-based defense shields.

Yet we believe that if our generation were asked to govern this country tomorrow, the widespread intellectual inferiority of our peers would, in all probability, bring America to her knees.

When choosing the question for "Campus Slant" each week we would prefer to gauge student opinion on whether Louis Farrakhan is a force in black America, if Mikhail Gorbachev is actually a Stalinist, if tangible results should be expected from the Geneva Summit, if Edward Kennedy's part in the Chappaquiddick affair will forever deny him entry into the Oval Office, and if the Democratic controlled House can repel a Republican attempt to become the majority by 1992.

Instead, we are forced to ask our peers whether the guy or girl should pay for a date when the girl asks the fella out, primarily because we would only receive a blank stare coupled with an "I don't know" if the question posed was any one of the aforementioned.

But in all honesty to our peers we should be fair and point out that the entire country is, each and every year, moving closer to a potential functionally illiterate majority.

Why else would Time magazine be written on the eleventh grade level?

If we do not take education and other intellectual tangibles like current events more seriously, we may eventually lose the ability and right to govern ourselves.

And if the people of this country do lose the prerogative to chart their own destiny, successive generations may look back and acknowledge that the loss was justified.

Crash and Burn

The void of FM radio wasteland

Matt Kalina

Dick Clark does not know when to quit.

I think everyone can agree that we have seen too much of this guy. I often howl out in tortuous agony, "Not him again," spinning the channel selector of fortune on my TV trying to find some show, any show, without his face flashing his fake nice-guy, "Where's my check?" smile.

The middle-age wonderboy shames television with his own glut of mediocre programming including the gloriously inane "TV's Bloopers and Practical Jokes" with the gluttonous ha-haing Ed McMahon, the grab-some bucks-and-scream "$100,000 Pryamid," the mind-blowingly worthless "Dick Clark's Nitetime" show and of course, the astonishingly stupefying favorite for pop music buffs, the wonderously second-rate "American Bandstand."

Dick is also partly responsible for the sorry situation in today's radio formats, with the help of Casey Kasem's long distance dedications and the group of assorted idiots that host Top-40 count-down shows. I would like to know how a song is ranked 37 one week and 16 the next. Who decides the ranking of these songs? Maybe its Bozo the clown. "Yow, this 'Like a Virgin' song has good lyrics, I'll give it number one."

Commercially-hyped assembly line music permeates our radio waves today. Airplay for songs is unfortunately gauged by the degree to which it fits the format of FM radio.

For example, on Heart's latest wretched comeback album, they make a desperate bid to produce music that complies with the current low-grade radio format. The originality that Heart and bands like it once had is now replaced by overwhelming radio cliches.

This kind of worn-out, insipidly dry format lives and breathes in hundreds of stations across the country, but hopefully it will die by sheer constant repetition. Duplication breeds monotony and boredom. All commercial stations are wimps when it comes down to playing new material. Most stations will not play a song unless another station has played it. Programmers shake with fright to try something new because they fear that the listening audi ce will turn to the competition.

Every radio station is a clone. They attempt the impossible by trying to please every listener.

When it comes down to the straight dope, if a song is not a hit, it simply does not get played.

Seldom with this type of programming is there an opportunity for unknown groups or artists to receive the airplay and recognition they deserve. Surely there is some group that can do better than the continual whining of such strictly FM conformist bands as Survivor or Toto. Quit your whining guys.

Commercial radio stations of today have no room for creativity. Every radio station is a clone. They attempt the impossible by trying to please every listener. By doing this, the stations have no specialty and fail to become proficient in any one area. What goes on in the minds of station managers who play Ratt's "Lay It Down," and Phil Collin's "Sussudio" back-to-back?

Groups that choose to go against the musical grain and perhaps change the course of musical history will probably never receive airplay, much less a recording contract. Today there are no commercial musical alternatives. To hear something different you have to buy a tape or an album.

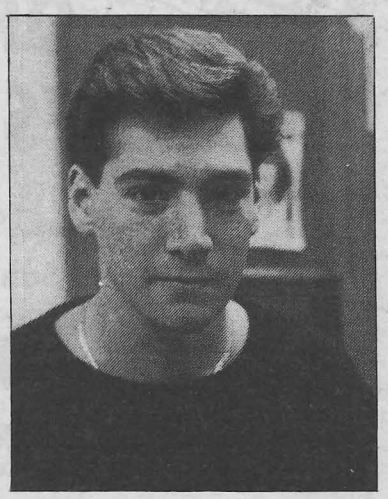
FM music is cut and dried. Cut and dried out.

And remember there is no such thing as the heavily promoted "light rock." There is acid rock, hard rock and punk rock, but there is definitely not such a thing as light rock. What many goofy half-baked station managers promote as light-rock, or even worse, easy-listening music, is actually a form of beefed-up form of Muzak.

As I vainly crank the tuning dial, searching back and forth trying to find a decent station on my car radio, I'm always tempted to rip the radio out of its compartment and throw it out my window. But deep back in my mind, I have this odd belief that gradually some radio stations will come out of their shells and send some decent tunes over the airwaves.

But I should quit dreaming because Dick and Bozo tell us what the hits are.

IGC President cites goals of all greeks



Scott Samuels

After being elected President of the Inter-Greek Council (IGC), my first major task was to reclarify the purpose of IGC. The need for this was evident because enthusiasm and motivation of the Inter-Greek Council members had diminished.

The first logical thing to do was to get all of the Greeks together on a social basis and facilitate the need for uniting and working together. This social event turned out to be a success with all of the Greek organizations represented in full force. Presidents from each organization were introduced and able to speak on their group's behalf.

Guest

Next was the need to establish and define the goals of the Inter-Greek Council, both long-term and short-term. After establishing our goals, we then proceeded on the route to their accomplishment. Too many times in organizations, ideas are discussed and then procrastinated, only to get lost as time goes by.

In setting and defining the goals of the Inter-Greek Council, everyone became aware as to what we had to accomplish throughout the semester. Our short-term goals included receiving some type of publicity on campus, publishing a newsletter to all of the new students about the Greek organizations, obtaining a new advisor, participating in the resource fair on Jan. 21 (with representation from all the Greek organizations), establishing a Greek directory/phone chain, organizing a Greek social, reinstituting the "clapper boxes" in the Student Center and having all of the Greek organizations represented at the Inter-Greek Council meetings.

At first it seemed like a tremendous amount to accomplish, but through proper planning, organization and unification on the part of the Greeks on campus all of our goals have been successfully accomplished.

I wish that I was able to relay all of the benefits of a fraternity or sorority to the students at Stout. This task would be somewhat lengthy and detailed. To give a quick summation of the benefits that can be derived, one must look at what life is like in a school with 7500 students.

The "Greek life" offers the student instantaneous camaraderie, enables them to develop leadership and managemnent skills, enriches ones social life and promotes brotherhood and lifelong friendships.

I don't believe there is a person who honestly wouldn't enjoying reaping these benefits. I have to admit, I was a bit hesitant at first, but after becoming a part of the Greek system, I became a true believer.

All the Greeks are looking forward to and anticipating a tremendous surge in the growth of the individual fraternities and sororities on campus in the near future.

Hall VP offended

In regards to the editorial in the Thursday, Oct. 31st issue of The Stoutonia, I must reply that we indeed were very offended. How many hall council meetings did you attend before deeming them "mockeries of a democratic system?" Obviously you have not attended any meetings of CKTO's Hall Council.

As a member of CKTO's executive board and a representative to Inner Residence Hall Council meetings, I must say that I have been quite impressed with the legislative body which presides over our residence halls. I have interacted with many executive board members from the different halls on campus, and I know that the officers put a great deal of time and energy into making these organizations run efficiently. To put them down as unfair and improper is quite inaccurate.

As for IRHC representatives overriding the views of floor representatives, that is totally absurd. Being the person in CKTO who had to practically get down on my knees and beg to find seven people for these external committees, finding people who feel exactly the same way I do on issues would have been impossible, even if I had wanted to do this. Also, even if the IRHC representatives in CKTO were allowed to vote, which they are not, I hardly think seven votes would be enough of an impact to override the votes of 16 floor representatives.

Instead of criticizing an organization which you obviously know very little about, why not take a look at the people who are a part of IRHC? They are a group of hard-working, very dedicated people who receive no recognition except a demeaning editorial in the school newspaper! I personally take a great deal of pride in the hall council of which I am a part, and the IRHC body which keeps us all together. So the next time you feel the need to fill some space in your newspaper, why don't you really investigate IRHC a little further, and maybe you'll realize just how important and how efficient this legislative body really is.

Valerie Clark
CKTO Vice-President of External Affairs

Solemn observance

Dear Editor:

Purely by chance on my way back from Don's Super Valu, I came upon the Vet's Club preforming their ceremony for Veteran's Day. Instead of rushing through like most students, I stayed to watch and listen. In past years, my parents would drag me to the local park to see the same type of ceremony, which at the time meant nothing to me.

As I stood with a handful of other people, I looked at the faces of the uniformed clad men. I realized I knew 3/4 of them and if war came about again, I could probably lose 75 percent of my friends including my brother, or someday my husband or child. So for this, I let a tear fall and not for the inconvenience of not getting mail or having the banks closed, for this is the only way many observe Veteran's Day.

Sorority views

Dear Editor,

In response to the article entitled, "Stout greek community hopes to unite," in the Nov. 7, 1985, issue of The Stoutonia, we, the members of Gamma Sigma Sigma is a National Service Sorority, in fact, the only sorority with service as its main objective presently on Stout's campus.

The Alpha Pi chapter of Gamma Sigma Sigma was activated on Stout's campus in 1965, with the ideals of unity, friendship and equality through service. Since that time, the sorority has been involved in service projects not only on campus and in the community, but also at the national level through projects termed "impact areas." At our national convention, held every other year, two "impact areas" are chosen to be our unified focus for the next two years.

We hope this gives the readers of The Stoutonia a clearer picture of the purposes, activities and goals of Gamma Sigma Sigma National Service Sorority.

CAMPUS SLANT/ If a girl asks a guy out, should she pay for the date?

Text by Matt Kalina
Photos by Todd A. Nelson

Julie Frank,
Sophomore,
Fashion Merchandising

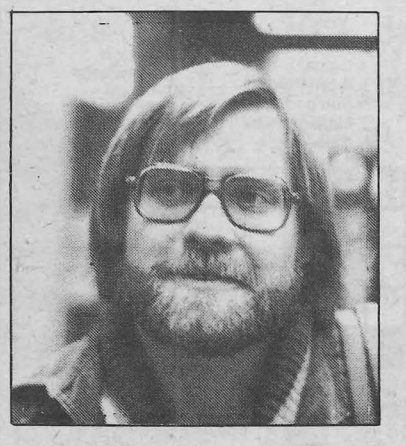
If she asks him out first then she should pay. None of the ones I know are offended if a woman pays.

Kim Vandersteen,
Senior,
Interior Design

I like it. It's a change. It's better than the guy always being aggressive and assertive. It would be great if it would happen more often.

Barbara Carlson,
Junior,
Psychology

If a girl asks a guy out, it should be her responsibility to pay, but it depends on how well they know each other.



Tom Coates,
Sophomore,
Vocational Rehabilitation

Yes, unless it's under the stipulation that it should be dutch treat. If I weren't married I would say it wouldn't bother me at all.

John Schmitt,
Sophomore,
Business Administration

If a girl wants to ask a guy out and pay for the date, that's fine. A guy shouldn't have to pick up the tab all the time. On certain occasions if a girl wants to take charge and be the aggressor she can do that.

My final word

Go ahead, have another

Rich Langberg

The big day is bearing down fast. Homecoming is past, Thanksgiving isn't too far away. Out there on the horizon, amid the snow, sleet and cold weather lies Dec. 14. Graduation. The end to my undergraduate career here at Stout. Except for two finals the last week of school.

How can I be expected to take two comprehensive final exams after I've graduated? I hope I can get out of bed by Wednesday. The incentive just won't be there, let alone the necessary brain cells.

I would have to characterize my four years here at Stout as interesting. First of all, I'd have to consider myself pretty lucky to be able to make it out in eight semesters. I didn't take a minor nor a concentration so that really helped. I've got the minimum amount of credits needed to graduate in my program and I don't want a single one more.

During my stay here in the midwest, I've come up with some helpful hints for people who plan on spending a lot of time here at Stout. This isn't a university for those who are weak of stomach. One sip of a triple bubble vodka and tonic at the Tap makes one realize this rather quickly. But you will still finish that drink because that is the time-worn Stout tradition.

Hint No. 1: Accept the fact that three-quarters of the school goes home on the weekend. This is a suitcase college in the truest sense of the term. Make the best of it. The bars aren't as crowded as on Thursdays, go out and tie one on. Even better, most of the freshmen are gone. You won't have to worry about a party getting raided and finding out the 75 percent of the people in attendance are underage.

Hint No. 2: You had better realize that this is the lowest price you will pay to get drunk anywhere, especially if you plan to move out of Wisconsin when you graduate. A tapper will never cost as little as $.50 anywhere. Play your chips right, and you can easily get wasted for less then $3.00 a night. So, what are you waiting for?

Hint No. 3: Quit hoping that they will bring beer back to concerts in the Student Center. For some reason every other school in the UW system is able to do it successfully, but at Stout it contributes to alcoholism. Since students can't drink at concerts, I suppose they just go home and watch television. Nobody that I know heads to the bars on a Thursday after (during?) a beerless show. Do you?

Hint No. 4: Don't go to a Stout football game sober. You won't be able to handle the boredom. Even when they win, they are boring. When they lose, they make the other team look boring. If you have a flask or two of peppermint schnapps and hot chocolate down the hatch, you will be more rowdy and the football team may get psyched up and actually score more than a touchdown a game.

Hint No. 5: Homecoming isn't all drinking, but pretty damn close. If you are up at 10 a.m. to watch the parade, why not have a Bloody Mary? Or two? Three? Next, go to the football game. (See hint No. 4.)

Hint No. 6: There are other things to do in Menomonie besides drink, but you have to look hard. There is only one movie a week on campus, except for the monthly foreign film offering. The State theater would run an Arnold Schwarzenegger film festival if it were offered to them. Thank heavens for the ability to rent VCRs!

Hint No. 7: There are a nice assortment of outdoor activities in the area, but you have to have some polar bear in your ancestry to enjoy them. Hiking the Red Cedar trail in 80 below? No thanks. Canoeing to Downsville is out of the question 90 percent of the time that school is in session. Forget it, and head to the Buck for a hot toddy.

Some people may look at these hints as they prepare for an extended stay here at Camp Stout and think that all people do here is drink. That isn't entirely true. It is just that drinking is a big part of campus life, and for someone new to Stout, these hints may help.

Especially for someone coming from out of state, life in Wisconsin can really take one by surprise. Per capita, there is more drinking in Wisconsin than any other state, and also most countries. Maybe this should be included in Stout's literature that is handed out to prospective students. It would really help in some decision making.

Looking back on my four plus years here in Menomonie, I've experienced some really good times. The fact that a lot of them revolved around the consumption of alcohol doesn't bother me a bit. I am a Stout student, and as I said before, that is the Stout tradition.

Student admits to theft

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

A 20-year-old UW-Stout student who intercepted his roommate's TYME card and made withdrawals, pleaded guilty to misdemeanor theft and had his sentence withheld for one year's probation in Dunn County Circuit Court Tuesday.

Antonio Rodriguez of 260 Tustison Hall was ordered to serve one year of probation and 20 hours of community service and to pay $40 crime-victim assessment and costs. After investigation by the Menomonie Police Department in September, Rodriguez admitted to Police that he took his roommate Randall Meixelsperger's TYME card, making withdrawals totaling $975. Rodriguez was cited for felony theft and was placed free on a $1,000 signature bond.

Rodriguez pleaded guilty to making withdrawls totaling $975. He was sentenced to one-years probation.

Dunn County District Attorney Michael Furnstahl said Monday the reduction in the charge from felony theft to misdemeanor theft is justified because Rodriguez was cooperative with police and had made restitution to the victim.

According to Menomonie Police Chief Dennis Beety, Meixelsperger reported the theft from his account on Sept. 13 at the United Bank in Menomonie. The money was removed from his account between Aug. 7 and Sept. 12 by means of the TYME card which had been mailed to him but had not been received, Beety reported.

TYME, which stands for "Take Your Money Everywhere," allows a holder to withdraw cash at anytime from over 400 automated teller terminals throughout Wisconsin and Upper Michigan. To withdraw money a four digit code must be entered into the TYME machine. Without this number a card cannot be used even if it is lost or stolen.

Dunn County Assistant District Attorney Frank Collins, the prosecuting attorney at Tuesday's hearing, said that if the one-year probation period is successfully completed with no other offenses committed during that time, the misdemeanor theft will be expunged from Rodriguez's record.

in the last couple of years. One, Equal Rights For Everyone (ERFE), has been particularly notorious in fighting against Indian rights.

"What is it that makes ERFE act the way that they do?" DePerry said. "Is it because I am an Indian? Is it because of what I represent? Is it frightening that I have decided to go through the courts, and that the Indians won one?"

It seems to DePerry that people are scared of the fact that Indians are now better educated then ever, and are able to interpret treaties and laws. Imitating an ERFE member, DePerry mocked, "Hunting and fishing rights? How did those Indians find that in these treaties?"

"I really believe that if you work through the established system, you will prevail," said DePerry. "Here I am representing tribal governments as an executive administrator. This is the way we can get things accomplished."

DePerry concluded his address by saying that the Indian tribes are as interested in conservation as fishing and hunting. The resources are limited, he said, and the Indians have to do their part also.

"The Indians realized that they couldn't go in and just fish without being regulated," DePerry said. "Biologically, we have to develop conservation plans so other users will also benefit. We have to demonstrate to the public that we are capable co-managers. Co-managing with the Department of Natural Resources. Co-managing with the wildlife and fisheries organizations. We want to work together."

Fieldhouse is official

A campus-wide celebration on Monday, Nov. 18 will mark the signing of the authorization for a $5 million addition to the UW-Stout fieldhouse. Governor Anthony Earl will be in attendance to sign the bill, along with State Representative Richard Shoemaker and Chancellor Robert Swanson. Other speakers will be Stout Student Association President JoAnne Prange and the master of ceremonies, Athletic Director Warren Bowlus.

Richard Shoemaker

Anthony Earl

Swanson said that this is the first time in the school's 92-year history that a piece of legislation will be signed on campus. "This is a great event for Stout and the people of West Central Wisconsin." This project is the first change for the building since its construction more than 20 years ago. At the time it was built, enrollment at Stout was 2,827. Enrollment now tops 7,700.

"The faculty and staff, certainly the administration, but most important the students have been committed to this project and kept it high on their priority list," said Shoemaker. He also noted that the addition to the fieldhouse is actually a community project. "The legislature and the community have worked together on this," he said.

Bowlus said the 40,700 square foot addition will include a multipurpose gymnasium, racquetball courts, classroom and laboratory space, a weight room, offices, service area and storage spaces. Approximately 5,900 square feet of the existing building will be remodeled to provide locker, shower, toilet and equipment storage space, as well as creating a wrestling room.

Smokeout Nov. 21

Nov. 21 is the date for the ninth annual Great American Smokeout. Sponsored by the American Cancer Society, the idea behind the nationwide drive is to have smokers give up the habit for 24 hours. The smokeout, which began in Monticello, Minn. as the brainchild of Lynn R. Smith, has a goal of having at least one out of every five smokers quit for at least 24 hours.

The local drive is being coordinated by the Student Health Services and Janice Raemaker. There are a number of programs to try and get smokers to quit. For more information, call Raemaker at 232-1314.

Facilitation conference

"Focus on Facilitation," a conference for guidance counselors, advisers and others who work with student assistance programs will be held at UW-Stout Monday, Nov. 18 in the Memorial Student Center. A $55 conference fee will be charged to cover workshops, breaks and materials.

Sponsors of the conference are Stout's Office of Continuing Education and the department of Counseling and Psychological Services. Presenters will be John Deutscher and Julie Malenke, staff members of the department. Additional information can be obtained by calling the Continuing Education office at 232-2693.

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

Dear Patty,

I'm confused. I live with five other girls in a house on north campus. We all signed separate leases upon moving in. One of the girls has dropped out of school and moved out of town. She has stopped paying her portion of the rent. Our landlord is now demanding that we (the girls that still occupy the house) pay the difference. None of us can afford to shell out an extra $25.00 a month. What can we do?

Thanks for listening,
Sandy

Dear Sandy,

First of all, bring in your lease to the SSA Office and let me look it over. The details will lead us in the right direction for your specific case.

Under almost all leases the tenants are "jointly and severally liable" for all of the terms and conditions of the lease. This means that all of the tenants, no matter how many, can each be held legally responbsible for the actions of any and all other tenants on the lease. On the lease, the term "tenant" does not refer to any particular person, but to the collective entity of all people listed on the contract.

Tenants often misunderstand or do not realize the full implication of this co-liability for all tenants until it is too late. Since all tenants can be held responsible for the actions of any individual who, for example, fails to pay rent, leaves early or damages the landlords property, it is a good idea to carefully choose reliable roommates!

Sincerely,
Patty Strassman Landlord Tenant Rep.

Demands for childcare increase, 'Nanny Network' provides service

Barb Caron
News Reporter

As the need for quality, consistent childcare skyrockets nationwide, many young women from the Midwest have taken jobs in the Northeast as Nannies and Mother's Helpers. These young women ranging in ages from 18-25 were placed by Helping Hands Inc., a licensed Mother's Helper/Nanny referral service in Wilton, Connecticut.

These women are placed in homes out east and provide live-in childcare services for reputable families five days per week in exchange for room, board, and weekly salaries. They provide care for children ages infant to teens. Their salary ranges from $120.00 to 150.00 per week. They are contracted for a 9-12 month stay with these families.

"Helping Hands nannies consider this profession as a stopgap action before making a larger commitment to a career or schooling," said Sharlene Martin, Director of the placement service.

There are many things to be learned and gained from employment as a nanny. Jill Stimart, a junior majoring in Psychology and minoring in Early Childhood Development was placed as a nanny last summer for a family in White Plains, New York.

"I learned a lot about myself and how other people live from my experience as a nanny. I learned how to handle many responsibilities in caring for the family's two children. I cared for a two-year old girl, and a newborn boy. I aided the mother through a difficult Cesarean-Section delivery. I also enjoyed cooking the family meals. The two-year old was my main responsibility and I enjoyed creating and participating in activities with her throughout the day," Stimart said.

The system of exclusively recruiting young women from the Midwest is because of the warmth and selflessness displayed by individuals hired from this region.

According to Martin, "In addition to their Midwestern origins, the Nannies also have in common a good, hands-on childcare experience. Many are from large families where they are used to babysitting and caring for siblings. All are high school graduates, many are college graduates with child related majors."

Helping Hands looks for Nannies who are family-oriented, patient, friendly, and self sufficient. "They must also have the ability to make the adjustment necessary for moving and living away from home," Martin said.

"It was difficult being away from home but the benefits and experience I gained from the job far outweigh being away from a familiar area. During the week I had three days off for myself to explore the state of New York and in particular New York City."

Upon placement, the Nannies and Mother's become part of the "Nanny Network," which provides a roster of all those placed by Helping Hands and a support group for the exchange of experiences and discussions of concerns. In addition, a social event such as a luncheon or a tea is held every three months so that new arrivals can meet those already there.

The applicants incur no charge for the Helping Hands placement service. The client family pays a fee upon acceptance of the applicant referred by Helping Hands.

SSA urges attendance at signing

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Proposed massive reductions in student aid, a developer's proposal to shut down 4th street and the delay of repairs to the pathway behind Applied Arts were major topics of discussion at the USS/SSA meeting.

SSA President Jo Ann Prange stressed the importance of having a large turnout 3:30 p.m. Monday Nov. 18 at Johnson Fieldhouse to witness Governor Anthony Earl's signing legislation approving the renovation of the fieldhouse. A pep rally has been planned around the event.

Vice President for Legislative Affairs Charles Keller addressed the Student Senate about the serious attack upon student aid proposed by the Gramm-Rudman act. Keller told of the massive cuts in Guaranteed Student Loans, Pell Grants, College Work-Study, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants and State Student Incentive Grants outlined by the act.

Keller said that the act now in congressional committee placed too heavy a burden on students for balancing the budget. "They're going to have to cut $200 billion out of the federal budget. They're not going to take it out of the military. Where will it come from? It comes out of the students," Keller said.

Keller said it's important students are aware of this attack on financial aid and act now to limit the act's scope of impact. "I don't think we can stop it, but I do think we can reduce it so students don't take the brunt of it," he said.

The Legislative Hotline in Madison, [1-800-362-9696], was given as one avenue for expressing your concerns about this or any other legislative problem.

The Campus Grounds and Facilities Committee is dealing with the proposal by a development group to close down 4th street to vehicular traffic, according to Off-Campus Senator Wes Stead. Stead said, "Basically, they want to develop a mall directly south of the building here." The concept being considered is to turn 4th street into a cobblestone walkway.

Stead asked SSA members to get back to him next week with student feedback about the potential closing down of this north-south street which runs just east of the Student Center. He stressed that the mall development was only in the conceptual stage.

Stead is frustrated by the administration's failure to take action to repair the pathway that runs up to 6th street from behind the Tech Wing. "In essence, this problem will be dealt with this year the way it's been dealt with in the past, by ignoring it," he said.

No action was taken about the pathway at the meeting as Stead said, "It's too late to get it fixed this year anyway." Stead expressed anger at the SSA when he said, "These are the sort of things we should be dealing with rather than some of the other things."

In past weeks, Stead has displayed his impatience over the lengthy discussions about excused/inexcused absences of SSA members at their meetings. The topic of excused absences was cleared up this week by a motion from Senator Sandra Kampen which the SSA passed.

Tracy Lea Landis was welcomed back to her post as Women's Affairs representative. Landis asked that the SSA take expedient action to deal with these concerns brought up by Senator Stead rather than appointing another committee to look into the questions he raised.

Landis stressed the need for SSA to follow through on particular issues rather than bringing them up one week for a discussion without any resultant action.

Landis said she was encouraged by the Facilities and Grounds committee's "very responsible interest in paying attention to women's safety." She stressed her goal to establish long-term awareness of safety concerns on campus.

Foreign film reflects director's talents

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Brian Sweeney Fitzgerald has an obsession. He is besieged by a foreign personality; he is possessed.

His dream, his nightmare, is to build an opera house in the Amazon interior. Determined beyond logic, he intends to invite Enrico Caruso, opera's greatest legend, to sing at the premier. The premier is at the muddy little village of Iquitos, 1200 miles deep in the jungle.

The Foreign Film Society's next offering is Fitzcarraldo. The film will be showing tonight and Friday, at 6 p.m. and 9 p.m., in 321 Applied Arts.

This film comes with high expectations and there is a chance for disappointment. The film is extraordinarily grand and ambitious, both in the nature of Fitzcarraldo's quest and in the reality of the production.

Undoubtedly, the reason for this grandeur is the director, Werner Herzog. Herzog is a genius of vision. His coordination between idea and final film is the fluency of master artistry. With Fitzcarraldo he won Cannes Film Award for Best Director.

Having seen four other Herzog films, I feel it possible he could have five such awards. His film on the Sahara desert is filled with such bizarre images taken from the curious reality of Saharan life, that it seems alien in the strongest sense of the word.

Another film of his called Heart of Glass featured a film cast that was hypnotized throughout much of the filming. This left the film with a profoundly eerie stage presence and a speech cadence that haunts.

In Fitzcarraldo there is something slightly askew both in the overall feeling and in the man himself. Fitzcarraldo is a wierd human. His environment is odd and his mindset is, if not unstable, certainly a bit off-center.

This film had tremendous potential. The making of Fitzcarraldo took five years and six million dollars. It wasn't spent on plastic special effects. It was spent on housing and transportation for his mixed international cast to travel through the Peruvian Amazon.

Certainly the strangeness of the film is due in no small part to the nutty acting style and personality of Klaus Kinski, who is incidently, the father of Natasha Kinski.

Klaus is a veteran actor who created the role type later exploited with legitimate success by Rutger Hauer. Hauer, a sort of Teutonic Clint Eastwood with existential angst, played the main heavy in Blade Runner.

Originally, the role of Fitzcarraldo was to be played by Jason Robards, whose acting is far more versatile than Kinski. Robards was knocked out of the picture by amoebic dysentry, another victim of Herzog's passion for cinematic suffering.

Knowing this was the original cast, the chemistry between Robards and female lead Claudia Cardinale, who played Molly, brothel madame and girlfriend to Fitzcarraldo, would make for a more coherent film. It seems likely Cardinale had a much more difficult time relating to Kinski's loony character.

But she tried. Her devotion to Fitzcarraldo's passionate love of opera and Caruso is admirable but their relationship is odd. She seems protective and understanding, but from his screen antics, it appears that she could only really care for him if she was a bit of a lunatic herself. She did not, however, act at all crazy.

Fitzcarraldo is portrayed as a man of amazing ambition and determination. He wants Grand Opera in Iquitos, on the edge of the rubber industry jungle frontier.

He needs the support of the rubber barons, but because of another of his schemes, they refuse to cooperate directly. His previous plan was to build a Trans-Andes railway.

There are some fantastically wierd scenes in this film, an obsessed film about obsession. One favorite comes after Fitz is jailed for a small outbreak involving his capture of the local church, and his raving proclamation from the bellfry.

There is a vigil outside the church. A group of small children stand motionless praying, with candles, and an unsettling, droning melody is played by one of the kids on a violin.

Fitzcarraldo decides to give up on his ice factory business, another good but ultimately nutty idea. He decides to acquire some land and exploit the rubber industry himself, to raise enough capital to build the opera house.

He developes a remarkable plan, an amazingly crazy idea. To reach the only unclaimed land he decides to travel up the Amazon, up the Pachitea River to where the land is, then somehow, haul the boat over the hill that seperates the Pachitea and the impassible rapids of the Pongo River.

The entire movie seems to have been made for one scene; the 600,000 pound riverboat towed by natives up the steep mountainside.

What Robards could have brought to the film is impossible for Kinski to portray with any depth. Robards would have delivered a lovable loser, someone who had better ideas and an unfailing ability to fail. Robards would have brought tears to the audience.

Kinski brings another, entirely crazy presence to the screen. He was brought in on short notice and he mixed what he knew of the Fitzcarraldo character with another Herzog character he had played, Aquirre, The Wrath of God.

Aquirre was a 16th century

Bolo restaurant's fine cuisine is a loving tribute to owner's dog

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Here in this pleasant little college town, there stands a monument to a hunting dog. It is not your average, run-of-the-mill monument; in fact, it is rather out of the ordinary. This monument consists of a 26 unit motel, supper club, and cocktail lounge. It is known to residents as simply "The Bolo" and is owned and operated by Dick and Susan Neubauer and Dick and Billie Walleen.

Review

Located across from the Thunderbird Mall, the Bolo represents the love of a man who understands what it means to have owned and loved a good hunting dog. The Black Labrador retriever was owned by a man named Bill Braker back in the 1940's and 50's.

At the time, Braker owned and operated five different food businesses, including the White Front Cafe in downtown Menomonie. While running this restaurant, Braker acquired a Black Labrador puppy named Calmoor Bolo. Braker spent considerable time training Bolo and eventually entered him in field trials, where Bolo received a number of ribbons, silver trophies and the Wisconsin State Championship in 1947. In 1948, Bolo won second place honors at the National Field Trials.

In 1954, Braker sold the White Front Cafe and bought the Harbor Inn. All of Bolo's trophies were displayed in a case above the bar at the Harbor Inn and the top selling item on the menu was known as the "Bolo Special."

When Braker had a new supper club built in 1968, he decided he wanted Bolo to be remembered in a substantial way, so he named the new business "The Bolo".

The interior is unique, containing the image of Bolo throughout the restaurant and cocktail lounge. A large portrait of Bolo, plus several other photographs adorn the walls. The dog's image has been reproduced on a piece of buckskin, which hangs in the cocktail lounge. The red and black carpeting is designed with squared reproductions of the dog's head and neck. Bolo's image also decorates the cocktail napkins, placemats and menus.

Combined with this warm and inviting atmosphere, the Bolo offers excellent service and delicious food. "Dedicated to serving the finest in dining and beverages at a nominal cost" is the secret behind the Bolo's success.

The menu contains a variety of items including seafood combinations, steaks, chicken, sandwiches and special "Light Suppers." There are also a number of appetizers and homemade desserts. Prices range from $6.50 for one-half a spring chicken to $13.95 for lobster tail. In addition to the dinner menu, they have a special luncheon menu which contains a variety of items ranging from $3.00 to $4.00.

After examining the menu, we began with an order of batter fried mushrooms, which were light, crispy, and just enough to whet the appetite. When we had finished the appetizers, a large lettuce salad was brought to the table for each of us, topped with our choice of dressing.

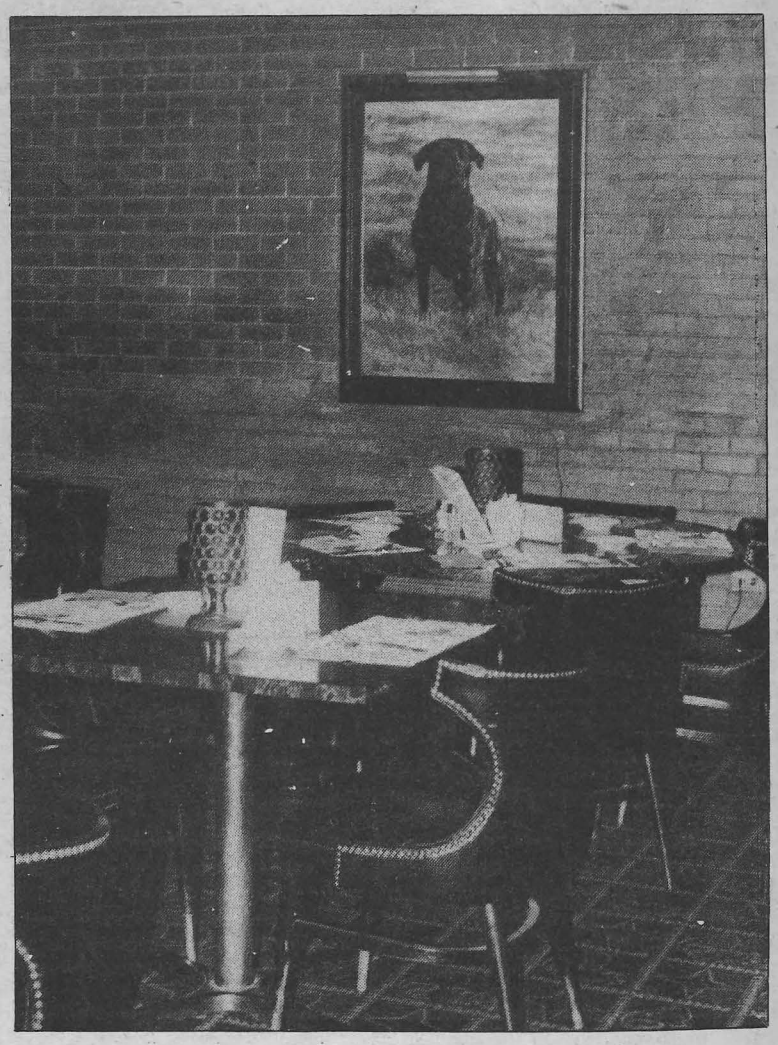
The entire meal was delicious and served in generous portions...

The salad was followed by one of the Bolo's specialties, popovers. They were considerably larger than average popovers, baked to a golden brown and steaming hot. Popovers are served every night except Friday.

When we had finished our salads, the main course was delivered. I had selected the Whole Teriyaki Chicken Breast, which was excellent, as was the accompanying baked potato. My dinner companion had ordered the Prime Rib, which he described as "done to perfection."

The entire meal was delicious and served in generous portions, and although we were quite full, we couldn't resist sampling one of the homemade pies for dessert. We ordered pecan pie, which proved to be heavenly. Rich and full of nuts, it ended our meal with just the right touch.

Overall, the evening was an elegant alternative to off-campus cooking and would be an equally nice change from on-campus dining. The courteous service, high quality food, and unique interior combine to make the Bolo a truly fine monument to a fine dog.



Bolo lives on in high style. The dog-decor doesn't detract from the quality of the meal. Devotion has its place. At least you don't have to tell the dog to stop begging. (Stoutonia Photo by Kevin Berg)

'Breakfast Club' a cut above other teen films

Tim Hopkins
Arts Reporter

The Breakfast Club is outstanding since it's both entertaining and thought-provoking in its examination of the give and take between teen agers. Breakfast Club, being shown this Sunday evening and Monday evening Nov. 17 and 18 at 7 and 9:30 pm in the Great Hall, doesn't sacrifice quality in search of the cheap laugh.

Preview

The five teenagers depicted are as real as any you'd meet in school today. The setting is the school library where these teenagers are forced to spend Saturday together in detention.

Molly Ringwald blossoms in her performance as Claire, the luscious young lady stuck in detention because she was skipping class to go shopping. Her role as Samantha in Sixteen Candles was hardly memorable, simply because the part was practically a cardboard stereotype of the girl turning 16 who's totally hung up on her looks.

The character of Claire in Breakfast Club becomes more and more interesting to watch in the film as you realize there's more to this woman than meets the eye. Watching the relationship develop between this group of five teenage miscreants is what maintains the thread of interest throughout the film.

The day in the detention center starts uncomfortably for the group as each is equally unsure about the others. Bickering and bullying occur as they attempt to feel one another out.

Similarities between this "puppie" film and the "yuppie" classic The Big Chill can be seen when Judd Nelson strongly portrays bad-boy John Bender, the character who leads the group first into trouble and eventually helps them be honest enough about themselves to discover more about who they really are.

Watching Judd Nelson you remember William Hurt's fine portrayal of Nick the Vietnam vet-turned-drug dealer, whose cynicism about life helps the characters in The Big Chill review their own lives more clearly.

The Saturday detention is truly a learning experience for these students since they get down to asking serious questions about each other's beliefs and they end up examining themselves in a new light.

Films in Review critic Louise Stanton praised the film saying, "The Breakfast Club stands out among all the teen films being churned out these days for what it doesn't have. There isn't a life or death dependence on cheap laughs or jiggling young flesh. Instead, it presents teenagers as individuals who aren't completely concerned with the opposite sex or nail polish."

As a pre-Thanksgiving treat, the Sesame Street movie Follow That Bird will be shown in the Great Hall this Saturday at 2 and 7 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m.

Fitz

Spanish conquistador of the Amazon. He was also obsessed, this time with a passion to rule, a passion for power. He also dragged his boat where it did not belong, to achieve an impossible goal. He was a raving, raging madman to the nth degree.

Fitz was not mad, just obsessed. Kinski, however, is slightly mad, at least. The film becomes a comedy-adventure with a twist—a twisted hero.

One of Kinski's strongest screen features is his beserk appearance. His eyes seem to have been made to stare. His orange spikey hair is perfectly wild looking.

Before the departure of the boat and its motley crew, Fitz gives Molly a portrait of them both. He looks like he has toys in the attic, and they are all wound-up a little too tightly.

He is not a dangerous madman. He loves the children of the village. He plays Caruso for them and gives them chips of ice. He promises to seat their pig in a red velvet opera chair in its own opera box. What a swell guy.

He loves beauty and the power of the songs. The viewer is never told where this passion comes from, and it doesn't seem to matter. Kinski as Fitzcarraldo is hard to see deeply into, in ways that another actor would not have been. He is deep, but the surface is opaque.

Kinski plays Fitz sometimes like a lovable loser, a sort of Dagwood Bumstead to Cardinale's Blondie. Mainly, he plays Kinski, who played Aquirre who is now playing Brian Sweeney Fitzgerald.

While the film seems to be a mixture of obsessions, intentions and deliveries, it is still a tremendously strong film. It is comic, it is an adventure, not unlike a documentary of the once-real Fitzcarraldo.

The real Fitzcarrald was a successful rubber baron, who once had a similar idea. In 1894, he dismantled his smaller riverboat and had it hauled over a smaller hill. The rich get richer.

In the true Herzog fashion, Herzog took a simple story and drove it into a monumental passion play of his own.

To Herzog's credit, the story ends without leaping grandness, without moralizing on the ends of ambition, without an existential tragedy.

It does end nearly three hours after it starts, however, which means that the first showing, tonight and Friday will be at 6 p.m. The second show is at 9 p.m. All four shows are in Applied Arts rm. 321 and are free to the public.

What's Happening

Compiled by Julie Abel

Booze Brothers Revue

The long awaited return of the Booze Brothers Revue. Tonight in the Great Hall, the hottest of the big band rock and roll revues revs up. Last year more than 1000 people danced the night away.

Opening for the Booze Brothers is DCver, a Stout band familiar with the Great Hall and great rock and roll. Tickets are $3 at the door. Show time is 9 p.m.

Bowland-Dowdall Duo

The "making" of flute and guitar music is what this duo is all about. They have a genuine love of their music which is projected in their unmatched precision and sensitivity. They have a unique collection of works from the early 19th century, which forms a special part of their repertoire.

The flute-guitar duo can be heard on Thursday, Nov. 21, in the Crystal Ballroom at 8 p.m.

Mask Maker

The Fine Arts Association is sponsoring mask-maker, dramatist, artist Robert Faust. Faust will be appearing in performance at the Mabel Tainter Theater, Tuesday, Nov. 19, 7-9 p.m. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Michael Bird

Describing himself as a "songwriter presenting (his) music," Michael Bird finds roots in Dan Folgelburg, Jim Croce, and Harry Chapin while entertaining with a style distinctly his own. Performing solo, whether at piano or guitar, Michael always shows his warm personality and establishes an uncanny rapport with his audience. It is obvious that Michael Bird is more than a songwriter and singer — he is truly an entertainer.

Performances are in the Price Commons on Thursday, Nov.14 at 8:15 & 9:15 p.m., and in the Pawn on Friday & Saturday Nov.15 & 16 at 9:15 & 10:15 p.m.

Dr. Tom & Seus

Dr. Tom & Seus are masters at the art of storytelling. Through the use of facial expressions and gestures they communicate through the universal language of mime. Their stories range from hilarious to dramatic. Original music written by Seus along with verbal introductions, and sound effects add great depth and character to their presentation.

Dr. Tom & Seus will be performing on the stage of the Mabel Tainter Theatre on Friday, Nov.15. There will be two performances. A matinee will be presented at 1 p.m., and an evening performance at 7:30 p.m. For more information or to reserve tickets: call 235-9726.

Baroque Music

Menomonie and the Mabel Tainter Theatre will be hosting the 2nd concert of a three concert series performed by LYRA. LYRA is a newly established Baroque orchestra that is devoted to performing 17th and 18th century music on period instruments.

This is a rare opportunity for music lovers in this area. The LYRA Concert, with director Randolph Bourne, made a strong impact upon the concert-goers at the first performance of the Menomonie Series. Those attending the last two concerts will not be disappointed for they promise to be equally as impressive.

The 2nd concert will be on Saturday, Nov.16 at 8 p.m., and is titled "Water Music" which features works by Handel and Telemann. The final concert is "A Farewell To The Bach Tercentenary" and will be on April 6 at 3 p.m. It will feature concertos for one, two, three and four harpsicords. These concerts will be held in the Mabel Tainter Theatre.

Series tickets are now at a reduced rate of $18 for a single series. Student series are available for $11.75 with Student I.D.

The LYRA Concert Series is brought to the Mabel Tainter Theatre through funding from First Bank and Trust, Menomonie.

Tryouts

The Menomonie Theatre Guild will hold tryouts and crew sign-up for the murder mystery musical Something's Afoot, Nov. 18, 19, and 20 at 7:30.

A spoof of the Agathie Christie mystery genre, Something's Afoot has parts for four women and six men ages 18-60. All cast members, with the exception of the Butler, have an opportunity for solo and ensemble work. Auditions will include singing America or The Saints as well as reading from the script. Copies of the script are available at the Mabel Tainter Library.

The musical will be under the artistic direction of Marion Lang. Dennis Siebenaler will direct the music and Dan Riordan will head the production staff. "We encourage all community members who have an interest in the theatre to join us. It's a very funny show, full of zany suspense and comic surprise," Lang states.

Rehearsals will begin in Jan. Production dates are Feb. 21-23,27,28, and March 1-2. Call Marion Lang (235-5686) for further information.

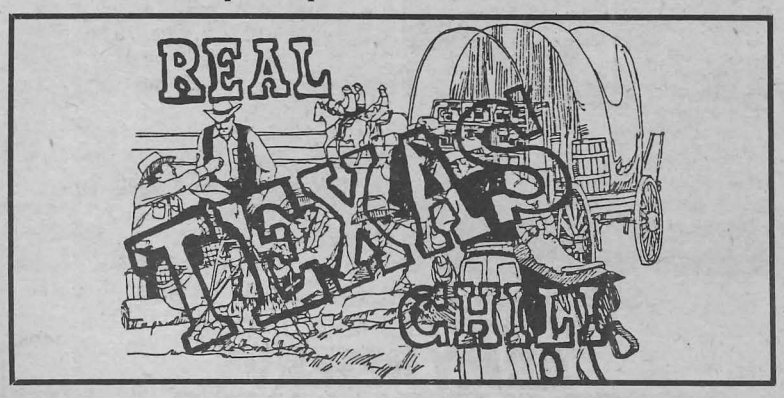
Tasty chili variations

Linda Konkol

A good dish to accompany the chilly weather and newly arrived snow is chili. This dish has evolved from a hearty cowhands' food to an economical and versatile food, popular throughout America.

Chili was invented in Texas, but not by Texans. It was Canary Island natives, who moved to San Antonio in 1723, who first concocted the spicy meat dish containing wild onions, local peppers, garlic, and other spices. This early chili was an improvisation of the dish they had cooked for generations in their native land.

After its introduction in America, cattle drivers and trail hands did the most to popularize chili throughout the Southwest. Range cooks used wild oregano, dried chili peppers, wild garlic, and onions to spice up the tasteless, tough meat from the longhorn cattle raised on cactus and dried grass.



One range cook is reported to have planted gardens of the spices used in chili along trails as he went toward California. He then harvested the gardens as he came back.

Chili grew in popularity in the Southwest, and in 1880 the first "chili parlor" appeared in San Antonio. More chili parlors emerged, and one even played a role in history; Jesse James is said to have spared a small town's bank because his favorite chili parlor was there.

Although chili is still the most popular in the Southwest, it is now enjoyed all over the United States. Chili parlors have appeared in Beverly Hills, Houston, Chicago, New York, and Washington, D.C.

Chili is even gaining popularity among celebrities; Elizabeth Taylor, Gloria Vanderbilt, and Burt Reynolds are said to frequent these chili parlors.

Methods of serving chili have become quite creative. In Cincanniti, chili is served in layers, starting with spaghetti and ending with beans, onions, and cheese. A restaurant in New York serves it in tall sundae glasses, topped with sour cream and a cherry tomato.

There is controversy over the best way of serving chili or "bowls of red." Southwesterners like their chili very hot. Cowhands say of chili, "If it don't make you cry, it ain't hot enough." Names of traditional hot chilis, "Hot Pants Chili" and "Capitol Punishment" illustrate this view. Many others today prefer milder versions.

Lovers of chili, known as "chiliheads" out west, disagree on the ingredients as well as the spiciness. Texas chili purists like their "bowls of red" to contain mostly chunks of beef and spices. Others prefer quick-cooking versions with added ingredients like tomatoes and beans.

The tomato, ground beef, and bean mixture most often served in Wisconsin may be scorned by Texan chili purists, but it has its merits. It is easily prepared ahead of time; reheating actually enhances and intensifies the flavor.

Chili also freezes well. However, don't freeze chili which contains beans; add beans when reheating frozen chili if desired.

Good accompaniments to chili include boiled rice or pasta, warm cornbread or tortillas, corn chips, chopped onions, sliced cucumbers, shredded mozarella or cheddar cheese, and sour cream.

The following chili recipe is quickly and easily prepared. It comes from one of Stout's very own English lecturers, Richard Kuss.

30-Minute Chili

3/4 lb. ground beef
1/2 large onion, diced
1/2 large green pepper, diced
2 cans (16 oz. each) whole tomatoes
1 can (15 1/2 oz.) kidney or chili beans, drained
1 can (8 oz.) pork and beans
1/2 tsp. chili powder
salt to taste

Brown ground beef in a large saucepan; drain. Add remaining ingredients. (Add more chili powder if desired). Bring to a boil. Simmer for 10 minutes. Makes 4-6 servings.

This Texas-style chili is for chilihead purists. It is a more traditional type of chili, with lots of beef, little broth, and a longer cooking time. The recipe contains no beans; in Texas, beans are usually served alongside, rather than in the chili.

Texas-Style Chili

2 to 2 1/2 lbs. beef roundsteak, cut into 1/2-inch cubes
1 onion, chopped
1 garlic clove, minced
1 can (10 3/4 oz.) beef broth
1 1/2 cups water
2 tsp. oregano
2 tsp. sugar
1/2 tsp. salt
1 can (16 oz.) whole tomatoes, chopped
1 can (4 oz.) green chili peppers, drained and chopped

Brown cubes of roundsteak in a large saucepan along with the onion and garlic. Add beef broth and water, stirring to blend with meat drippings in pan. Stir in oregano, sugar, salt, and tomatoes. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat and cover loosely. Simmer about 1 1/2 hours or until meat is tender, stirring occasionally. Stir in peppers. Cover and simmer 1/2 hour longer. Makes 8 servings.

German artist's exhibit displays European traits and individuality

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

"My art expresses dance, exuberance and energy," German artist Barbara Kreft said at the Nov. 5 opening of her exhibit in UW-Stout's J. Furlong Gallery.

Kreft's exhibit consists of a group of large, vibrant mixed-media paintings from the last three years of her career.

"I have made some drastic changes in my life and career in the past few years," Kreft said. She explained that her early works were small, static and meticulous. Most of them were drawn carefully on tiny pieces of paper using soft, tasteful colors.

"Now I try to use shocking colors and exciting combinations," Kreft said, referring to the works included in the show. "There is a great deal of subconscious symbolism associated with my choice of colors and themes."

Landscapes and human figures are the two predominant themes in Kreft's paintings.

"I paint a lot of seascapes and forests," Kreft said. "These are the landscapes that I experienced while I was growing up in northern Germany."

Kreft has also painted many cityscapes based on the dilapidated sections of West Berlin.

"Naturally, there is a great deal of European influence in my landscapes," Kreft said. "It is evident in the types of roads, buildings and bridges that I paint."

The figures in her paintings are primarily nude females, yet Kreft stresses that these figures are not of a sexual nature. "The nudes are based on primitive African drawings," Kreft said. "They are extremely flat, not at all sexually symbolic."

Figures and landscapes are integrated in Kreft's newest works.

"My latest work is romantic," Kreft explained, "But it also displays a certain anxiety about the inevitable loss of love and life."

Animals are often included with the humans and landforms in these new paintings.

"I include the animals because they are so unpretentious," Kreft explained. "Animals are comfortable being themselves; they're not always trying to pretend to be someone else."

Kreft begins her projects by sketching. She keeps a journal of sketches which are later used as the basis for her paintings.

Her work is also influenced by European artists such as Van Gogh and Rousseau and American artist Jackson Pollock.

"Sometimes, I steal things from other artists," Kreft confessed. "I don't keep art books in my studio or attend the exhibits of my contemporaries when I'm working. It's far too dangerous. Their ideas might creep into my work."

It often takes Kreft several months to complete a single painting. "Each of my works has the possibility of several versions," Kreft said. "I often change and repaint many sections of a painting."

"A good painting is never completely finished," Kreft continued. "Perfection is death. I always like to leave my works a bit unfinished."

When discussing the future of her art, Kreft is deliberately vague. "Nothing I do is predetermined," Kreft explained. "I work from an unconscious level and I am often quite surprised at the results."

Kreft received her Master of Fine Arts degree from the School of Fine Arts in West Berlin.

She has been living in Minnesota for the past ten years, and has taught at the College of St. Benedict in St. Joseph and at the Minneapolis Institute of the Arts.

Kreft is currently teaching at the St. Paul Academy Summit School. Her works can be seen at numerous colleges, galleries and art centers throughout Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Her works will be on display at the J. Furlong gallery until Nov. 22.

Spikers achieve best record in history

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's volleyball team completed their season losing to UW-Eau Claire and UW-La Crosse Tuesday, Nov. 5. Due to these losses, the team was unable to compete this past weekend at the WWIAC Conference Tournament at UW-Oshkosh.

Analysis

The Blue Devils overall record of 22-31 left them with the best record in Stout women's volleyball history. Head Coach Lynda Lee's reaction about not making it to

I wasn't disappointed in the team . . . but I was unsatisfied with the finish.
—Lynda Lee

conference was one filled with regret and disappointment. "I felt very disappointed about not making it to the tournament. I wasn't disappointed in the team because they did play well, but I was unsatisfied with the finish."

Looking back on her first year, Lee feels she could have been tougher on her coaching approach. Lee said, "I think I should have imposed more punishments when things didn't go right. In the future, I will try to be more rigid and insistent that things be done a certain way. I will also try to spend more time with my players on an individual basis, and verbally use more positive reinforcement."

The Lady Devils will be losing two senior hitters. Karen Mickelson, a native of Hibbing, Minn., expressed what she will miss most as she leaves the team. "One thing I will really miss is the competition, and playing high-skill level volleyball." Mari Church, a native of Barron, Wis., felt similarly, adding, "I will miss not being a part of the team, and not seeing my teammates everyday, and being active in an organization with quality players."

Reflecting back on the season, some experiences learned from Lee by her teammates were cooperative awareness and communication skills. Church said, "I've learned Coach Lee's theory. In order to enjoy volleyball you've got to know it. It's important to learn the fundamentals." Mickelson elaborated on this, stating, "She really taught us to talk and work as a team. She was as much a part of the team as we were."

Recruiting for Division III schools has always been a difficulty, and for the Stout women's volleyball team there is no exception. Lee said, "One of my goals for next year's season will be that of bringing in more recruits. We have had a pretty impressive year as far as win/loss from previous years, and I definitely feel this will pull in more recruits for next year. No one wants to come to a school with a losing record. In Division III they need that record, plus a genuine interest in the academic field offered, to direct themselves in our direction."

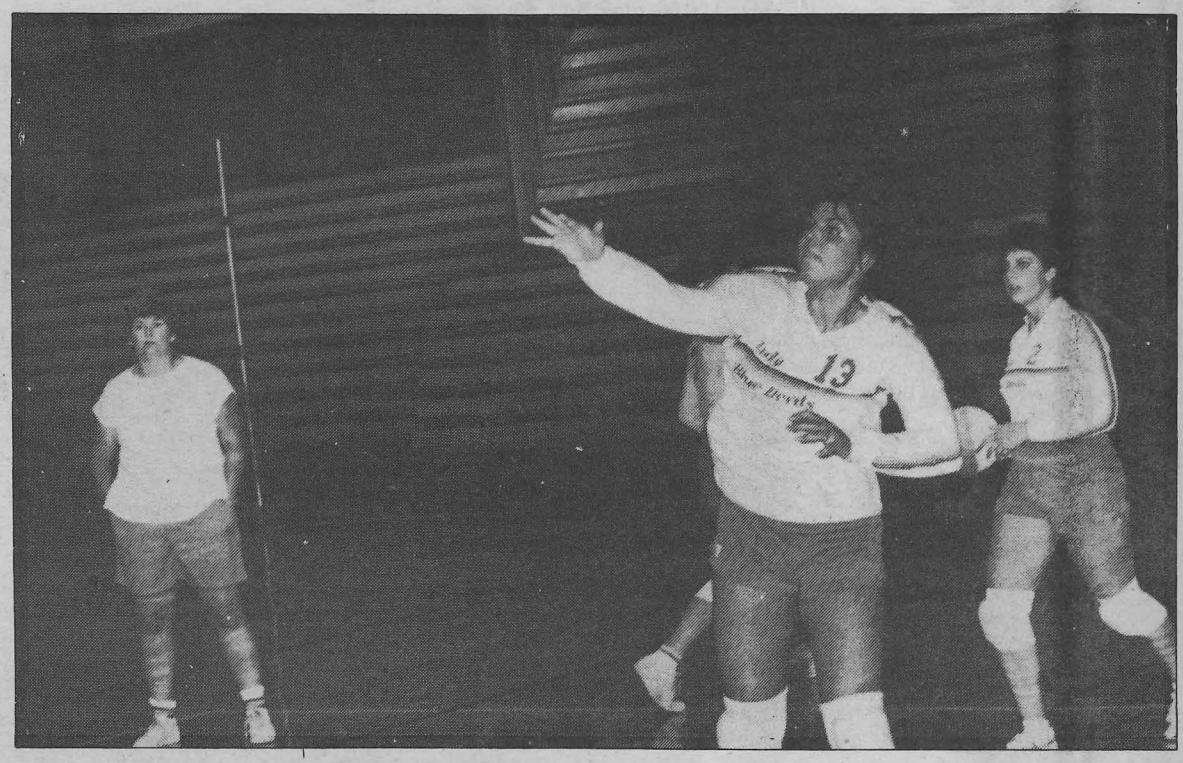
Losing only two members for next year's season shows a strong chance of the team being able to pick up from where they left off. Lee said, "We're losing two strong hitters, and this will hurt us, but I think their positions will be filled up. I feel the success we have achieved this year will be multiplied upon in the next. Because the fact that I am a first year coach has hindered the program [lack of consistency], I will know next year where my team is, and they will know what to expect from me. We won't have to start over as we did this year."

Some changes for next year's coaching agenda will include recognizing individual skills while still strongly stressing the team attitude. Lee said, "I want to definitely stress that my team wins for Stout, but next year I will try to acknowledge personal attributes. That isn't to say that I will build a team with ego, after all, there is no 'I' in team."

Determination and dedication in the sport of volleyball are important factors in shaping the team's attitude. Commenting on this point, Lee said, "I think my team was pretty dedicated in their own minds, but at times I required more of them than I felt they thought they'd have to give." Advice from Church on what it takes to be successful in the sport stressed the above factors as well. Church said, "To be successful you have to concentrate and practice hard because this is what will carry over to the games. To be a winner, you've got to like the sport and strive to be the best."

Anticipating next year's season, both Lee and her teammates feel that it will be a good one. Lee said, "I'm definitely proud of the team, and next year I am looking forward to getting more quality play out of the team. Mickelson added to this saying, "I'm satisfied with this year because the team was a lot of fun to play with. You never like losing, and there are a lot of times I know we could have won, but next year should be great with Lynda as coach, and I feel the team will do real well."

In closing, Church commented on the past season and about her coach saying, "It was a fun, fast season and Lynda's attitude made us a very close team. I couldn't have asked for a better team to be on, and Lynda made it a great year. It was a terrific season to end with."



Becky Horsman practices one last serve before the Lady Devils suffered two defeats last week. The two losses kept the Lady Devils out of the conference tournament, but they still managed to post the schools best record, 22-31.

Title IX allows tryout denial if opportunity exists in other sports

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Could a six-foot-two-inch, 185-pound woman be denied the right to try out for the UW-Stout football team? Yes, she could, according to Title IX.

Title IX Section 86.41 states that no person shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, be treated differently from another person or otherwise be discriminated against in any interscholastic, intercollegiate club or intramural athletics.

However, it also states that the athletic sponsors have to provide equal opportunity for members of both sexes, and it is this clause that would prohibit a woman from trying out for the team. Other opportunities do exist for that female to enter, therefore she can be denied the right to a fair tryout.

Warren Bowlus, the UW-Stout Athletic Director, said that in certain sports men and women could participate and possibly compete evenly. For instance, he says that women could ask to participate on the men's golf program and could be allowed to play.

"I have not opened up the program to women," UW-Stout men's golf program Head Coach Sten Pierce said. "I believe that since there are other sports available for the women, then I don't have to permit it."

He says that unless there was a tremendous woman golfer that had the needed strength and length to compete with the men, most women would just not be able to stack up. Also Pierce says, "Just figuring out where the ladies would tee off on the course would open up quite a can of worms."

Pierce attributes most of the seemingly limited opportunity to the lack of funds. "I would be all for a ladies golf team, but they barely have enough funds for my men's team."

Could men try out for the UW-Stout women's volleyball team? Bowlus said, "I would hate to see men playing on this team because the skill level is not the same."

The UW-Stout women's volleyball Head Coach Lynda Lee also agrees with Bowlus on this issue. "Men physically can jump higher than women, and because of this fact, it would put the rest of the women at a considerable disadvatage," Lee said.

She believes that if one man is allowed to play, then other men will follow, and this would gradually make the women's program extinct. Therefore, Lee says that she would discourage a man from trying out for the women's volleyball program. Also she said, "There is a men's club on campus."

Citing Title IX, Bowlus said that an athletic program does not have to provide an equal program, but an equal opportunity, and this he says, "I totally believe in."

Additionly Bowlus said, "Title IX does not say you have to allow women to play in contact sports. Therefore, "We would not allow a women to go out for the football team."

Apparently UW-Stout Head Football Coach Bob Kamish agrees. If a female wanted to try out for the football team, "I would certainly try to discourage her. The game wasn't designed for females to play," Kamish said.

"There are certainly always exceptions," Kamish said. "Maybe if a rather large woman went out for the team she could make it. It could happen."

If Stout was faced with a woman wanting to wrestle or a man wanting to participate on the women's gymnastics team, Bowlus says that they could be denied the right because the programs at Stout provide an equal opportunity for both sexes.

So, if there are ladies dreaming of becoming a linebacker for the Stout football team, or if there are men desiring to spike the volleyball all over the court on the women's volleyball team, they had better start dreaming about something else. Because if they wish to pursue these goals, they will meet strong opposition, for Title IX will be waved in their face stating all the reasons why they can't participate on the sport of their choice if it is not offered for their sex. Quite simply, according to Title IX, there are other opportunites for them.

Coach optimistic about young wrestlers

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The 1985 UW-Stout wrestling team appears to be a young team still in transition from having a new coach of two years standing, and of having small numbers. The Blue Devils will have seven returning veterans who will help provide some structure to the building unit.

Review

Head Coach Walt Perkins feels very optimistic about his team despite their small numbers. "It is an improved situation from the previous years. The transition is going much smoother, and practices are a lot better. Based on this, I hope it will yield results in the win/loss column."

Leadership will come from three different spots this year. Dave Witt, senior veteran at heavyweight who sustained an injury earlier and is coming back from that, will pick up where he left off. Jon Coldwell, senior veteran at 126 lbs., will also contribute significantly to the team leadership. Senior veteran at 118 lbs., Keith Rusch, will provide good, quality leadership this season. According to Perkins, "Keith is our best leader this year. He will be providing a lot of tone and pace for the team to draw from."

An upset in the starting line-up this season shows Rusch red shirting instead of starting. The reason for this change is that the returning senior wants to remain eligible to compete in next year's season. Expressing his feelings about sitting on the side, Rusch said, "It will be rough not starting, and I'll really miss competing. These are a good core of guys, and I feel the season will be good for them and I wish I could be out there to contribute." Rusch will be contributing in his own manner by way of leadership and experience, and next year he will be back again to start.

The main goal for the upcoming season, according to Perkins, is "to win and to keep winning. My first year we tried to qualify someone for Nationals. Last year we wanted to establish ourselves as a team. This year we want to win."

Strategy for the upcoming match next Wednesday will concentrate on promoting togetherness. Perkins said, "Through good communication, we'll be able to motivate each other and pull the team together. So many programs are won and lost by this factor. Since wrestling is such an individualistic sport, we will need this to bring the team together and allow us to be successful."

Predicting team success this season, Perkins said, "I'm not sure if we will reach our goals due to our numbers, but we will put out an effort to strive towards these goals, and we will reach the goal of enjoying ourselves and competing." Rusch feels numbers and inexperience will also affect the team saying, "There are a lot of new freshmen that have the basics down good, but I feel inexperience will become a key factor as to how well they will do. It depends upon how well they react to the pressure."

Recruiting has been difficult for this year's season. A possible cause for the small numbers that make up this year's team is the discipline the sport requires of its members. Perkins said, "The commitment and discipline that wrestling requires is more than the average person can muster. This is a demanding sport by nature in many areas. In practice it's intense. I ask my members to come to practice and to work. Wrestling is a physically punishing sport that requires sharpness and accurateness. I make a lot of demands, and the demands of the sport are indicative of the numbers I have."

Keith Rusch commented from his personal experiences about the demands of wrestling and of Coach Perkins. "Wrestling takes a lot of dedication. Practices are two hours long, and you must put in about two and a half hours outside of practice to stay in peak physical condition. You must be mentally tough to keep your intensity up for matches." About Perkins, Rusch added, "He demands you put out your best effort. He wants 100 percent from you, but he also puts in that same amount."

The coaching philosophy Perkins uses, and that he hopes his team members will recognize him for, is one that sees things through their eyes as well as his own. This mirror method of coaching works well for Perkins in motivating his team. Perkins said, "I tell my players a lot of different things, and I always try to stress good intensity. I ask for an honest effort — totally honest. I want 100 percent. Ninety-five percent isn't good enough."

Fan support also appears to be an important motivating mechanism for the team. Perkins commented, "It is very important to have good crowd support because the work and effort these young men put forth is tremendous, and to be recognized for their effort is important." Fan support has a big part in the future of the team, especially for marginal members. Perkins said, "Marginal members may gain confidence from this and contribute greatly to the team."

In closing, Perkins said, "We're a young team, and right now we're trying to fill in the gaps and spots, but the people in my room I'm proud of. I'm excited about the people in that room and about the upcoming season, and I think it will be a real fun year for us all."

Men's and women's swim teams open season in triangular

Kelly Cohorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout swim team started the 1985-86 season last week. Both the women's and the men's teams opened their season's with one win and one loss in a triangular meet against UW-River falls and St. Thomas at home.

Last year Stout had 14 swimmers qualify for the NAIA Nationals. Stout's team placed tenth and twelth in the men's and women's NAIA National Swimming Championship last March in Indianapolis. There were teams from all over the United States as well as from Canada particating in the meet.

The Lady Devils held their ground as Kim Nosser was the top finisher for Stout's womens team as she finished sixth in the 1650-meter freestyle. Ann Branson was impressive by placing ninth in the 200-meter breaststroke. Finishing tenth in the 100-meter backstroke was Cheryl Debaker. The 200-meter medley relay team of Branson, Debaker, Jennifer Krupke and Laurie Potter placed tenth. In the 800-meter freestyle relay, the team of Krupke, Nosser, Tracy Stankovick and Stephanie Weiss finished 11th.

The men's team had just as much endurance as the womens team by turning in there best times of the season at nationals. Two swimmers earning All-American honors for Stout were Tylor Sanborn and Steve Kostrova. Finishing fourth in the 100-meter butterfly and fifth in the 200-meter butterfly Kostrova was one of the most valuable swimmers of the season. Sanborn was also a very valuable swimmer by placing 11th in the 100-meter butterfly. The 400-meter medley relay team of Kostrova, Sanborn, Tim Biro and Jon Lerbs Captured eighth. Placing ninth was the 400-meter freestyle relay team of Biro, Kostrova, Lerbs and Brad Stark.

Stout accomplished all this in only it's second season since the revitalization of the Stout swim program.

Miller has confidence that the women's swim team this year will go farther with the returning swimmers of Debaker, Krupke, Branson and Potter leading the way. According to Miller, New freshman Wendy Heineke and Jacquelyn Gilbert are looking great.

On the men's team, some of the strongers competitors will be Kostrova, Lerbs and Stark. The new freshman members of the team are Mark Kukuzke and Tom Mascarenas. There is one small flaw with the mens diving team, there is not a single one. Miller recruited several members for the diving but none came through. This is really hurting the Stout swim team as they are unable to score points in the diving competition. Miller is still looking for capable divers for this years team.

This years Blue Devils should have the potential to become a powerfull team if they can fill the empty diving positions. Miller feels as though the team will do better than last years team.

Tomorrow there will be an inter-squad meet at Johnson Fieldhouse begining at 5 p.m.

The Armchair Quarterback

Coach faces decision

Tom Roth

What can the UW-Stout gridders accomplish or what do they want to accomplish against UW-La Crosse in their season-ending contest at Nelson Field on Saturday?

That's the question facing the Blue Devil coaching staff and their players as they take the field for the last time in 1985. With a record of 3-6-1 the Blue Devils are currently in eigth place in the conference, but are insured of staying out of the cellar as UW-Superior has once again locked that position up. A win on Saturday though could push the Devils to fifth place with a little help from some other conference foes.

There are several things that have to be questioned in this season final. Who should the coach play? No matter who you are no one will agree with the answers to this question.

Head Coach Bob Kamish has the choice to play his seniors for one last time, underclassmen to gain experience or a combination of both in an effort to pick up one last win.

In playing his seniors it would give them one last chance to prove themselves and give some of the seniors who have not played much in the last four or five years to be rewarded for their hard work they have contributed over the years. In some people's minds this game has no real value to the Blue Devils so a win or loss is not the major issue.

On the other side of the ball the coach has to be thinking about next year and his returning gridders with not much experience. Inexperience plagued the Blue Devils during the year so inserting the underclassmen into the line-up would surely not hurt. Sure the inexperienced underclassmen are bound to make mistakes and maybe even throw the game away, but in order to gain something, like more wins next season, you have to give something up.

More than likely the seniors would be upset if they don't get one more crack at things, but you have to consider they have had their chance and they can't do a whole lot for next year's program anyway.

Probably the most important goal the Blue Devils will be trying to achieve on Saturday afternoon will be just a plain old win. A win would most likely improve Stout's place finish in the conference and would also be an improvement of two wins over the year before. Pondering in the back of the mind of one coach could be that a loss would cost him a chance at improving the Devils' record next year.

No matter what approach is taken towards the Blue Devils' season-closer, they'll have to face the facts that they have suffered through another frustrating losing season and only to make it worse will be the more than likely empty stands on a cold and bitter afternoon that will have the whole town cheering for the Indians — the Menomonie High School Indians in the state football championship that is.

Quarterback's Picks

UW-La Crosse at Stout-NO, these Indians are not the Menomonie H.S. Indians but their record is almost as good. The Blue Devils will have a tough time pulling out this season final. La Crosse by 13.

New Orleans at Green Bay-The Packers are on a roll now and the Saints should not be too much of a challenge. Green Bay by 14.

Minnesota at Detroit-Both teams took a beating last week to even their records at 5-5. The winner of this game will take a step forward in claiming a wild card spot. Detroit by 3.

Wisconsin at Ohio State-The Buckeyes have been playing like champions lately and the Badgers have not shown much. This game

Car Crash Ends Flyers Goalie Career-Pelle Lindbergh of the Philadelphia Flyers, the National Hockey League's top goaltender, was being kept alive by a respirator but was declared brain dead as the result of injuries suffered in a car crash last Sunday.

Lindbergh, 26, lost control of his Porsche Turbo in Somerdale, N.J. at around 5:30 a.m. as it hit a concrete wall. His blood alcohol level was reported to be at .24 percent. The legal blood alcohol level in most states is .10 percent. Two other passengers in the car were listed in stable condition.

Sports Quote of the Week-"We got beat up just like we always do." Kansas State flanker Todd Elder said after the Wildcats had lost for the eighth time in nine games, 35-3 to Oklahoma State last Saturday.

Saberhagen Captures Cy Young Award-Kansas City Royals ace pitcher Bret Saberhagen was named the youngest pitcher in American League history to win the Cy Young Award last Monday.

Saberhagen, who won two games in the Royals' World Series triumph, edged out New York Yankee veteran pitcher Ron Guidry and Minnesota's Bert Blyleven. Saberhagen posted a 20-6 record with an ERA of 2.87 in his second year in the major leagues.

Drake Drops Division I-AA Football Program-Drake University will not field a football team next fall but will resume playing in 1987 at the NCAA Division III level, the school's president announced last Monday.

Dropping football for the 1986 season will allow current Drake players to transfer to another school and be eligible immediately without having to sit out one year. It was estimated that discontinuing football next year will save the university $150,000 to 200,000 immediately.

Cruz's .197 Average Earns Million Dollars-Julio Cruz of the Chicago White Sox makes the highest base salary of any player in the American League West Division.

Cruz who batted .197 in 90 games for the White Sox this year earned $1,242,333 in base salary during 1985.

Falcons capture conference title by outmuscling Blue Devils, 27-9

Paul Wydeven
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout Blue Devil football squad folded to UW-River Falls 27-9 in River Falls on a frozen field last Saturday. Head Coach Bob Kamish said, "River Falls is by far the best team we have played all season."

River Falls totally outplayed the Blue Devils. The Blue Devils had gained 117 yards rushing the entire game, but also lost 50 yards for a net yardage total of 67 yards.

The passing game was much the same. Sophomore quarterback Rob Lindberg completed eight of 20 passes. Three of the attempts were intercepted by the River Falls defense.

River Falls scored their first touchdown at the end of the first quarter, a three-yard run by Greg Corning. This touchdown was set up when Stout was forced to punt the ball from their own four-yard line.

Rob Teske punted the ball 30 yards to Stout's 34-yard line. River Falls returned the kick 28 yards to Stout's six-yard line. This set up the touchdown run by Corning.

Steve Sandin received the kickoff at the five-yard line and returned the ball ten yards to the Stout 15-yard line. The offense could not generate any yardage and was forced to punt. Teske punted the ball from the 20-yard line to the Blue Devil 44-yard line for a 24-yard punt.

The River Falls offense ran the ball six times before Clark Luessman ran off tackle for a 13-yard touchdown, making the score 14-0.

The second half started with Stout receiving the ball. The offense ran the ball nine times to take the ball from their 35-yard line to the River Falls 37-yard line.

On fourth down Stout elected to attempt a 54-yard field goal. Senior Todd Miles kicked the ball 54-yards, hitting the cross bar and bouncing over for Stout's first score of the game.

The kick broke the conference record of 53 yards set in 1975 and the school record of 51 yards by Miles last season. This earned Miles offensive player of the week. Head Coach Bob Kamish said, "Todd's a great kicker. Unfortunately we've been unable to use his skills this year."

After the field goal the Blue Devils went for the onside kick, but River Falls recovered the ball at their own 48-yard line. Five plays later, River Falls was at the Stout 23-yard line when Luessman ran around the right side for another River Falls touchdown.

Stout's offense was unable to do anything with the ball and was forced to punt after the first set of downs. Teske punted a 46-yarder to put the ball at River Falls 12-yard line.

The River Falls offense ran the ball again. They put together a drive that included ten rushing plays and a 17-yard pass. This set up a 16-yard run off tackle by Corning for River Falls' final touchdown.

The Blue Devils last score came late in the fourth quarter. The drive started with a pass from Lindberg to Ron Wise good for 29 yards. That pass put Stout at the River Falls 49-yard line.

This drive continued for 14 plays before Kyle Gunderson ran two yards for a Stout touchdown, making the final score of the game 27-9.

The defensive player of the week was Senior Brian Kellet. Kellet, one of the captains for the defense, had four solo tackles and assisted in 12 other tackles. Defensive Coach Steve Terry said, "Brian continues to do an outstanding job for us. I wish he could play football here at Stout for four more years."

Stout's opponent Saturday will be UW-La Crosse, the final game of the season for the Blue Devils. La Crosse needs a victory for a playoff spot. Kamish said, "If we are going to win this game, our offense has to play four quarters of football and keep the ball away from the La Crosse offense."

In preparation for this game Offensive Coach Bill Burns said, "We are going to hang on to the ball and not fumble," referring to the five fumbles in the River Falls game. All five fumbles were recovered by the Blue Devils.

Player views of the game Saturday were optimistic. Jim Goreki said, "La Crosse, River Falls, and Eau Claire are our biggest rivals and these games are the most fun to win."

Running back Chuck Carr said, "I just want to beat that jock school." Receiver Ron Wise said, "We are all fired up and we would like to finish the season with a win."

The last player comment came from Mark Horbinski. Mark said, "We are going to kick the — — — — out of them!"

Building plans being considered

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

The renovation of Johnson Fieldhouse is the top priority in building renovations at UW-Stout according to the Director of Planning and Information Management Glen Schuknecht.

Projects being considered at this time are the renovation of the Home Economics building and that of Fryklund Hall. Stout couldn't begin to justify a proposal to build new residence halls on campus according to the Executive Director of Auxiliary Services Helmuth Albrecht.

Despite claims that the administration wasn't going to repair the hazardous pathway used by students as a short cut to Sixth Street from behind the Tech Wing, temporary repairs have been made which ought to last until spring. At that time, more permanent repairs to the pathway may be approved.

Concerning the fieldhouse renovation, Schuknecht said, "The next step is to get the architect involved in the final design." Reviewing the approvals they must go through before starting the renovation, Schuknecht said, "A May 1986 starting date appears possible."

A May 1986 starting date appears possible.

Reviewing the topic of the renovation of the Home Economics building, Schuknecht said "It's only in the planning stages at this time." It's not a project as such.

Schuknecht said that for the Home Economics building renovation to become a project it needed to complete a lengthy series of approvals. "It is the top priority project for the campus," he said. "It needs 1987-89 biennial budget approval."

About the possibility of actually beginning the Home Economics building renovation, Schuknecht said, "The earliest it could happen would be the summer of 1988." That's assuming the project gets all the needed approvals.

Next in line in priority is the Fryklund Hall renovation which Schuknecht said must first await approval in the 1989-91 budget biennium. At that time, they "must have written a preliminary description that's accepted in sense for that biennium."

On the subject of building new residence halls, Albrecht said "There are no current plans to make a request for housing here." Director of Residence Life Judy Spain said that "with the average age of the student population increasing we will have more of a need for family housing."

Spain said, "That need does seem to be met through the private sector." Spain said it was economically more efficient to rely on the private sector to provide student housing than for the State to invest in family housing for students on-campus. "They seem to be able to build more economically than we would be able to."

The washed out portion of the pathway behind the Tech Wing which sent students slip sliding away whenever it rained was paved last week with an asphalt/paving mixture. Director of the Physical Plant Dan Newhall explained that the path's repair wasn't a "low priority" item as far as he was concerned. "There's no funding for it," Newhall said.

The money for permanent repairs to the path must come from the project improvements account. Money's are allocated from that account each year on July 1 so that is the next time to propose permanent improvements to the path.

In discussing the situation with SSA Senator Wes Stead, he said that now was the time to start a concerted effort to get the permanent improvements to the pathway approved next spring.

Weather forces Governor to cancel visit

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

"Help Governor Earl sign fieldhouse legislation" was on everyone's mind Monday, Nov. 18. Balloons were blown up, signs were made, fliers were circulated and everything was set for the event - except Governor Earl.

"Due to the weather, the Governor was stranded in Ashland," explained John Enger, Director of University Relations. "The Governor was traveling by air in a Department of Natural Resources plane, and he was unable to land at Eau Claire and had to cancel an appearance there also."

"I was very disappointed," said SSA President JoAnn Prange. "This could have been the biggest, or second biggest event, behind the dedication of the new Student Center, this year. A lot of planning went into this event."

According the Eau Claire Leader Telegram, Earl signed both the Fieldhouse bill and the Eau Claire housing bill upon his return to Madison late Monday, Nov. 18. This would seem to put a halt to plans to have the bill signed among a huge fanfare as originally planned.

"I see why he signed the bill in Madison," said Prange. "I assume there was no way to reschedule a trip back to Menomonie. When on the road, legisators usually have very tight schedules, and chances of rescheduling are slim. I assume he signed the bill immediately to assure us of his support."

Hunter thrown off team before season opener

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

UW-Stout Head Basketball Coach Dwain Mintz dismissed the Blue Devils standout junior guard Ron Hunter from the team Tuesday afternoon.

Hunter, the Blue Devils second leading scorer last year, was dismissed allegedly because of an altercation that erupted between him and 6-7 forward Mark Stevens in the locker room after practice on Saturday.

Mintz's only comment was "It's strictly a team matter ," but did confirm that Hunter had been dismissed from the team.

The altercation between Hunter and Stevens occured after practice in the Blue Devils locker room in Johnson Fieldhouse. Hunter recounted his side of the story as follows:

"I was unlacing my basketball shoes when Mark (Stevens) hit me on the back of the head. When I asked him what was going on I knew right away by the way he looked at me that he wasn't joking around. I asked him what was wrong and then he said to me, 'I'm tired of your ---.' I told him their was no need to get upset. He just walked away and I ran after him to find out what was wrong. I got in front of him at the doorway of the locker room and he just shoved me out of the way and I just lost my temper and threw my locker padlock at him. It struck him in the face and he started to come after me only to have Coach Mintz show-up, who without an explanation told me to clean out my locker."

Stevens received a slight laceration on the face but had no comment on the incident between him and Hunter when questioned.

Hunter said he went over to Stevens house Saturday night to apologize and he excepted the apology. "After that everything was okay as we worked everything out. I called Coach Mintz that night at home and he told me to come in and see him on Tuesday. I told him I was sorry about everything even though I believed I wasn't totally wrong since he (Stevens) violated my rights. Then Coach Mintz told me I was dismissed from the team, but that I might be able to come back next semester."

"I don't believe the punishment justifies what happened, I think the puishment is extremely harsh for what happened," Hunter commented. "I just don't think the coach is looking out for the team's interest at this time."

"It's a very unfortuanate situation as we're all sorry to see Ron go," Assistant Coach Ed Andrist remarked. "His actions just aren't fitting for our organization at this time."

Hunter mentioned the possibility of transferring to another school next year since he has two years of eligibility left. "I'm really satisfied with school and everything that it has done for me,

More survivors pulled from mud

Armero, Columbia- The search for survivors of a devastating volcanic eruption continues after the government indicated Sunday that rescue efforts might be abandoned. Searchers kept going after reports that hundreds of people were believed still alive in the mud.

Columbian officials say about 25,000 people were killed when the Nevado del Ruiz volcano erupted last Wednesday, melting part of its snowcap and sending 15-foot-high wall of mud down the Langunilla River, burying Armero.

Hijackers convicted, found guilty

Genoa, Italy- A court convicted four Palestinians and one accomplice charged in the Achille Lauro hijacking on charges of illegal arms possession and handed down sentences Monday ranging from four to nine years in prison.

All five face trial at a later date for the more serious charges of kidnaping and murdering an American passenger aboard the Italian cruise line.

N.Y. building to dwarf Sears Tower

New York, New York- Real estate magnate Donald Trump announced plans Monday to make New York city once again the site of the world's tallest building,a 150-story skyscraper, 216 feet higher than the Sears Tower in Chicago.

The proposed building, a triangular-shaped edifice 1,670 feet tall, would form the centerpiece of a "city within a city" in a 13-block area bordering the Hudson River on Manhattan's West Side.

Shoe industry seeks retaliation

Washington D.C.- U.S. shoe industry officials urged the U.S. trade representative's office to impose import restrictions on Japanese goods in retaliation for that country's longstanding quotas on leather shoes. Thirty eight states, including Wisconsin produce shoes.

Officials of the Footwear Industries of America said only U.S. retaliation against a wide variety of Japanese exports would persuade the Japanese government to end its import limits on footwear.

Good news for deer hunters

Madison- Department of Natural Resources Secretary C.D. Besadny has reassured farmers that he will, if necessary, extend this fall's deer hunt in farm areas where the animals cause extensive damage.

Besadny said he would extend the deer season if necessary in areas which have not reached acceptable deer harvests. The nine-day gun season for white-tailed deer opens Saturday.

Sheriffs want AIDS inmates identified

Appleton- Wisconsin sheriffs are calling for a "right to know" law that would guarantee full disclosure of information about prisoners with AIDS.

The Wisconsin Sheriffs and Deputy Sheriffs Association also passed a resolution calling for acceptable guidelines for handling inmates with the disease.

Suburbs: The new frontier

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Just as the dawn of the industrial revolution saw the beginnings of a human exodus from rural America to new opportunity in the growing metropolitan areas, the cities are now feeling the consequences of a partial reversal of that turn of the century trend as business and the jobs they create leave the cities for the suburbs.

The number of people employed in service industries in the past year has increased by 2.8 million, making that sector of the work force now responsible for approximately 75 percent of America's nonfarm jobs. And the vast majority of those jobs have been created in the suburbs, leaving the cities with only marginal employment gains or outright increases in unemployment.

Since 1982 the suburbs have outpaced the cities in the creation of employment opportunities by 18.9 percent in St. Louis, 16 percent in Chicago, 13.7 percent in Washington, 12.4 percent in Atlanta and 12.3 percent in Detroit.

Much of the shift can be attributed to the fact that utilities, rent, land and taxes are less costly in the suburbs. In addition, unemployed city dwellers typically do not have the required training or background necessary to secure service industry positions, thereby forfeiting potential employment to suburbanites and relocated individuals that are properly trained and experienced.

The whole phenomena has also caused a deliberate shift in population from the cities to their respective geographical suburban counterparts. Between 1960 and 1980, in the Detroit area alone, the number of people who lived and worked in the city decreased from 600,000 to 350,000, while those who lived and worked in the suburbs increased from 700,000 to 1.18 million.

But many cities are reluctant to accept the inevitable and are fighting to regain their previous dominance as the home of American business. San Francisco has amended city ordinances and zoning regulations to allow low-rise office development adjacent to or near the city's business district. The change, which was supported by the area's business community, would theoretically make it more economically feasible to keep lower-paid employees in the San Francisco metropolitan area.

Yet Dean Lesher, who publishes the Contra Costa Times in the nearby county of Walnut Creek, believes that the flow of jobs out of San Francisco will not decrease because the suburbs have warmer weather, more parking and dramatically lower housing prices. Lesher further predicts that the number of service industry jobs in his county will double by the year 2000.

Drinking age poses variety of problems

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

This year, with nearly 1500 underage students enrolled at Stout, drinking problems have taken a new twist. Samuel Wood, the assistant to the chancellor, said, "Our problem has increased because we never had all 18-year-olds in the underage category before. The underage group has expanded by several hundred. This is almost certain to bring an expansion in underage drinking."

Disciplinary procedures may differ from case to case, but as Wood stressed, "Our actions depend on the nature of the event. The consistency we want is that we take action, not that we give the same response to each case."

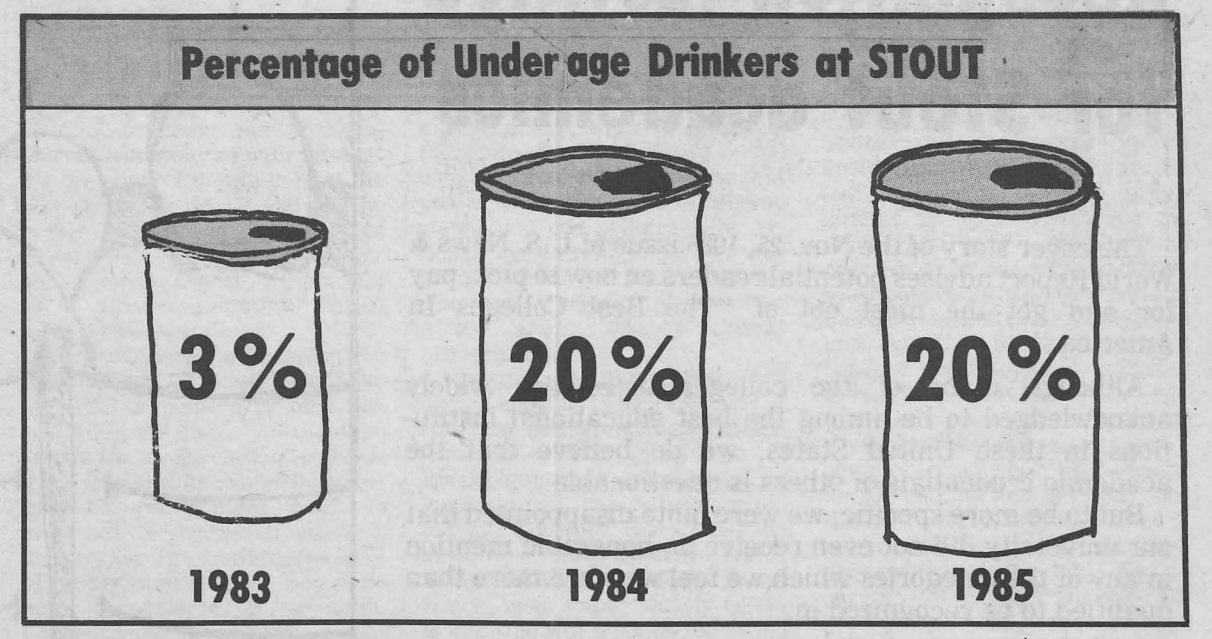
Disciplining students for doing something that is legal for the majority of students can also create tension. "We must enforce the law, as an agency there is no way we can avoid that responsibility. If it's the law, we have to abide by it," Wood said.

Stout's disciplinary procedures usually follow one of two routes. In some cases, suspension and expulsion are used. In many cases, especially those involving disruptive behavior, an alcohol assessment is given and further action is then determined.

For Margery Monaghan, a resident advisor in CKTO, discipline usually involves taking away the alcohol and explaining to the student that their actions are against both the law and hall policy. It creates a problem for her, however, when she sees underage drinkers at the bars and house parties. While she felt that freshman drinking was a normal part of experiencing new found freedom and a period of testing authority and learning, it made her uncomfortable to see underage students drinking because it is an area in which she has no clear-cut authority or guidelines. While she knows that their behavior is illegal, she said, "It's not my place to tell the bartender because we're not on campus."

Wood felt that members of the community were also trying to do their part in controlling underage drinking. "Bar owners and liquor store owners are being more careful. The problem is that they don't know the eventual outcome. The 19-year old who walks into the liquor store and buys a six pack could be selling it to an 18-year old a block away."

Wood believed that raising the drinking age to 21 would help cut down on illegal drinking. "A higher percentage of students, say 60-70 percent, would be underage. As a result there will be less legal drinkers to supply alcohol. We might see an increase in the number of underage drinkers, but I think we'll see a decrease percentagewise."



Monaghan saw the 21-year old drinking age differently. "There would be so many underage drinkers and this would make the problem harder to control. It would also put the students who are 21 and older in such a separate group. I wouldn't be in favor of raising the drinking age to 21."

According to Wood, however, the real problem colleges face isn't underage drinking. Instead, he sees alcohol abuse as the number one problem. He said, "I wish students would drink in a way that wouldn't result in intoxication, destruction, and disruptive behavior. If we had had that problem pinned down, we probably wouldn't have gone to 19 in the first place."

Monaghan suggested that students take another look at the group S.U.D.S., Students Understanding Drinking Sensibly. She stressed, "S.U.D.S. isn't against drinking. It gives students alternatives and has a lot to offer them." She also suggested more hall activities without alcohol as the primary focus.

Wood summed up the subject by saying, "Students need to realize that drinking and having a good time don't have to go together."

Students assemble Doboy machine

Rich Langberg
News Editor

A close relationship with industry is one of the tenets upon which UW-Stout's educational experience is built. The Productions Processing class has possibly the closest with industry of any class at the university.

Taught by Dr. Chuck Yost, the class works with the Doboy Packaging Company of New Richmond, Wis., in developing a packaging machine called the HS-B Handsealer. It is a portable device that seals plastic material using heat. The class is contracted to produce 180 of the machines.

The class is made up primarily of seniors from the Maufacturing Engineering major. There are some Product Engineers, who Yost said contribute graphics and drawings to the problem that are valuable for reports the students in the project generate.

"There were no blueprints at the beginning, the students generate those right here," said Yost. "The assembly prints and instructions are developed after the fact, along with the narrative description necessary to operate the machine."

Yost, along with Dr. Jerry Coomer, were the professors that intially invited Doboy to employ the Productions Processing class.

"Jerry and I had done some consulting work for Doboy and got them interested in the project," said Yost. "I was coaxing them for some time to give us a chance."

Each unit costs Doboy $13.14, and has upwards of 100 parts, according to Yost. There is a very small amount of profit built in, mostly because it was extremely hard for Yost to break down the indirect costs involved in the production.

The contract was received on Oct. 7, and work began immediatly. The 17 positions that make up the project that are manned by 20 students. The student head of the project is senior Keith Guggenberger.

> "I joined the Doboy project because it wasn't something make-believe, it applied to a real work situation.
> Keith Guggenberger

"I handle the coordination between the Doboy Company and the class," said Guggenberger. "This involves ordering parts, keeping communication open and making sure the necessary parts are here."

Guggenberger said he is in touch with Doboy approximately twice a week, making sure that things are running smoothly. Transportation and Assembly Director Andy Hotaling was originally told by Yost that he will have to go to the Doboy plan twice weekly, but has been averaging four trips to New Richmond every week.

The class finishes each lot of 30 products in about two weeks, with members of the project working everyday. Design and Assembly Director Jon Peterson, a senior from Waconia, Minn., said that the number of mistakes are going down every week as the students learn more and more.

"Jon is one of the most devoted towards the Doboy project," said Yost. "He seems to have the best understanding of the technology involved. When you have that understanding, the organization progress will go a lot smoother."

Peterson has been offered Guggenberger's job for next semester, and is currently mulling the offer. Since he obviously is enrolled in Productions Processing, Yost will set up a "Independent Technical Problem," so Peterson will still be able to earn academic credit.

"There is still a lot of work that can be done next semester," said Peterson. "It will still be a challenge for people interested in taking Productions Processing."

Both Peterson and Guggenberger feel that the knowledge gained from this project and what they will be doing after graduation has been invaluable.

"I joined the Doboy project because it wasn't something make-believe, it applied to a real work situation," said Guggenberger, who will graduating this December. "I learned about the problems of parts shortage, making sure my facts are right and the necessity of being professional at all times."

Peterson, who will receive his diploma in August, 1986 said, "It is directly related to my future. It has the same kind of problems, and my goals are really close to what this project is all about."

Gramm-Rudman deficit bill could dent student aid

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

December 5, 1985 has been declared "Save Your Assistance Day" by United Council and the Stout Student Association (SSA). It will be observed at campuses throughout the University of Wisconsin system to highlight the importance of financial aids for higher education.

The incentive behind this day is concern about the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Control Act. This act calls for a balanced federal budget by fiscal year 1991. The budget deficit now is approaching $200 billion. The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act would require the President to submit a budget which cuts that deficit figure by 20 percent each year. An example of this is that the fiscal year 1987 budget would have a deficit level of approximately $144 billion, a cut of $36 billion. If Congress cannot agree on the cuts needed to get to that level, then the President can "sequester" the funds from areas he sees fit.

"The budget cuts would not be administered equally across the board," according to a United States Student Association (USSA) report. "Certain parts of the budget are exempt from the cuts. Thirty-eight percent of the defense budget is tied up in long term contracts and interest on the debt and social security is all exempt, this leaves a small sector of the budget to bear the brunt of the cuts."

One area vulnerable to massive cuts is student financial aid because they are forward funded. This means that the fiscal year 1986 appropriations fund the following academic year, 1986-87.

Estimated cuts in education programs would be 15 percent in Pell Grants, eliminating over 400,000 students from the program. Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG) and College Work Study would take a 60 percent cut, eliminating 900,000 students from these programs, and a 67 percent cut is scheduled for Education of the Handicapped.

Both United Council and SSA have drafted resolutions against the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendment and any other deficit reduction legislation which proposes disproportionate budget cuts. Both organizations feel students have a duty to take equal and proportionate budget cuts to do their part in balancing the federal budget. They do not feel that students should have to bear the major brunt of these cuts.

To maximize student awareness of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, tables will set up in the Commons and Student Union on Dec. 5, to share information about this, and other financial aid matters. Information is now available on Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act in the SSA office.

Recognition justified for Stout academics

The cover story of the Nov. 25, 1985 issue of U.S. News & World Report advises potential readers on how to pick, pay for and get the most out of "The Best Colleges In America."

Although many of the colleges listed are widely acknowledged to be among the best educational institutions in these United States, we do believe that the academic credentials of others is questionable.

But to be more specific, we were quite disappointed that our university did not even receive an honorable mention in any of the categories which we feel we were more than qualified to be recognized in.

The administrative and faculty personnel of this university, through hard work, dedication, creativity and professionalism, have given us the opportunity to enroll in nationally recognized Stout specialities like Industrial Technology, Vocational Rehabilitation, and Hotel and Restaurant Management, to name just a few.

Yet we students, whether we choose a specialized field of study or not, are still able to benefit scholastically from the more than adequate selection of liberal studies offered.

Perhaps those colleges listed as the best achieved their notoriety because of an affinity to capture the "national spotlight" for reasons other than true academics.

While many of our member institutions were exploiting the newest "educational fad" of the day, Stout was channeling its many resources into a steady and concerted drive toward excellence through more traditional and time proven methods.

In short, this institution has prospered because it has been more than successful in filling the needs of both the student and prospective employer.

And we all know that this claim can not be echoed by all those on the list in question.

Crash and Burn

Life's a game at Camp Stout

Matt Kalina

"Hey you!" spouted a voice near the cash register on the front counter last Sunday at noon in a Menomonie restaurant where I work.

I squinted from the kitchen attempting to recognize the alien being at the doorway. I didn't have time to put my contacts in that morning.

"Mark O'Brien, remember?" he said.

Of course, now I remembered, but I could hardly believe it. It was Oakey, named for the batter's helmet bearing the Oakland A's logo he once wore. He was my confidant and comrade at summer camp long ago. In fact I haven't seen hide nor hair of him for nearly six years. We had scratched letters and Christmas cards back and forth for awhile, but you know how that goes. After a few years people lose touch. As a student at UW-La Crosse, he had come to Stout over the weekend to patch up things with his girlfriend.

"Must have been a hundred years since I saw you last," he said.

Yes, it does seem that way. Last time we saw each other was in Kettle Morraine Youth Conservation Camp outside of a tiny town called Cambellsport, Wisc. when we were 15-year-old kids who had just finished the first year of high school. It was the summer of 1980 and we had gone to this conservation camp to saw down dead trees in White Pine forests, restructure trout streams, tag ducks and to make some minimum-wage bucks.

I can still picture the army barracks-type facility we lived in. Everyone in our cabin had a label. There was Steve the suave ladies' man, Doug the jock and Mike the squid, who bore a striking resemblance to Ritchie Cunningham of "Happy Days" fame. There was George the Dungeon and Dragons master who played every Beatles song known to man on his boombox, demonstrated suicidal tendancies if he lost in frisbee-golf or volleyball and hypnotized the brainy Pat the Professor into rising from his bunk and walking in a "tranqil forest." There was Tim the giant dim-witted manure-reeking hick who I always thought would make a great Lenny from "Of Mice and Men" and Byron, a camp counselor who entertained us by stuffing quarters in his nostrils.

I'm sure that everyone has had goof-ball roommates just as weird as these at Camp Stout too. Maybe you live with some senseless undesirables right now.

In many ways Stout, a suitcase University, parallels camp. For many Stout campers, the weekend begins Thursday night. Some lay a temporary claim at a rat-hole apartment or inhabit a dorm room for a few days out of the week end vacate the area and cruise home during weekends. Others rough it and set up a permanent camp, remaining in Menomonie nearly the whole semester, only to commit complete party recklessness during the weekends.

Our biggest preoccupation at camp was deciding who would go into town to buy junk food. This seems to be the case at Stout now too. But instead of getting Hostess Ho-Ho's and Twinkie's, Stout Campers go out and buy Hostess Ho-Ho's, Twinkies and beer.

At camp we were involved in games like backgammon, cribbage and chess.

We participate in games here at Stout too, and many of them are centered around drinking, including the traditional dice-slinging of Mexican, the hand-and-eye coordination of quarters, the suspense of the card game, red or black and the ever-popular mouth-and-stomach coordination of the beer bong.

There are also more philisophical games that Stout campers play. "How long can I park by an expired meter without getting a ticket?" is a good game, but an expensive one, especially if you play by the University parking rules.

Some people are exorbitant risk-takers. They play a dangerous game called "How many classes can I blow off before I fail?"

But there is one game that everybody plays at one time or another at Camp Stout: "How long must I grind on as a student before I graduate?"

Happy camping.

Student doubling as city official works to promote interest of all

Jay Schroeder

I was fortunate enough to have been elected to Menomonie's City Council in April of 1984. This is special to me because this is the first elective office I have ever held. More important is the fact that I was the first UW-Stout student elected since the University was founded back in the 1800's. I will be forever grateful for this experience.

What have I done since being elected? One of the things that I feel was an accomplishment was the fact that I have been a strong proponent of an overpass over North Campus. This area of concern was first brought to my attention from the SSA last spring. Since then the Department of Transportation, the University fo Wisconsin-Stout and the City of Menomonie have talked of the proposal. We as a council must have public input into all ideas so that we can make the best decisions possible, whether it be constructiong an overpass or purchasing a new squad car. I feel that public awareness of government is essential.

This brings me to tell a story which I feel I must tell. I'll never forger the first Council meeting I went to. It was an ordinary room with no flags or anything. It was hard to tell from the appearance that this was a place of government actions.

In no time at all the meeting was underway. I'll never forget that feeling of uncertainy as long as I live. Here I was sitting in a room that had no agenda to look at while the meeting was in progress. I vowed to myself at that moment, if the public was willing to give me the privilege to hold elected office, I would do everything in my power to improve things so that no one would ever feel that unknowing feeling that I felt at that early spring meeting in 1984.

Last week Vice-president of General Motors John Debbink spoke on campus. One of his strong concerns was that we must now implement decision-making from the bottom up. this point stuck in my mind well. I say as a represnentative let's do it for the good of mankind.

Since being elected I have sponsored or co-sponsored ordinances such as:

1) Printing agendas for the public at the council meetings.

2) Printing of the agenda in a local newspaper.

3) Purchasing the American Flag for the Council chanbers.

4) Providing a public comment section for the public to address the Council.

What has suprised me the most in suggesting these ordinances? It was the fact that each proposal received one or no vote, and it took three attempts to get the agenda published in the local newspaper. Even then it only passed by a slim four to three majority.

Am I that wrong in sponsoring such legislation? If I am, then I don't deserve or indeed want to be in public office.

Why sponsor such legislation? Because I think that such ordinary people like George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln would agree with me that it's time once again to get "of the people, by the people and for the people" in stronger control of government. Also, Stout stands for honor and excellence. I think that these accomplishments fulfill these ideals well.

Another related issue facing you the electorate of Menomonie is the fact that a petition is bing circulated in the City of Menomonie, calling for a referendum to decide if the City should change its structure of government back to aldermen by wards. If adopted, this would help specific areas have a representative that would be more accountable to that area. Concentations of residents would be better able to elect a repesentative under aldermnan by ward. This would bring ideals from lower levels up, as was stated so well by Debbink.

Another area of effort on my part will be to determine if it is feasible to televise the council meeting on the local cable channel, in effect bringing democracy into your living room.

If you have any questions or concerns, please call me because every form of input strengthens democracy. I'm sure our founding fathers would agree that open government equals democracy. I can be reached at 235-1015. If I am not there, leave a message and I'll be happy to return your call.

Perspective debated

In regard to the Perspective column you published last week, I commend you for having the courage to compile information on such a controversial topic as Affirmative Action, which is generally more adequately covered in verbal debate. Somehow, it appeared that you were a bit confused when you stated that the beliefs in the articles "are currently held by a new generation of black intellectuals who are ideologically breaking away from their liberal predecessors."

Fortunately, the group you quoted happens to be a minority of confused and acculturated Black Americans. This generation of Black American may be new on the scene but their beliefs are old and just reheared. Historically the majority of Black Americans refer to that minority as Uncle Toms. Which, even today, simply refers to one who will walk on top of the backs of the masses to reap the benefits of one(self).

I could go on indefinitely and give beliefs on Affirmative Action from many Back American intellectuals I've met nationwide. Ironically enough, the majority of their thoughts on Affirmative Action are in direct contradiction to those of the "new generation of black intellectuals" you quoted. However, the space in this column is insufficient to allow for the formative debate that this topic deserves.

Nonetheless, I would like to make a final comment concerning another direct quote from your article which states"Loury also defends the proposition that the way to reverse the tragedy of continuallly more Blacks becoming victims of poverty each year is to make then believe that the way to economic and social improvement is to pick yourself up by (your own) bootstraps." What a simplistic solution for such a very old and complicated problem.

One thing I agree with Loury on is Black Americans do have to work to build self-esteem but there are many more problems which must be dealt with before that one can be tackled. First let's suppose a person, in poverty, owns a pair of boots and therefore needs bootstraps; where would he get the food to give him strength to pull himself up with? Lets face the truth, Affirmative Action was enacted as just one way to confront some severe inequity problems in these United States. One only need look at the Black American teenage unemployment statistics to see the inequity.

We all know from general psychology that if a man (animal, person) is punished long enough for i.e. coming into the front door then he (insert what you want) will automatically come in the back door without being told. And to reverse this behavior one must get rewards for the expected new behavior. Where are the rewards? Black Americans have had the punishments! If the government decides to reward the group and punish any agency for purposely trying to sabotage their efforts of reward (those who have a history of blatent discrimination) then whats inequitable about that? If there is not inequity and all of these unqualified Black Americans are getting jobs in place of qualified white Americans then why does the average Black American college graduate make less money than the white high school graduate? Where are all these Blacks employed; where do you see them in masses? We all need to wake up and see the consequence of these problems if left to continue for too many more decades.

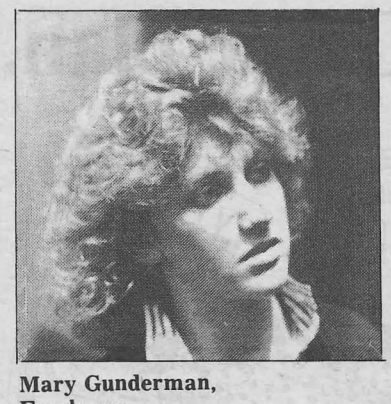
CAMPUS SLANT/ Do you think rock albums should be labeled for lyrical content?

Text by Matt Kalina
Photos by Todd A. Nelson

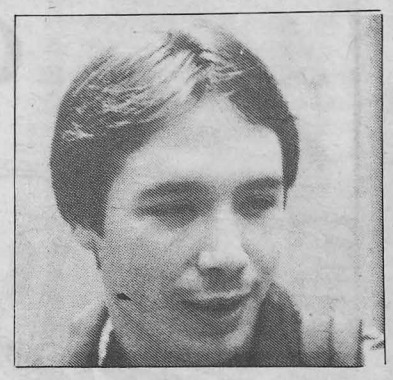
Pete Gilbertson,
Sophomore,
Business Administration

I don't think labels should be placed on the records personally. It seems as it's leading more toward another form of censorship which you want to stay away from. Once they get they're foot in the door they may want more.



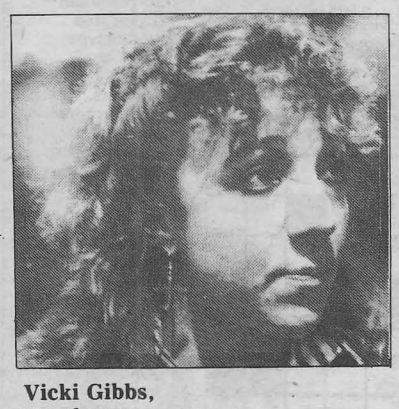
Mary Gunderman,
Freshman,
Art Education

I don't think it's going to make a difference. If the kids want to get the albums, they are going to get them one way or another. I don't think by having [a rating system] is going to do much good. I think what people think about their music is their business. If anything it will start some rebellion and [the labeling] will probably backfire.



Peter Lehmann,
Freshman,
Applied Technology

It will probably hurt the sales on the records. There's a lot of kids in junior high that do the buying so it will lower sales considerably. We become closer to Communism when we start putting labels on them because we won't be able to play them across the radio.



Vicki Gibbs,
Freshman,
Fashion Merchandising

I think it's wrong because we have a right to pick what kind of music we want to listen to. When they [members of labeling groups] were young they picked what type of music they wanted to listen to, so I think we still have the same right. They can't go into our business saying what music we can listen to and what music we can't.

John Patterson,
Freshman,
Industrial Technology

No, I don't think they should. If they put labeling on the records, the way records are now, all of those are going to be labeled as really explicit. It will really hurt the industry. A lot of people won't be able to buy the albums. A lot of albums would get a lot less radio airplay because they wouldn't be suitable according to the codes.

Prayer questioned

When I saw the article about the practice of having the UW-Stout football team drop on their knees to pray before going onto the field, I was shocked! It seems that since this is a state sponsored institution, this practice is in direct violation of the seperation of church and state. Several concerns come to my mind when I think about this:

1. Is this truly voluntary? I seriously doubt it. What would be the repercussions for a team member who refuses to take part in this activity? Will he be kept on the bench for the rest of the season? Will he be pulled from an important game by a biased coach? Will he be denied playing his favorite position because he didn't drop on his knees before the game? I doubt that there are many young athletes who want to risk their athletic career by refusing to pray. It's easier and less messy just to go along with the crowd. Furthermore, how about pressure from team mates? A young man doesn't want to considered an outsider because his religious beliefs differ from his teammates. Chances are he will go along with this activity so as not to appear out of place. Is this volunteerism?

2. How about players with different religious backgrounds? How out of place will one of the players feel if prayer is not required by his religion? Also, some religions absolutely forbid outsiders from leading prayers for their members. How many would-be players are discouraged to go out for the team because this practice doesn't coincide with their religious practices. Some religions just do not believe in prayer. Do you expect someone who does not believe in prayer to carry on in this activity? This is of genuine concern on our campus. Just look around an ask some question. We have Buddhists, Catholics, Baptists, Unitarians, Methodists, Muslims, Atheists, Agnostics, and a host of other backgrounds on this campus.

3. Does the coach have a proper background to lead heterogenous groups in prayer or even a meaningful moment of silence? I sincerely doubt it. To properly lead a group of people with such differing ideas, he would have to have a degree with major fields of studies in comparative world religions, counseling, communication and diplomacy.

Perhaps the most significant ramification of this type of activity, is the carry over into other university activities. Other professors may feel that it would be a nice touch for their class or university sponsored activity. First thing you know we have free rein. All of these people of these widely varying backgrounds is doing his or her own thing for the first five minutes of class. And, of course, no one will be doing this with the proper homologous groups such as this. They are called Bible Colleges which is something UW-Stout is not!

It seems rather foolish for a professional educator to require an activity of his students (athletes) that may well be a violation of federal law. Perhaps he should cease the business of playing junior preacher and get down to playing football!

Hearing dates set at City Hall to determine community needs

Rhonda Martinson
News Reporter

Been complaining about your apartment lately? Or the fact that there is nothing to do in Menomonie? Then here is your chance to do something about it.

On Nov. 20, Dec. 21 and Jan. 21 at 7:15 p.m. in City Hall, there will be hearings held to solicit comments about housing, economic, and public facility needs in Menomonie.

Menomonie Community Development Director Ronald Rogstad said, "The first meeting is to get people's perceptions of needs in the community. The second meeting is where we get specific -we try to come up with specific projects. The last meeting is a review session."

These sessions are preparation for the 1986-1987 Comprehensive Community Development Plan. Menomonie is eligible to receive up to $750,000 a year from the Housing and Public Facilities Competition and up to $750,000 a year from the Economic Development Program.

"These meetings will be directed more toward housing and public facilities," said Rogstad. "Public facilities include things like curbs and gutters, parks, sewer and water, anything a city might provide. Housing includes neighborhood revitalization projects and rental improvements. A priority system determines the interest rate for those applying for this money. Those renting to the elderly or handicapped get top priority, whereas those renting to single or unrelated persons get lower priority. However, there are other influencing factors. There are target areas we want to improve, and what amount of return on his investment a landlord is willing to take."

When asked if he encouraged Stout students to attend, Rogstad replied, "I certainly don't exclude students from being Menomonie citizens, I think they are as much a part of the community as anyone else. I encourage all city residents to express their opinions. This is their chance to get in on these projects from the beginning. We need their input."

Anyone wanting more information about the hearings or programs may call Mr. Rogstad at 232-2187.

Harden wins national scholarship

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Susan Harden, a senior at UW-Stout from Augusta, WI, is a winner of a Geraldine Escobar Memorial Scholarship which is sponsored by the Direct Marketing Educational Foundation. This gives her the opportunity to attend a Collegiate Institute conference for direct marketing in New York City from Dec. 1-6.

Harden, an Industrial Technology major with a concentration in Industrial Distribution Management, was informed of the scholarship by her advisor Dr. Jack Sampson. Because she was the only applicant from Stout, her application was then sent to New York for selection. She is one of only 28 winners that will paricipate in this five-day conference with all expenses paid except for a portion of transportation.

The Collegiate Institute is the most well- known program of the Direct Marketing Educational Foundation which is a non-profit foundation established to further direct marketing education at the college and university level.

The Collegiate Institute is an introduction to direct marketing with five days of practical direct marketing instruction taught by professionals in the direct marketing field. Sessions will cover information from direct mail and mailing lists to catalogs and copy, computers and databases, telephone marketing and television.

"Others should have made the effort to get involved because of the numerous opportunities available through the conference."

Susan Harden

Career opportunities will also be discussed. Harden will have the opportunity to interview with different companies that she chooses and has already been chosen to interview for another job while in New York City.

Harden knew of other students interested in applying for the scholarship but was the only student that actually followed through with the paperwork. "It's too bad others didn't get involved," said Harden. "By just going out there I have interviews set up," she continued.

Harden said, "Others should have made the effort to get involved because of the numerous opportunities available through the conference."

Harden feels that hard work has helped her to impress and become acquainted with the right people who know of these opportunities. She is looking forward to an enjoyable time and a good learning experience.

The day after Thanksgiving is the busiest shopping day of the year. Marketeers have always been quick to capitalize on current events by getting "take off" merchandise on the shelves for the big day. Let's see what will be under the tree this year.

Fisher-Price MOVE Apartment Building teaches pre-schoolers the justification for fire-bombing people they don't happen to like very much. Authentic construction actually burns to the ground and sets the entire neighborhood ablaze. Police and fire department lack-of-action figures also included.

Mighty Grader by Tonka has an unfortunate snow-plow for obscuring the road ahead but a convenient rear-view mirror to see where you've been.

Marx Russian Defector Kit for the little CIA member in every family. Comprehensive package has everything needed: testicle shock device, truth drugs, threat dictionary and bowling-league registration.

Masseuse Microphone transmits intimate conversations and sexual activities through any AM radio. This is surveillance without all the hassle of court-ordered wiretapping. Ideal for small law enforcement agencies, roommates, and peeping Toms.

Library Monopoly is a fruitless board game that pits thousands against four of seven city councilmen. Winners get to decide on what to do with the building since there are no books to put in it.

AFX Domino's Racing Team HO scale cars deliver miniature pizzas at dangerously high velocities just like the real thing: comes complete with break-apart pedestrians and bicyclists.

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

The Menomonie Apartment Association has as one of its goals, keeping tenants informed of local ordinances. This is being done so tenants do not receive unnecessary criticism from neighbors or citations from the police.

With the first snowfall of the season just passed, it is time to let Menomonie tenants know that a snow removal ordinance is in effect. All persons occupying property in the City of Menomonie should have the snow removed by noon of the day a snowfall ends.

Should one not comply, the fine is $32.40 for the first offense and $66 for the second offense and the U.S. Post Office will not deliver your mail as well. The Post Office sites danger to the mail carriers as reason for non-delivery.

If one has ever tried to walk in an uncleared pavement, it is easy to understand the concerns of the city, Post Office and neighbors. Don't forget to make arrangements for walks to be cleared during holiday. When tenants are gone for a number of days, i.e. Thanksgiving and Christmas, a real problem may result. The Menomonie Apartment Association encourages all citizens of Menomonie to cooperate and keep the sidewalks passable.

Dunn County budget

Funding for library services, airports and economic development were some of the highlights during the first day of the two-day County Board session concerning the 1986 Dunn County budget. Gene Heymans Jr., a representative of Menomonie Airport Inc. asked for allocations to operate the future Menomonie airport, without stating a specific amount.

Charles Buelow, President of the Municipal Library Board, asked for $50,000 in operating expenses for the library which is scheduled to open in July of 1986. Buelow said that 34 percent of library cardholders are from outside the city, so he asked the city for one-third of the anticipated operating budget.

Funding for both the Menomonie library board and the Mabel Tainter Memorial Board (MTMB) had been deleted from the proposed budget. Pat Medtlie, president of the MTMB, joined Buelow in asking for the reinstatement of the library funds.

Skin mags back

In yet another twist to the continuing debate at UW-Madison, Chancellor Irving Shain has ordered sales of Penthouse, Playboy and Playgirl to resume at the two student unions on the Madison campus. Shain said that he issued the order because of concern over the perception that the ban "placed inappropriate restraints on individual expression."

The decision to remove the magazine was decided upon by the the Union Council, which is made up of 15 members, nine of which are students. Union Director Ted Crabb said it was the first time in the Union Council's 57-year history that one of their decisions had been overruled.

The magazines were reportedly among the highest selling at the two unions. In an editorial, the Capital Times called Shain's move "gutsy," and said he was correct in ordering the resumption of sales.

Business board

UW-Stout's Board of Business and Industrial Advisors (BBIA) was told by Patrick LeSage, the President of the state's economic development agency Foward Wisconsin, that 64 out-of-state firms are being actively recruited to locate in Wisconsin. The Board is made up of representatives from business and industry and meets twice annually at the Stout campus.

SSA drafts letter to Chancellor stating displeasure with calendar

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

In what SSA President Jo Ann Prange said was "the most productive meeting of the semester" the SSA voted unanimously to have Prange write a letter to Chancellor Robert Swanson expressing their opposition to his announced modifications to next year's academic calendar.

The SSA voiced their disapproval of the concept of closing down Fourth Street between 10th and 13th Avenue, and unanimously endorsed a candidate for the recently approved student position on the Board of Regents.

The SSA also unanimously approved a motion expressing their opposition to the Gramm-Rudman act due to the disproportionate cuts in student financial aids it would allow. The question of preferential treatment for specific students in course preregistration led to an animated discussion among SSA members.

SSA's opposition to Chancellor Swanson's modifications to the '86 -'87 calendar was partially due to their belief that the changes weren't in the students' nor the faculty members' interest.

The calendar modifications announced this Tuesday by Chancellor Swanson eliminate two preregistration days at the start of the fall semester as well as the Saturday study day Sept. 6 and an evaluation day in December.

To make up for those four days, two days are tacked onto preregistration in the spring semester and two more days are tacked onto the end of the fall semester. As a result, the semester ends on Dec. 23.

SSA members expressed their disappointment that the calendar proposal submitted by the Faculty Senate with the unanimous approval of the SSA was not given greater consideration. Added problems for students planning to travel home on this day so close to the Christmas holiday was a major consideration in the SSA's opposition to the modified calendar.

Several SSA members mentioned their concerns about the added pressure on professors who will have two less days in which to make their grade reports.

The SSA unanimously carried a motion expressing their firm opposition to any consideration of closing Fourth Street between 10th and 13th Avenues. South Hall Senator Sandra Kampen said that she's heard from many hall members planning to move off-campus who are very upset by the proposed reduction in parking space.

The motion passed outlined the premium value of the parking spaces on Fourth Street that would be eliminated if it were closed down. The safety considerations of having nearby parking adjacent to Jarvis Hall and Applied Arts for students with classes in those buildings at night was another important aspect.

Recognizing tragic results of the volcanic eruption in Colombia, the SSA unanimously approved a money drive to assist the victims suffering from this disaster. Dave Kester will coordinate the drive.

Landlord/Tenant Representative Patty Strassman announced that the new housing list had been posted. Strassman suggested that SSA consider establishing a seminar on housing which students would have to attend to receive the housing list.

Minority Representative Andrew Kumar announced the two major problems affecting minorities at Stout. Number one was the lack of retention of Black American students due to the lack of social life in the community.

Number two was the need to redefine the meaning of the word minority at Stout. At this time, the definition of a minority at student fails to include disabled, nontraditional and foreign students.

Women's Affairs Representative Tracy Lea Landis announced that Women's Affairs "will be doing a follow-up on the Sexual Assault Program Committee. Landis was pleased to announce that six of nine halls have set up ad hoc committees on sexual assault programs.

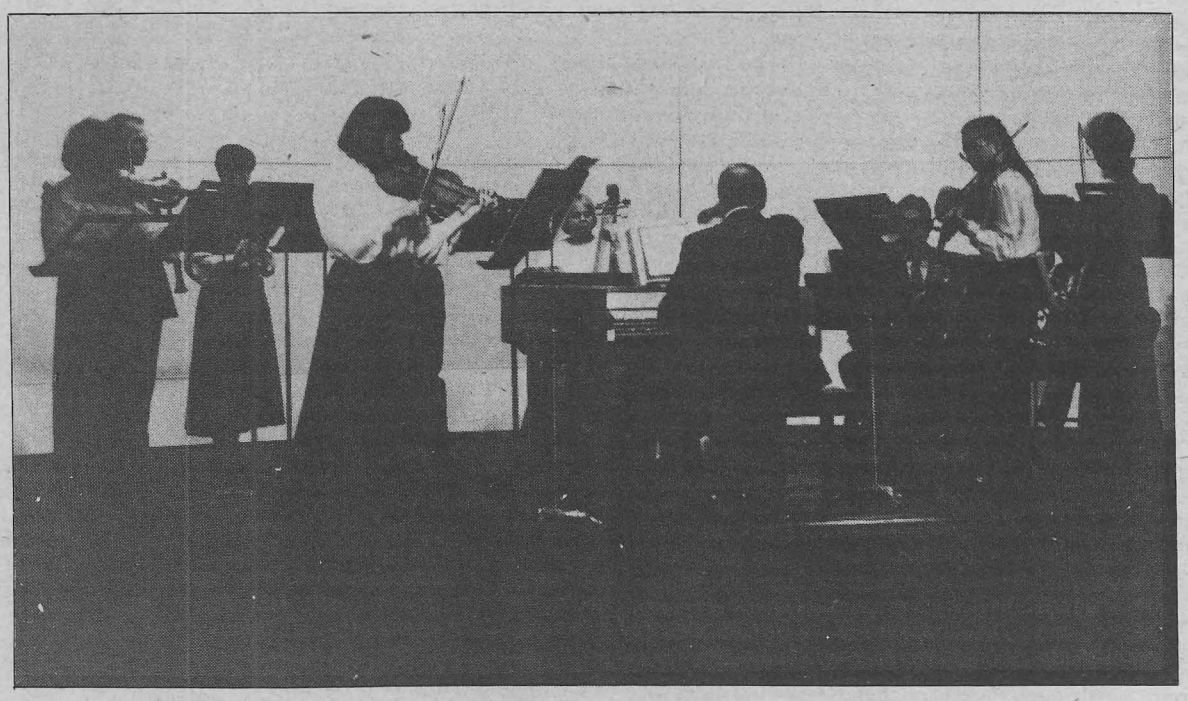
Lyra Series brings back water music

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter



The Lyra Concert series returned to the Mabel Tainter Theater last weekend. The Baroque chamber orchestra features replicas of 17th and 18th century instruments. The final all-Bach performance will take place in April. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

Water music — is it another invention of the new wave movement? Or is Charlie the Tuna finally making it big? Would you believe it is neither of these obvious definitions?

Aquatic compositions were developed back in the 18th century by such greats as George Frideric Handel, Antonio Vivaldi and Georg Philipp Telemann. Music by these composers filled the Mabel Tainter Theater last Saturday evening. A Baroque orchestra directed by Randy Bourne completed its second concert of a three part Lyra Series.

This orchestra is called Baroque because all of the instruments played are replicas of those used when the original music was created in the 17th and 18th centuries. Instruments in attendance were: violins, violas, cellos, violones, oboes, recorders, flutes, trumpets, horns and harpsichord.

All of the instruments are shaped differently compared to their modern counterparts. Strings are not steel but sheep gut. The brass instruments don't have valves and the wind instruments are made out of wood.

Water music was developed to commemorate aquatic related scenes and occasions. Handel's "Water Music" is the most famous. It was composed for a royal boat trip on the Thames in 1717 for King George II. The king liked the composition so much he had it played over and over on the going and returning boat journeys.

Sounds created by the period instruments are reminiscent of the days of royal courts and ballroom dances. The compositions played went from sad and sweet melodies to trail blazing, triumphant salutes.

Last September the first concert of the Lyra Series was performed in the Mabel Tainter Theater. There was a great improvement at the second concert. Shells were provided to improve accoustical conditions and there was a great increase in attendance.

Backstage after the concert, the musicians were both relieved and tired. Deep concentration is needed to play the delicate tunes of the Baroque period. "You just merge with the music while on stage. That is the only thing you do," said Cheryl Tyler, guest viola artist.

Director Bourne is an Associate Music Director at Minnesota Public Radio. After the performance he said, "You put out a lot of energy and tension. You have to be careful when you stand up after each piece. All the blood rushes to your head."

A variety of people turned out for the special performance. Tyler said that anyone interested in classical music would eventually listen to Baroque. She said, "Baroque music is where everything started. This is really the beginning of orchestral music. Before that it was just madrigal instruments or just harpsichord."

Operating a period instrument is different than playing a modern one. Mary Sorlie, a violinist, started playing the Baroque model last spring. According to her, it is harder to play the instrument due to the differences in the pitch and shape of the instrument.

The Lyra Concert series is being played in Menomonie and at the Lutheran Northwestern Chapel in the Twin Cities. Sorlie said, "I think it introduces the music to people who may not get the chance to hear it. I think it's enjoyable for all. It is not exclusive to anyone."

"A Farewell to the Bach Tercentenary" will be the feature of the next and final Lyra Concert. This concert will take place April 6 at the Mabel Tainter Theater.

Booze Brothers Revue and DCver rattle Great Hall

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

You are in a crowd of 600 people and there are five guys on their backs writhing, kicking their legs in the air. Their arms are flailing; they are howling. The crowd doesn't stop to help or even notice.

These boys are having a seizure and it's out of control. They are under the spell of Rhythm and Blues; they are under the spell of the Booze Brothers.

Judging by the reaction of the crowd last Thursday in the Great Hall, the spell was cast into the hearts and minds of the fans.

Contemporary Music Productions fit together the pieces with a lot of hands, and precise timing.

The day started with a 7:30 a.m. equipment load-in. CMP members, DCver and the Booze Brothers stage crew unloaded the massive sound system from the Bishop Productions truck, which was filled precisely and completely, like a high-tech puzzle.

"If you guys buy one more speaker, you'll have to get another truck," joked DCver guitarist and CMP member Keith Ross.

Set up went smoothly. The tech crew for the Booze Brothers, known to the world as Todd and Bruce, is so familiar with their equipment and jobs that 90 minutes is the all it took to have the stage set for a sound check for DCver.

Phase two had the bands and CMP hands arriving at 7:30 p.m. Action went into a stall due to a convention in half of the Great Hall. Final adjustments on equipment, band chatter filled the time.

Snake Booze, front man, show boat, and part-time bass player checked out his amplifier level. The man practiced his chops on his snappy Fender Precision Squire bass. "Got this from a music store for $200...man what a steal."

"The best thing about this band is that we all like people, we like to be with people," according to the diminutive bass player Bonnie Jay. "That is so important because we are surrounded by people all the time, each other, and the crowds. You know what it's like to spend your nights with hundreds of wild, happy people?" she added.

Around 8:30 the convention cleared the Great Hall and Ken Steiner, crackerjack sound man for the Booze Brothers got set for a final sound check through the main speaker system.

Steiner set the levels for the bass and drums from a live sound, and the rest of the band from levels drawn from three years experience with the group's sound. "We don't need to do soundchecks because our guy's got it down so good," explained Bonnie Jay.

After the brief check, DCver took the stage to set their levels. Vocal mikes, six drum mikes, synthesizer, two guitars and bass would be a challenge to adjust for the unfamiliar. Steiner, however set the controls while DCver tuned to each other.

"That's it?" someone asked.

The doors opened and the bands headed for the dressing rooms and the backstage pre-party. Costumes, makeup and a few beers, and it was one after 9:09.

Christa Sanicola, President of CMP took the stage to introduce the bands to the rowdy 500 people filling in the hall. Throught the partly open stage door we heard "... please welcome Stout's own...DCver."

> The best thing about this band is that we all like people...
> Bonnie Jay

The lights went down and DCver plugged in. Mary Gunderman sent helicopter sounds out of her synthesizer through the darkness. The bass thumped out a heartbeat over the choppers. The synthesizer fired a burst of "space invader" laser blasts. The drums crashed just as the lights went up full; the dual guitars slammed into the opening chords of Aldo Nova's "Fantasy."

Andy Leverenz, lead singer, growled through Billy Idol's "Rebel Yell" and matched harmonies with guitarist/singer Todd Welsch on "Shot Through the Heart," by Bon Jovi. DCver ended their short six-song set with an orginal tune called "Never Walk Alone."

The audience was warmed-up when they arrived and was hot for the Booze Brothers. The headliners were getting ready for their all-out performance, joking and pulling clothes out of the behemoth wardrobe trunk which they affectionately refer to as Quasimodo.

From the moment they hit the stage the Booze Brothers Rhythm and Blues Revue is in high gear. Nowhere was that more obvious than in those dynamic sweathogs, the Hay Brothers.

Diamond Jim, sax maniac, and King Kevin, are two of the most driven performers imaginable. They whirl, strut and play their jive horn parts with such flash they take over a third of the stage.

The other members of the Booze Brothers band keep a safe distance from these musical crazies. It could be to keep clear of the gallon of sweat that flies off during during one of their triple spins. The Hay Brothers could easily get jobs as lawn sprinklers.

The band's songs cover a wide spectrum of styles, influenced by the diverse range of musical tastes within the band. "We are all musical purists," explained Bonnie Jay. "I grew up with strictly country music. I've been playing since I was 12. I started with my parents in country bars around Shawano. They're are still doing it, and bless them, I don't know how."

Most of the band has been playing for much of their lives. Dogwood Booze, (Dennis Woodrow) started at age 10 in his school auditorium with an accordian concert. "My next actual major concert was in the same auditorium, this time with a guitar," Woodrow joked.

Their concert was the epitome of an R & B show. The Booze Brothers themselves are full of fire and the audience catches the flames.

The band boasts five potent lead singers, including Bonnie Jay who wailed on the Aretha Franklin soul classic "Respect."

Other members of this powerhouse band are Billy Deville, Tommy Milwaukee, a pair of slick, tasteful guitarists. Behind them all is the intense, and exhaustive drumming of Pablo Ramone.

Even though the band is based on the Dan Akroyd/John Belushi Blues Brothers concept, it hardly seems necessary to be familiar with the origninal to enjoy this band. Still, the legend just addes depth to a tight, frenzied musical blow-out band.

The legacy of the Booze Brothers compels them to perform "Soul Man." They may have played this song 300 times a year for the last five years.

That only proves that these troupers are all-pro performers. The power and drive they put out sends people to their feet, or knocks them off their feet onto their backs.

Masked drama seen

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

The many faces of Robert Faust were seen at the Mabel Tainter Theater Tuesday evening.

Faust, a noted dramatist and mask maker, presented a fascinating demonstration on the uses of masks in contemporary theater.

"The mask is an original form of theater," Faust said. "Masks have been used for centuries in every culture."

Faust first demonstrated the neutral or universal mask. This mask has neither male nor female characteristics. Its features show no expression.

"This mask is extremely difficult to wear," Faust said. "The wearer must first totally abandon his own personality traits and become a neutral being." He explained that this type of mask is often used for actor training.

A great deal of body language is incorporated into Faust's demonstrations. His movements and posture combine to transform the masks into living persons and creatures.

"I take the tension from my body and channel it into the mask," Faust said. "By using my intuition and body architecture, I make the masks come alive with expression."

One example of Faust's use of body architecture is seen when he enters the "alien" mask. Faust uses the lines and angular planes of this robot-like mask to model his own body into an almost mechanical structure.

Faust's masks display a wide range of emotions. The "alien" mask appears shocked and frightened. The primitive "warrior" mask has a menacing expression. Other masks express pride, anger, sorrow and happiness.

"The features of a mask often appear to change," Faust said. "Each mask is capable of showing many emotions. I sometimes work against the dominant features of the mask to create a change of expression."

Faust demonstrated this by giving the illusion that a mask had changed its expression from pride to shame through the use of changing postures and body language.

Although most of Faust's masks were designed in porportion with his face, a few of the masks were distorted. Faust presented a very small mask which he has nicknamed "The Creep." This mask was modeled from a child's face. The effect of this tiny mask on Faust's adult form was eerie and unsettling.

The very large masks, which encompassed Faust's head and shoulders, produced similar strange, distorted effects.

Faust does not speak while he is wearing these full-face masks. He explained that speech would ruin the illusions he has so carefully created.

He does speak through several half-masks. Half-masks cover the eyes and the nose, leaving the mouth open for oral expression.

The voices add greatly to the personalities of the mask. Many of these personalities were loud and aggressive as they pranced about the stage and jumped about the audience. Others were more subdued, as they attempted to draw the viewer into their own private world.

"I hide behind the mask," Faust said. "Then I can use the mask to reveal the feelings and actions I would otherwise be too inhibited to express."

Faust explained that masks do not necessarily have to be worn on the face. He demonstrated masks that are worn on the head and masks that are worn on the feet as foot puppets. He also explained that masks do not have to be commercially produced; he often makes masks from old wigs and clothing.

Faust has made masks for several theater companies. He is currently working on a joint project for the Madison Arts Center. His performance in Menomonie was sponsored by UW-Stout's Speech Department and Fine Arts Association.

Promising songwriter gives exceptional performance

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

People enjoy hearing birds sing and this last weekend presented a rare opportunity for Stout students to listen to an exceptionally talented one. This bird was not your average bird; he was dressed in blue jeans, a sport coat, and carried a left-handed guitar. He presented his music Thursday night at the Commons P.M. and Friday and Saturday night at the Pawn. His name is Michael Bird, and he is one of "the most promising new artist prospects in Nashville."

Review

Describing himself as a "songwriter presenting (his) music," Bird's music finds its roots in artists such as Jim Croce and Dan Fogelberg. "I grew up in the Jim Croce and James Taylor era," Bird said, "So that was the music I always heard. When I began writing, I found that my songs were influenced by these artists. There's few of us around anymore."

Bird captured the audience with his extraordinary talents and his warm personality. Performing with a style all his own, his musical performance was combined with the ability to establish an uncanny rapport with the audience.

From the beginning of the first set, the audience realized they were in for a real treat. His first song, "Sorry No Vacancy" was an original which he performed with feeling and movement. He then conversed with the audience for a few minutes with light-hearted jokes such as "Didn't anybody here get invited to any parties tonight....I didn't either, that's why I'm here."

The majority of the songs performed were love songs which were filled with emotion. Songs such as "Should Have Been Me" and "There Ain't No Good in Goodbye" talked of the sadness which often accompanies a relationship, while "Living On Love" talked of the happiness of being in love.

Inspiration for his music comes from many areas. "I set aside time when I'm just going to sit down and think of song ideas," Bird said, "and I treat it like a job. Sometimes I'll come across something interesting during the day and think it would be a good basis for a song, or somebody tells me something that happened to them, but usually I just make ideas up."

As a writer, Bird recently enjoyed Billboard chart status with his composition "Cold in July" as performed by artist Robert Lee. That song also reached number six on the Independent chart in Music Row Magazine.

Calling himself a "cosmopolitan kind of guy" Bird traveled all over the world with his father when he was growing up. Originally from Hawaii, he now considers Tennessee his home and does the majority of his writing there. "Writing in Tennessee gives me the opportunity to write a variety of music." This love for Tennessee is shown in the words from his song "Tennessee Skies" saying "it's so good to be home."

He is currently in the middle of a successful fall tour, after an overwhelming response to his showcase at the 1985 NACA College Circuit Spring Regional Conference. He also has a new album entitled "Michael Bird" which was released in October.

Bird's love of music is shown in his style, personality and overall exceptional performance. "I love performing" Bird said, "and my favorite part is being able to play something I've written." After experiencing his performance, it is obvious that Michael Bird is more than a songwriter and singer, he is truly an entertainer.

Creative arts journal holds contest for cash

Suzette Kramer
Arts Reporter

Once again the time has come for Stout's annual contest of literature and art. Prometheus is Stout's creative arts journal. Its purpose is to promote creativity through publication and cash prizes.

Anyone currently enrolled at UW-Stout is eligible to submit their works in the contest.

We look over all of the material and judge it closely.
Warren Lang
English Dept.

Categories include poetry, prose fiction, prose non-fiction, black and white photography, and black and white drawings and prints.

There are a few general rules for submitted works. For example, all photography must be black and white, and with the specified size limitations. All literary work must be typed. For all of the categories, no previously published material is eligible. There are, however, no limitations regarding subject choice or length of poems or prose.

The prizes for the top two entries in each of these categories are $25 and $50, with the exception of the drawings and prints. This category has three prizes, each of $50.

Dr. Warren Lang, staff member of the English department, has been in charge of Prometheus for the past five years. Generally, he has been pleased with the number of entries each year. The lowest category, however, is that of stories and prose. "Last year we received somewhere from eight to twelve stories. In the same year, over 100 poems were submitted, between 70 and 80 photographs, and a little more than 60 drawings and prints."

Prometheus originated "through the mist of the past," Lang said. "I'm not really sure where it came from. All I know is that it was previously called Termites, but we got together and changed the title to Prometheus a few years ago.

Prometheus consists of two parts: the contest and the journal. Works are submitted by students and a board of faculty members from the English and Art departments select the top two or three in each category. The winning materials are automatically published in the creative arts journal.

Next, the staff chooses other submitted material to be published in the creative arts journal. "We don't print everything we receive." Lang added. "We look over all of the material and judge it closely."

The creative arts journal is funded by the Stout Student Association (SSA). It is published once a year and is available, free of charge across campus.

All materials for Prometheus can be submitted to the Prometheus Office, Harvey Hall 143. The deadline is 5:00 p.m., Friday, January 24, 1986.

ABC - How to be a Zillionaire

Things should always be as easy as 1-2-3, but they're not. They're better! They're as easy as ABC, with their new LP release "How to be a Zillionaire."

The band mixes a zap of their own zany style with contemporary subjects to emit a sound brandishing a disco beat.

Although the beginning of side one made me feel a bit languid, from song three "Vanity Kills" all ill feelings disappeared. This tune is an excellent example of ABC's ability to coalesce techno/electric sound with a blizzard of modern day antics.

On through side one the tune "15 Story Halo" picks up beat and blurts "10, 20, 30, 40 fifteen story halo" - makes no sense but sounds fantastic.

ABC's most popular tune up to now, "Be Near Me" is actually a slower step tune to the rest of the album, but has gotten the most video and air play.

Proceeding to side two the listener is immersed in fun from the cut "(How to be a) Millionaire." We're talking this tune is hot! From nowhere this song freaks the mind with the dream of being rich, with a beat that just makes you want to dance.

The most effective lines in this song tell it how it is: "I've seen the truth, I can't afford it. To tell you the truth sir, someone just bought it. Larger than life, and twice as ugly. If we have to live there, you'll have to drug me."

A follow-up to this torrid tune is another, just as intense, musical creation "So Hip It Hurts."

The song goes on to say: "Afro wigs on albino squares, Polka dots on alpaca squares, Solar powered electric chairs, so hip it hurts."

All I can say is this band ABC caught me by surprise, my friends say give it a try and I gave it an A. ABC can do it and did with their release "How to be a Zillionaire."

P.S. Yes, I do have friends.

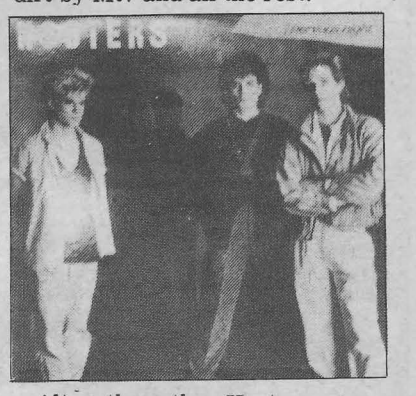
The Hooters - Nervous Nights

The Hooters entered the music scene with a hit and the release of their recent LP "Let Us All Down."

The general jist of the LP is definitely medium. They seem to have fallen into a trap of their own creativity.

Their central beat/theme is a bit boring and repetitious and the lyrics are lacking.

A highlight of the LP is the popular tune "All You Zombies." In itself the tune got played into the dirt by Mtv and all the rest.



Altogether the Hooters gave their best, but it just was not enough. Oh well, we can all look forward to more and hopefully better music from the Hooters.

The big cross country races are in November and so are the big changes in the weather as witnessed at the NAIA National Cross Country Championships at UW-Parkside last Saturday. After most of the teams ran the course the night before in the already soggy and muddy ground, rain showers persisted throughout the night on Friday leaving the five kilometer and eight kilometer course more muddy and more soggy.

According to Head Coach Lou Klitzke the weather conditions Saturday were typical of cross country nationals. "We trained for cold, wet, muddy conditions," Klitzke said.

The Stout women placed 18th out of the 33 teams competing from across the country. Klitzke felt it was a fitting end to a season of careful training. Last year the women placed 21st out of 31 teams at nationals.

Klitzke was pleased with how the freshmen ran. "Liz Lund and Leslie Drall showed grit and competitiveness. This was their finest performance. We can build a future of successful running on what they did at nationals Saturday," Klitzke said.

Senior Sue Meyer finished first for Stout at 48th overall out of a field of 300 runners. Coming in close behind was Senior Sheila Geere and Junior Ann Meyer at 61st and 62nd respectively. Lund followed at 86, Drall at 161, Senior Karen Schubert at 176 and Freshman Kris Klokow at 198.

The University of Portland won the national championship followed by UW-Eau Claire and Pacific Lutheran at third. Val Hilden of Pacific Luthern won the meet with a time of 18:53. Ann Manning of the University of Portland was close behind at 18:55. Kara Crisifulli of Willamette University in Oregon was third at 19:04.

Klitzke praised the team's performance and said it took discipline, desire and dedication at the national level of competition. "I am very proud of all seven of the women," Klitzke said.

Senior Captain Sheila Geere, who ran her last collegiate meet Saturday, said she was sad to see the season come to an end. "The national meet was fun and it was exciting to run in such adverse conditions. It is not often you get to 'swim' for three miles," Geere said.

According to Seniors Sue Meyer and Karen Schubert, also finishing up their collegiate running careers, the race was fun, sloppy and memorable. Meyer said, "It was hard to go back to nationals and run average compared to what I used to be, but I can't complain based on the course conditions."

Geere was happy with her team's performance. "Under the conditions it was impossible to get personal records. We were glad we improved over last year's standing and that we beat La Crosse who finished 20th."

Looking over the 1985 season, Klitzke said the women's team was a strange team of seniors and freshmen, with the exception of Ann Meyer, a junior. "Only two of the seven had enough pre-season running. Three didn't start running at all until practices started in August. Yet we had a successful season and that is a credit to these young women."

Freshman runner Liz Lund uses good footing to pass runners as she nears the finish of the 3.2 mile race. Lund was voted Rookie of the Year by her teammates.

Senior runner Sue Meyer widens her stride on the final downhill of the course. Meyer finished first for Stout at the national meet at UW-Parkside.

The Armchair Quarterback

Hoopsters face Division I

Tom Roth

Attention Blue Devil basketball fans. In regards to the 1985-86 Stout basketball schedule, there is no misprint in the men's first two non-conference road contests.

That's right, the Stout Blue Devils from Menomonie, Wis. will be traveling to Lincoln, Neb. to face the powerful Cornhuskers of Nebraska on Saturday night. The Cornhuskers from the Big Eight Conference that is. The same school that has the number two football team in the nation.

After facing the rugged Cornhuskers, the road schedule doesn't get any easier as the Blue Devils will travel to Dekalb, Ill. on Tuesday to face their second NCAA Division I opponent in four days, Northern Illionis University.

Stout Head Basketball Coach Dwain Mintz states three reasons for his NCAA Division III team squaring off with a couple of Division I schools. "Financial improvement, recruiting and motivating the team all play a role when it comes to scheduling a Division I school," Mintz, Stout's coach for the last 33 years, explained.

Mintz, who has over 200 more victories than any previous Blue Devil coach, must know what he's doing when it comes to scheduling Division I foes as Stout has played over 24 Division I teams since the early 1970's.

Last year Mintz took his Blue Devils out to Montana to face NCAA Division I opponent Montana University, only to lose a heartbreaker in the final seconds by two points.

To pull out an upset this year, the Blue Devils will have to play to the best of their abilty and hope a few breaks fall their way as Nebraska poses a well-rounded team that features an All-American candidate in 6-foot-11 center Dave Hoppen.

Hoppen, an All-Big Eight selection, avergaged over 23 points a game and connected on better than 64 percent of his shots from the field last year. Hoppen won't be the only Cornhusker the Blue Devils will have to worry about as they return three other starters from last year's team that qualified for the National Invitational Tournament.

"The secret in playing Division I teams is to control the tempo of the game and keep the score close so you have a shot at winning the game at the end," Mintz stressed. "You're always trying to win, but by just playing Division I teams you gain something from the experience."

Mintz expects Nebraska to be fired up for the game since it is their home opener. According to Mintz, the Blue Devils upperclassmen will most likely start in hopes that they will be able to handle the pressure the Cornhuskers throw at them in front of an expected crowd of around 10,000 fans.

If Stout gets out of Lincoln alive they'll have a young and feisty team waiting for them in Dekalb. Despite the fact that Northern Illinois' record was only 11-16 last year, they should give the Blue Devils all the problems possible with their versatile and tall team.

The Blue Devils' biggest task will be to keep the ball out of the hands of All-American Candidate, Sophomore Kenny Battle. Battle, 6-foot-6 forward, led the nation last year in freshman scoring with a 20.1 average. One of the most interesting statistics about Battle is that almost 25 percent of his field goals made were by dunk shots. Battle failed to score a dunk shot in only seven games last season.

Mintz and his Blue Devils will have their hands full in the next week. Things will slow up a little bit after Thanksgiving but not much as the WSUC is expected to be extremely strong this year.

Quarterback's Picks

Green Bay at L.A. Rams-Maybe the Pack is back one more time as the end of the season nears. The Rams are in a slump so the Packers are catching them at a perfect time. Green Bay by 7.

New Orleans at Minnesota-Early in the season you would have counted the Vikings game with the Saints as a sure win but as of lately the Vikings have not been too impressive. Bum Phillips is on his way out but that should not make too much difference in the outcome. Minnesota by 3.

Michigan State at Wisconsin-Lorenzo White and Michigan State should bring the Badgers back to reality after last week's stunning upset over Ohio State. White, the nation's leading rusher, and the Spartans running attack should just be too much for Wisconsin. Michigan State by 9.

Minnesota at Iowa-Win or lose the Gophers should be heading towards the Independence Bowl on Dec. 21 in Shreveport, La. On the other side of the coin the Hawkeyes will need a win to advance to the Rose Bowl. Iowa will be out for revenge after last year's defeat. Iowa by 13.

SMU at Arkansas-This game is almost meaningless as both SMU and Arkansas have been eliminated from the SWC championship race and Arkansas is headed to the Holiday Bowl while SMU will sit at home on probation. Arkansas by 3.

Baylor at Texas-A Cotton Bowl bid will be riding on this game when the two SWC rivals go at it on Saturday. The home field advantage should favor the Longhorns. Texas by 3.

Nebraska at Oklahoma-The winner of this long-time rivalry will most likely get a chance to tackle Penn State, the nation's number one team, in the Orange Bowl. I'll pick the underdog. Oklahoma by 1.

LSU at Notre Dame-If Gerry Faust has any chance at saving his job, he'll need to win his last two games, but that's not very likely as the Irish face Miami, Fla. in their season final. LSU is still shooting for a Sugar Bowl berth. LSU by 13.

Ohio State at Michigan-An especially big game for Ohio State if they want to have a shot at going to the Cotton Bowl. Win or lose the Wolverines will be headed to the Fiesta Bowl. Michigan by 7.

Penn State at Pittsburgh-The pressure will be on the Nittany Lions as they try to hold onto their number one ranking. This could be the upset of the year. Pittsburgh by 3.

Veteran hoopsters face tough schedule

Dwain Mintz, Head Coach of the UW-Stout men's basketball team, thinks that his corps of Blue Devil dribblers assemble into one of the best small school basketball teams in the nation.

Some fans will tend to disbelieve Mintz's confidence. How could Stout be the center of basketball excellence? Mintz obviously has a few screws loose. Right?

Preview

Last season the Blue Devil basketball team proved they could play with the best. They tied for third place in the WSUC with a 10-6 record, and posted a 16-12 record overall. Also, it was the first time in ten years that a Blue Devil team made the playoffs.

If this year's squad can accomplish what last year's team attained, then maybe Mintz hasn't been hit in the head with too many basketballs. Maybe Stout really is a talented, exciting basketball team.

This year's team should be exciting because many of last season's fantastic crop of players are back.

Although star forward Kurt Stellpflug graduated, this season's Blue Devil hoopsters hope to fill his hightops with superior court strength, coupled with years of college ball experience.

Senior Rick Stephan, a 6-foot-8 center, will be the starting big man for the Blue Devils. He averaged 6.8 points a game last season and was the third leading rebounder. Additionally Junior Tom Gomolak, also a 6-8 center, will see action under the boards.

"The fans are missing a terrific bet — good entertaining basketball from one of the best basketball teams in the nation.

Dwain Mintz
Head Coach"

Junior Mark Stevens will get the nod in the power forward position. At 6-7 he should be effective in the scoring department with his ample size and strength. Chuck Dugger, a 6-4 senior, will be the swing man, and fill the other forward slot. Also Rich Wynveen, 6-6 senior, Dave Sandstrom, 6-7 sophomore, and John Patterson, 6-4 junior, will play at the forward position. John Schmitt, a 6-3 freshman forward, will round out the squad of forwards.

Starting at one guard position this year will be 6-1 senior Glenn Fisher as the other gurad position is up for grabs now that Ron Hunter is no longer with the team.

Last season he led the team in assists and steals. Also vying for guard playing time will be 6-4 Junior Brian Ellingson, 6-foot Freshman Luther Forrest and 6-2 Freshman Mark Patterson.

Mintz commented that last year's team played better than everyone expected. "It will be difficult to repeat," he said. Also Mintz said that this year's team is not very fast, but he hopes the team's strength in defense and shooting will even this out.

"We don't really have a proven scorer, but we do have a lot of good experience, and this should make up for this."

"The whole league is tougher," Mintz said. "There will problably be a three-way toss-up for first place between UW-Whitewater, UW-Stevens Point and UW-Eau Claire." Mintz predicts that Stout will be fourth or fifth in the conference, right along side UW-La Crosse.

The Blue Devils' first test will be the NCAA Division I Cornhuskers of Nebraska on Saturday. It will be the first meeting between the Big Eight Conference Cornhuskers and the Blue Devils. The game will be played in Lincoln, Neb., probably in front of thousands of screaming fans. Mintz sees this as a golden opportunity for the Blue Devils, who haven't drawn huge crowds in the past. "The adrenaline really gets moving when there are people in the stands," Mintz said.

The first home game will be Saturday, Nov. 30, when the Blue Devils will challenge the Gustavus Adolphus Gusties. Their first conference game will be against 1984 NCAA Division III Champion Whitewater. Incidentally, last year's team beat the champion Warhawks twice in season play.

Mintz's greatest concern for this season is not that his team will play great, but if any fans will show up to cheer them on. "The fans are missing a terrific bet — good entertaining basketball from one of the best basketball teams in the nation," Mintz declared. "We need the motivation that fan support creates to win the close games."

Mintz's confidence is obvious. He thinks that this year's Blue Devil hoopsters will grasp great success. Perhaps the first opportunity for the fans to see the team will be Dec. 2, because most of the students and faculty will be away on Thanksgiving vacation for the first home game. Stout plays Northland College at 7:30 p.m. at Johnson Fieldhouse.

Lady hoopsters seek to top 2-win mark

Andy McDonough
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's basketball team hopes to start the season with a strong positive attitude that will carry through to the finish.

After a disappointing record of 2-20 last year, the team now has a new coach, Lynda Lee. Lee has just completed a successful season with the Lady Devils volleyball team. In her first year as head basketball coach at Stout, Lee is confident that the team will be able to improve on last year's performance.

"I see a lot of talent on the team," Lee said. "There are some who have a lot of determination which will hopefully encourage the others. I think that the players' attitudes last year were reflected in the results. I'm trying to breed positive attitudes in the girls this year as I feel it is so important."

Lee takes a very active part during practice sessions which, she says, is because of her love for the sport. "I try to keep a lot of intensity during practices and make them relatively competitive. I break down the drills into simple step-by-step movements," Lee added.

Lee's positive approach has encouraged the team members. Returning forward, Patti Cook, expressed her admiration of Lee's attitude and added, "Last year our talents weren't utilized. Everyone lost confidence in themselves as well as in the coach." Cook continued, "Lynda is a very good coach and knows her stuff. She enjoys the game as much as we do and knows how to achieve the balance between having fun and being serious. The players have a lot of respect for her and play hard. We have great confidence in her."

Cook was the second leading scorer in the conference last year and is one of the team's stronger players. She recently underwent surgery on a knee, however, and doesn't expect to play for at least three weeks.

"The knee feels pretty good now and is starting to move a little more," Cook said. "I plan on being ready to play in the first conference game against River Falls on Dec. 6. We want to win that one badly."

Another valuable player injured is returning center, Renee Kasten. Kasten sprained an ankle last week during practice.

"I hope to be back at practice in time for Saturday's opener against St. Benedicts," Kasten said.

Kasten was named All-Conference and All-American last year so her experience will be essential to the team's success. There are six returning veterans and Kasten said, "Last year we had players with a lot of natural ability and talent but we just couldn't put it together. This year the team doesn't have a lot of height but there are some quick players and good outside shooters."

The Lady Devils have been practicing for three weeks now. Lee hopes that Saturday's home game will magnify the areas that need to be worked on. Players mentioned as showing promise and good ability by Lee were Kasten, playing at post position, with Cari Mangelson alongside her.

"Mangelson is really determined and catches on well," Lee said. "She also has a lot of court sense."

Lee also feels Darlene Johnson and Lisa Bloom show good fundamentals as wing players and have definite intelligence on court. Freshman Sherita Brazil, playing at guard, was said to be "real quick" and a "good ball handler" by Lee. In addition, Mary Britts is strong inside at post and Janet Turowski is strong on defense.

Together with Kasten and Cook the Lady Devils have had four other injuries during pre-season practice. Brazil broke a finger and Britts, Fay Hovre and Jenny Hatch all sustained ankle sprains.

Assisting Lee as coach is Steve "The Dawg" Plenge. Plenge has coached basketball at St. Paul's Lutheran Grade School in Menomonie for the last two years and is a senior here at Stout.

"Steve is very supportive and has a lot of instinct when working with the girls on court," Lee said. "He can help them a lot as he is very dedicated." Patti Cook supports this and added, "Steve is eager to teach us and has a lot of enthusiasm. He assesses us individually and points out the areas we can improve on."

Plenge is pleased to have the opportunity to work with Lee. "I have a lot of respect for Lynda," he said. "She really knows her basketball. I like the way she works with the players. It is part of my responsibility to give encouragement to the players as well as assisting the coach."

The Lady Devils' first four conference games are at home. On Dec. 6 they will play UW-River Falls and on Dec. 7 they will play UW-Whitewater. This Saturday they play a non-conference game against St. Benedicts college at home beginning at 3 p.m.

As a final note Lee said, "We have a very young team with only two seniors and the rest freshmen. Realistically there may not be a great deal of improvement on last year but we will definitely improve. I am not looking for anything spectacular except to win more than two games — which I don't think will be very difficult."

Indians, sloppy field halt offense as gridders lose season finale, 10-3

The UW-Stout Blue Devil football squad closed out the season with a loss to the UW-La Crosse Indians 10-3 at Neslon Field last Saturday. The team was hurt by the continuous lack of offense.

The weather for the game was a cold 34 degrees with snow on the field. These conditions made both offenses look very sloppy. The Indians fumbled the ball ten times and the Blue Devils also fumbled the ball three times.

The Blue Devils' offense was given a lot of opportunities with the ball, but could only come up with 76 total yards. Most of these yards were from passing as the offense had a net gain of seven yards in 32 rushing attempts.

Chuck Carr received the opening kickoff at the 5-yard line and returned it 22 yards before being tackled at the Stout 27-yard line. The secon play of the game Chuck Carr ran the ball for a 11-yard gain before he fumbled. La Crosse recovered on the 38-yard line.

The Indians ran six plays before their kicker Joe Mirasola hit a 35-yard field goal. In the six plays La Crosse fumbled three times, but was able to recover the ball each time.

Glen Majzsak started as quarterback, returning after a shoulder injury. In the second drive Majzsak ran on third down, gaining 17 yards before fumbling. The ball was again recovered by the Indians.

The first quarter ended with Rob Teske punting for Stout. The ball was down at the La Crosse 18-yard line. The Indians rushed the ball ten times before Ted Pretasky ran for two yards and a touchdown for La Crosse. The touchdown increased La Crosse's lead to 10-0.

Stout's only score came after the defense recovered the Indians' fourth fumble on the La Crosse 42-yard line. The offense was able to move the ball 22 yards to set up a Todd Miles 37-yard field goal.

Rob Lindberg replaced Majzsak on the Blue Devils' third possession. Lindberg threw 27 passes completing seven for 69 yards. The longest pass was to Ron Wise for 18 yards. That set up the Miles field goal.

The second half was scoreless. The closest the Blue Devils came to the goal was the 13-yard line. Stout punted to La Crosse, but the ball was fumbled and recovered by Carr for the Blue Devils at the Indians' 28-yard line. An unsportsmanlike conduct penalty was called on La Crosse to give the Blue Devils another 15 yards.

The offense produced nothing and on third down Lindberg was sacked for a loss of 11 yards. Miles came in to attempt the 42-yard kick, but it was wide to the left.

The Blue Devil offense could not do anything with the ball against the Indians. The total offensive yardage was less than 100 yards. With such a poor performance the coaching staff did not award anyone the offensive player of the week.

The defensive player of the week was Brian Kellet. This is the second consecutive week Kellet has won this award. Brian had nine solo tackles, four assists, a quarterback sack, caused two fumbles and recovered two fumbles. "You could not ask a better game from anyone," said Defensive Coach Steve Terry. "Brian ended his career here at Stout like no one has ever before."

The Blue Devils finished the season with a record of 3-7-1 overall and 2-6 in the Wisconsin State University Conference. This is an improvement over last year's record of 2-9, but still leaves Stout second to last in the conference.

Several players where selected to be on the Wisconsin State University Conference football team. Seniors Keith Jurek and Todd Miles were selected for the WSUC first team. Brian Kellet and Scott Romenesko were selected for the WSUC second team.

The WSUC also gave five other players an honorable mention. The offense had three of these players, running back Chuck Carr, tight end Scott Stauffacher, and offensive guard Rich Rupp. The defensive players were defensive tackle Brandt Olsen and defensive back Steve Sandin.
